CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

95414

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME XXXIII.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1900.

VOLUME XXXIII, PART II

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

Mr. BENTON. I do not so understand.
Mr. HILL. Then it is useless to raise it to $250.
Mr. BENTON. I understand it to be $250 income.
Mr. HILL. Is it net income or gross income?
Mr. BENTON. I understand it to be gross income.
Mr. HILL. It seems to me the Pension Committee ought to scan that legislation carefully in order to see that it is beneficial in its results.
Mr. MAHON. The Commissioner of Pensions says that it means net income.
Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, a few words only in closing this debate. In reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, I will say that as I understand it has always been the rule of the Pension Department in deciding upon widows' claims to estimate the net income and not the gross income. In my judgment no other rule would be just or a reasonable construction of the law.
Mr. HILL. That is what I want to know.
Mr. BARNEY. And I understand that if the bill which has passed the Senate shall pass this House and become a law, providing for an increase of that limit of income to $250, that will relate also to net income and not to gross income.
Mr. RAY of New York. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. BARNEY. The law of June, 1890, under which widows receive pensions, provided that if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died or shall die leaving a widow without any other means of support than her daily labor, she shall have a pension of $8 a month.
The Pension Department, under that law, ruled, and I think every lawyer will say that the ruling was a reasonable construction of the law, that if the widow's income does not exceed the amount of a yearly pension—that is, $96—she can receive this pension, but that if it is more than that she can not. Now, a bill has recently passed the Senate increasing that limit to $250, and I trust it will very speedily pass this House and become a law. And I might say right here that the Pension Commissioner told us that he made his estimate for the fiscal year 1901 anticipatory of that law, providing a sufficient amount to pay the claims which would come in under and by virtue of that law. I hope that is a sufficient answer to the gentleman.
Now, Mr. Chairman, just a few words more, and we will close this debate. I must say that I am somewhat weary of hearing suggestions made here from time to time that the pension roll of the United States ought to be a roll of honor, thus at least insinuating that at present it is not. In my humble judgment, the pension roll of the United States to-day is and always has been a roll of honor, the grandest record of brave and patriotic soldiery that the world has ever known.
When we remember that there are nearly a million of names upon this roll, we will not wonder that a few unworthy names are placed there, but this latter class are so very few that they can not be said to affect the character of the whole; and there is no class more ready and willing to purge the roll of the few unworthy ones than the old veterans themselves.
Neither do I like to hear gentlemen upon this floor or elsewhere speak of pensions as gratuities and charities doled out by the Government to its old soldiers. No; these old veterans, whose heads are growing gray and whose shoulders are being bowed with the weight of years, reenforced by the privations and hardships of war, are not objects of charity!
They have earned, and honestly earned, as but few men in the history of the world ever earned money, every dollar which this nation is paying them in the way of pensions. Their services and sacrifices and the services and sacrifices of their comrades who fell upon the field of battle kept the stars upon our flag and preserved us as a nation, and we are only paying them a part of their honest dues when we appropriate this money.
Of all the millions of money which this Congress necessarily and very properly appropriates every year I do not think one appropriation contains less of fraud and more in proportion of money honestly earned and justly due than this pension appropriation bill.
That is all I desire to say, and if no other gentleman desires to be heard further in general debate, I call for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.
The bill was read at length.
Mr. BARNEY. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not think all the printed portion of this bill was read.
The CHAIRMAN. It has been read.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I find a portion of this bill which seems to be in a note. That is a portion of the bill, I understand?
Mr. BARNEY. Oh, no.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I do not understand the purpose of printing it in the bill.
Mr. BARNEY. It is for the information of the House, in order to show what the expenditures have been heretofore, but is no part of the bill.
The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6627), and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.
Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this amendment, which I think we will all agree to. I will have it read for information.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the consideration of an amendment, which will be read for the information of the House.
The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 2, page 3, after word "dollars," the following: "Provided, That the Commissioner of Pensions shall furnish all necessary blanks to claimants, and that said Commissioner may, in his discretion, refuse to pay the fee to attorney of record when he is satisfied that said attorney failed to prepare the case under his or her personal supervision and did not discharge his full duty to claimant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. BARNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that permission may be granted to those who have addressed the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD within five days.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who have addressed the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this bill may have leave to extend their remarks for five days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] desires to resign as a member of the Committee on Elections No. 2. Without objection, that request will be granted.
There was no objection.
The following committee assignments were announced:
Mr. SNODGRASS to the Committee on Elections No. 2.
Mr. GAYLE to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending a new light-house tender for use on the lower Mississippi River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Orange River, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from Hamilton & Colbert, transmitting the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator and Railway Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Adeline M. Willis against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Lytle A. Rather, administrator of estate of John Oswald, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.
A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, a draft of a bill relating to the erection of public buildings at Fort Dupont, Del.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 77); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5491) to amend section 4843 of the Revised Statutes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 78); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 101) requesting the Secretary of War to furnish correspondence and reports pertaining to proposed power canal projected by the Michigan-Lake Superior Power Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 79); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MUDD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 69) directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish information as to right and title by which any railroad corporation occupy and use Government grounds within the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 80); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5454) to purchase a painting of the several ships of the United States Navy known as the "Squadron of Evolution" and entitled "Peace," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 81); which said bill and report were referred to the Committe of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 404) to preserve the grave of Gen. Daniel Morgan and erect a monument over the same, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 82); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 50) granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 83); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. THROPP, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1605) for the relief of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 76); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5677) for the relief of Edward Tweed—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 6728) granting an increase of pension to Esek B. Chandler—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 6872) to print the label of the Allied Printing Trades on all publications of the Government—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 6873) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of site and erection of a public building thereon at Leadville, Colo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CAPRON: A bill (H. R. 6874) to create an additional life-saving district and authorizing certain changes in the serial numbers of existing districts—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: A bill (H. R. 6875) to authorize needed repairs of the graveled or macadamized road, and the replanting of trees, from the city of Fort Scott, Kans., to the national cemetery near said city—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNOX: A bill (H. R. 6876) providing for the transfer to Post 39, Grand Army of the Republic, certain guns now in possession of Battery C, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 6877) to amend section 3949 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 6878) to reduce the duty on printing paper to 2 per cent ad valorem—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 6879) to provide for the employment of women nurses in military hospitals of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H. R. 6880) to place on the free list all manufactured products where the articles may be controlled by trusts or combinations of capital—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EDDY: A bill (H. R. 6881) for the relief of settlers upon the lands within the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 6882) limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of, or work done for, the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 6883) to extend the laws relating to customs and internal revenue over the island of Puerto Rico ceded to the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRANTLEY: A bill (H. R. 6884) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Valdosta, Ga., and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 6956) to provide for the erection of a public building at Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 127) for the relief of Capt. Andrew Miller's company, of St. Genevieve, Mo.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 128) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain claims of the State of Indiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENRY C. SMITH: A resolution (H. Res. 102) to continue the employment of John Tate as page in the press gallery of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A resolution (H. Res. 103) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish House of Representatives with receipts from the war-revenue law of 1898—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEVY: A resolution (H. Res. 104) relative to the cost of the war with Spain—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: A resolution (H. Res. 105) relative to the sailors of the Spanish war having appointments in public offices—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. DALZELL: A resolution (H. Res. 106) relative to dams in the Ohio and Allegheny rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H. R. 6885) granting an increase of pension to Horace B. Durant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELLAMY: A bill (H. R. 6886) for the relief of John L. Cantwell, of Wilmington, N. C.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 6887) for the relief of John T. Phillips—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLAYTON of New York: A bill (H. R. 6888) to remove the charge of desertion against the name of Samuel Demby—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of R. H. Shropshire—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRAWFORD: A bill (H. R. 6890) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane L. Fagg, widow of Col. John A. Fagg—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 6891) to grant a pension to David S. Taylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6892) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Kate O. Phillips—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDDY: A bill (H. R. 6893) allowing Charles A. Moody and Albert Berg to commute their homestead entries—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 6894) granting pension to H. Myers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 6895) granting a pension to David L. Rathburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6896) granting a pension to Rachael E. Edwards—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6897) granting a pension to Eliza Power—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6898) for the relief of S. W. Fountain—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6899) granting a pension to Martin Essex—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 6900) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Kurtz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6901) removing charge of desertion from military record of Martin Mehaffey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEDGE: A bill (H. R. 6902) granting pension to Mrs. Lydia A. Tryon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 6903) for the relief of William Ludgate—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONG: A bill (H. R. 6904) granting an increase of pension to John L. Finley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6905) granting an increase of pension to Chauncey Bates—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEVY (by request): A bill (H. R. 6906) to amend the military record of James C. Howard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 6907) for the relief of Kate A. Hill—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6908) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen Hardin Walworth—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 6909) authorizing the Secretary of State to pay the claim of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, for compensation on account of expenses incurred in repairing its Manila-Hongkong and Manila-Capiz cables, which were cut by United States forces during the war with Spain—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. METCALF: A bill (H. R. 6910) granting a pension to John A. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MINOR: A bill (H. R. 6911) granting an increase of pension to James R. Sawtell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 6912) granting a pension to Joseph E. Hood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MULLER: A bill (H. R. 6913) for the relief of James Supple—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NEVILLE: A bill (H. R. 6914) granting a pension to Elliott Loomis, of Gibbon, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6915) granting a pension to William C. Wilson, of Kearney, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6916) granting a pension to Mary L. Underhill, of Brokenbow, Nebr.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 6917) for the relief of T. P. Salyer, of Lawrence County, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6918) for the relief of William G. Gardner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6919) granting an increase of pension to John Blanchard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6920) for the relief of William T. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIXEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 6921) granting an increase of pension to Gustav Reinecker, of Alexandria, Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6922) for the relief of F. M. Brabham—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Peter J. Osterhaus, a major-general in the Union Army in the late rebellion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 6924) granting a pension to Frances Marilla Buell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6925) granting an honorable discharge to G. G. Martin, late lieutenant-colonel First United States Colored Troops—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6926) granting pension to Orin A. Carpenter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDGELY: A bill (H. R. 6927) for the relief of Thomas Caldwell—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 6928) granting a pension to Philip Schrier—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 6929) granting an increase of pension to James G. Hartzell, of Golden, Colo.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6930) granting an increase of pension to James Stonehocker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6931) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Pitkin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCUDDER: A bill (H. R. 6932) for the relief of John G. Winckler—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: A bill (H. R. 6933) to pension Susan Jacobs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6934) to pension Priscilla Soule—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6935) to pension William W. Myers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: A bill (H. R. 6936) for the relief of Mary J. Maxey, widow of J. J. Maxey, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 6937) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter Baker—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THROPP: A bill (H. R. 6938) for the relief of the Society of the United Brethren in Christ, of Tyrone, Pa.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: A bill (H. R. 6939) correcting the military record of William H. Davis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WANGER: A bill (H. R. 6940) to remit the sentence of general court-martial against Franklin J. Myers, late private, Company C, Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 6941) to remove the charge of desertion from George W. Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6942) granting a pension to John W. Wallace—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6943) granting a pension to Martha Loveland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6944) granting a pension to M. A. Mullen, widow of the late D. A. Mullen, second lieutenant, Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6945) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Morse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6946) granting a pension to John A. Levens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6947) to grant Alonzo C. Rembaugh, late private, Company C, Seventy-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6948) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Henry Laddy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6949) to increase the pension of George D. Fitch, late assistant surgeon, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6950) granting a pension to Cornelia S. Sherve—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6951) for the relief of Jeremiah Eltz—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENTON: A bill (H. R. 6952) to pension Carrie P. Dale, widow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRANTLEY: A bill (H. R. 6953) for the removal of the charge of desertion now standing against Furman D. Lee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 6954) for the relief of Decatur Hamlin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 6955) granting a pension to Catharine A. Schwunger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of Hancock Command, No. 1, Union Veterans' Union, protesting against the passage of House bill No. 3899—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Resolutions of the Horse Breeders' Association of Missouri, in favor of the pure-food bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BELL: Petitions of post-office clerks at Canon City, Colo., and citizens of Grand Junction, Colo., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Olathe, Colo., against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. BROSIUS: Resolutions of farmers' institutes of New Holland, Quarryville, and Gap, Pa., and the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Lancaster, Pa., urging legislation in aid of American merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: Petition of Antonia Q. Lovell and others, for compensation for use of their real estate occupied by the Army, and evidence—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COWHERD: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of Decatur Hamlin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DALZELL: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to David S. Taylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Kate O. Phillips—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: Resolution of the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., in opposition to section 3 of House bill No. 5486—to the Committee on the Census.

Also, resolution of the Springfield, Mass., Board of Trade, favoring the passage of House bill No. 887, in the interest of manufacturing and commercial industries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GAMBLE: Petition of the employees of the Yankton, S. Dak., post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, evidence to accompany House bill No. 1944, for the relief of Eli C. Walton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Memorial of the New York Chamber of Commerce, in favor of the increase of coast artillery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the appointment of a commission to study and report upon the industrial and commercial conditions of China—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania: Petition of C. I. Miller and others, of Reading, Pa., against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Papers and amendment relating to House bill No. 6327, for the payment of certain claims of John Schierling, administrator of the estate of Gallus Kerchner, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of citizens of Meigs County, Ohio, in favor of rural free mail delivery—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, papers in support of House bill for the relief of Eliza Power—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Rachel E. Edwards—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill for the relief of David L. Rathbun—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill for the relief of S. W. Fountain—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Protests of citizens of Locust, churches of Volga City, and the faculty of Charles City College, all in the State of Iowa, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. HAWLEY: Petition of post-office clerks at Galveston, Tex., favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351, for the reclassification of postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KNOX: Papers to accompany House bill No. 5385, referring to the Court of Claims a certain claim for the use of hook attachments for firearms—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: Petitions of W. C. Cattell and others, of Wenonah, N. J., and James S. Fenton, of Pennsgrove, N. J., favoring the establishment of postal savings banks—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mary L. Underhill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDGELY: Resolutions adopted at a meeting of the mayor and councilmen of Baxter Springs, Kans.; Baxter Post, No. 123, Grand Army of the Republic, of Baxter Springs, and letter of Samuel H. Smith, for an appropriation for the improvement of a public highway from River street, Baxter Springs, to the national cemetery, west of the city—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Thomas Caldwell, praying reference of his war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIXEY: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to Gustav Rienecker, of Alexandria, Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Philip Schrier—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMALL: Petition of S. M. Beasley, of Carricut County, J. B. Etheridge, and many citizens of North Carolina, relating to surfmen of the United States life-saving station—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: Petition of Mary J. Maxey, widow of J. J. Maxey, deceased, for reference of war claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin: Resolutions of California Citrus Growers' Tariff Committee, against the reduction of tariff rates on citrus fruits as proposed in pending reciprocity treaties—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. THROPP: Papers to accompany House bill relating to the claim of the United Brethren Church of Christ, in Tyrone, Pa.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WRIGHT: Petitions of 12 railway postal clerks and 11 citizens of the Fifteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, to reclassify railway postal clerks and prescribe their salaries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of post-office clerks at Towanda, Pa., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: Petition of druggists of the Thirty-seventh Ward, Philadelphia, Pa., relating to the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 20, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1933. An act to provide an American register for the steam whaler Bowhead;

S. 255. An act to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in Idaho, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect; and

S. 1484. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone.

THE CASE OF BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS, REPRESENTATIVE FROM UTAH.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I present the report of the Special Committee on the Case of Brigham H. Roberts, together with a resolution pertaining thereto, and I give notice that I will call it up on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a privileged report on the case of Brigham H. Roberts, and gives notice that he will call the same up for consideration on Tuesday next. The Clerk will read the title of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, from the Special Committee on the Case of Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, presents the following report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be printed and placed upon the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to submit the views of the minority.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the report, with the views of the minority, be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed with the report of the majority. The gentleman from Ohio asks that 5,000 copies of the report of the majority and minority views be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. LACEY. I suggest to the gentleman if it would not be well to have the resolution and that of the minority, whatever it may be, printed in the RECORD?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I see no reason why that should not be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio and the House whether it would not be better to have the copies of the views of the majority and the minority printed and put in the folding room for distribution instead of the document room, so that they will be apportioned to members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of the majority and the views of the minority, and that the copies shall be distributed to members through the folding room of the House.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The following is the resolution in the majority report:

Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, ought not to have or hold a seat in the House of Representatives, and that the seat to which he was elected is hereby declared vacant.

ROBERT W. TAYLER.
CHARLES B. LANDIS.
PAGE MORRIS.
ROMEO H. FREER.
SMITH McPHERSON.
SAMUEL W. T. LANHAM.
ROBERT W. MIERS.

The following is the resolution submitted in the views of the minority:

Resolved, That Brigham H. Roberts, having been duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, with the qualifications requisite for admission to the House as such, is entitled, as a constitutional right, to take the oath of office prescribed for members-elect, his status as a polygamist, unlawfully cohabiting with plural wives, affording constitutional ground for expulsion, but not for exclusion from the House.

And if the House shall hold with us and swear in Mr. Roberts as a member, we shall, as soon as recognition can be had, offer a resolution to expel him as a polygamist, unlawfully cohabiting with plural wives.

C. E. LITTLEFIELD.
DAVID A. DE ARMOND.

ADMISSION OF SEÑOR ALFARO TO WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to say to members of the House that in these matters where requests are made for unanimous consent the House should be in order, so that all members may hear what the requests are and understand the matters proposed. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a resolution sent by the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Secretary of War, simply granting to the Republic of Ecuador the right to send a cadet to the Military Academy at West Point without expense to the Government of the United States, a courtesy that has been always granted to any republic asking for that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy, at West Point, Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby: And provided further, That in the case of the said Alfaro the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this is in the usual form?

Mr. HULL. It is in the usual form and in the form that the Secretary of State has always sent it to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I supposed it was.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it has ever been customary heretofore under such circumstances to make cadets take an oath that they will not take up arms against the Government of the United States.

Mr. HULL. I think there is nothing of that kind. It suspends the conditions of admission, and admits them as a friendly act to a neighboring Republic, and they can go back to their country absolutely free to serve their country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the States of Illinois and Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations in the Territory of Oklahoma, upon such a line as shall be determined and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations and a right to take and use a strip of land in each of said reservations 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, with the right to use such additional ground when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to the United States, from which the same shall have been taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been read. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving all rights, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if the bill has been reported from any committee?

Mr. HULL. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The Secretary of War reported that there could be no objection to its passage. The House some time ago passed a bill authorizing the right of way through the Territory of Oklahoma, and the road was constructed until it reached this reservation, when they found that the mere grant of way through a Territory covers no right of way through a military reservation, and they are held up for that reason.

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not do that. After a full hearing, the committee were unanimously in favor of it. It can do no possible harm.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

DRY DOCKS AT LEAGUE ISLAND AND MARE ISLAND.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1898, relating to the construction of dry docks, as modified by "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, are hereby further modified so that the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, contract for the construction of the dry docks at League Island, Pa., and at Mare Island, Cal., in addition to those at Boston, Mass., and Portsmouth, N. H., to be built of concrete and stone, and in such case the limit of cost of the dry docks for Mare Island, Cal., and League Island, Pa., is so far modified that the total additional increased cost for the two dry docks aforesaid shall not in the aggregate exceed $700,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope we may have order. In view of the fact that this is a request for unanimous consent, and involves a considerable sum of money, I should like an explanation of the reason for it.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will cease conversation and resume their seats. There is no more important duty for members than to watch these requests for unanimous consent, and order is absolutely essential to the discharge of that duty. The gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated, Mr. Speaker, that this being a request for unanimous consent, and involving the expenditure of quite a large sum of money, I think we ought to have some clear explanation of the necessity for the measure and some statement as to the necessity for passing it at this time. Why is it emergent? Why can it not wait until the regular course of legislation?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I will say for the benefit of the members of the House that the Senate bill is exactly in the language of a bill that has been considered by the Naval Committee of the House and reported to the House. The report is unanimous.

The urgency for this legislation is stated in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and I think I can, in a few words, show to the House the necessity for it.

The act of 1898 authorized the construction of four timber dry docks, but left it discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy to have one of those dry docks built of concrete and stone. He exercised that discretionary power, and selected the one to be located at Boston as the one to be constructed of concrete and stone. The appropriation bill for 1900 so far modified the act of 1898 as to give the Secretary of the Navy discretionary power to select one of the remaining three dry docks to be constructed of concrete and stone, and he selected the one to be located at Portsmouth, N. H., to be so constructed, leaving the other two, one located at League Island, Pa., and one to be located at Mare Island, Cal., to be constructed of timber rather than of concrete and stone.

It may be well to say to the members of the House that in the consideration given by the committee to this matter in 1898 they took extensive testimony and were unanimously of the opinion that concrete and stone dry docks were the best that could be built, but for reasons of economy considered that the timber dry docks were advisable. They were led to that conclusion from the facts submitted to them as to the relative cost of the two kinds of dry docks. They believed that a stone dry dock of the dimensions asked for would cost from a million and three-quarters to to two millions and a quarter of dollars. However, the facts of the case are that since then proposals have been asked for by the Secretary of the Navy, and the dry dock at Boston has been contracted for at a cost of $1,013,000, and the one at Portsmouth, N. H., has been contracted for at a cost of $1,089,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him when these wooden dry docks were ordered?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In 1898. The cost of these two stone dry docks will be $2,102,000, or about the amount that was supposed by the committee at that time to be necessary for the construction of one dry dock. The Secretary of the Navy, being compelled to follow out the instructions of the act of 1898, has submitted proposals and received bids for the construction of these two dry docks of timber, the one to be located at League Island and the other at Mare Island, but there is a clause in each contract which specifies that these dry docks may be changed from timber to concrete if the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to do so, and that no damage shall occur to the Government by virtue of that change, and no increased cost, except such as may be determined by a board of naval officers, three of whom shall be engineers. Now, these contracts having been entered into, the Secretary of the Navy being anxious that the change shall be made, and the Naval Committee, who have given this matter consideration, believing that it is for the best interests of the Government and the most economical, have asked that this legislation be passed in order that the change may be made, so as not to make any increased cost to the Government by virtue of the delay.

If any other information is desired, I shall be glad to furnish it. I might add that, believing some of the members might feel that there might be some cause for damage or expense to the Government by virtue of the contracts having been entered into, I have obtained and have in my possession a letter from the contractors, in answer to one that I sent to them, wherein they state that no work has been performed and no materials furnished for these contracts save such work and materials as would be necessary to enter into the construction of the docks whether they be built of timber or of stone, and hence no damage can come to the Government, nor do they ask for any compensation by virtue of the change, except so much as will come by reason of the change in the kind of material, from wood to concrete and stone.

Mr. FOSS. I should like to ask the gentleman to state, for the benefit of the House, the time within which this change in the contracts must be made. That would show the urgency of this legislation at this time.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This change is desired to be made before the 13th day of February next, and that is the necessity for this legislation now. While some of the members thought it best to let it come in on the regular appropriation bill, I can say that it will cost the Government no more, nor will the money be expended any sooner, by the passage of the resolution at this time. The only object of this legislation is to enable the Secretary of the Navy to make the changes and modify the contract so as to provide for building the dry docks of concrete and stone and to make that change before any delay shall be occasioned which will be a ground for expense or cost to the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I could not catch the gentleman's statement as to the additional expense which is to be imposed on the Government by reason of the change which the gentleman seeks.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No additional expense, except for the difference in the material furnished.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much is that? About how much is the increase in this expense by reason of this error or mistake in the Department, or in the legislation of 1898? How much additional expense is to be imposed on the Government by the change or modification now contemplated?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The limit of the increase of cost is $350,000. The original limit was $825,000. The present cost of the two stone dry docks already contracted for at Boston and at Portsmouth is $1,089,000 and $1,013,000, respectively. The dry docks at Portsmouth and Boston are of the same size and to be constructed in the same manner, but the less cost of the dry dock at Portsmouth is due to the fact that it is located nearer the quarries from which the stone is furnished; hence the cost of the delivery of the raw material is not so great. Now, these two contracts can not cost more than the limit fixed, and the increase in the limit is $350,000. The Department, however, believe that they can be built for $1,100,000 or less.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I understand the gentleman, this report now made is concurred in by the minority members of the committee as well as the majority.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is correct, and it is concurred in by the Senate committee and unanimously passed by the Senate.

Mr. DE VRIES. As I understand it, nothing has been expended by way of construction on the wooden docks, and therefore this change from wood to stone involves no loss in money whatsoever to the Government, because no damage has been done. It means simply an increase of expenditure to secure a better dock, without the loss of a cent to the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is to correct an error made, I suppose, by the Department, in 1898, in recommending wooden docks instead of stone docks. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill. I understand some gentlemen of the minority of the committee desire to give expression to their views when the measure is under consideration, but I imagine there will be no objection to considering it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know of the gentleman from New Jersey if he desires the consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Ought we not to vote to adopt the amendment to the bill before we proceed further? There is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would just say for the benefit of the gentleman from Kentucky, who is my colleague on the committee, that the Senate bill embodies the amendment made by the House committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The amendment agreed on in the committee?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is exactly the same. It is in the Senate bill, and it disposes of the legislation.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The Clerk in reading the bill read it as originally reported from the Senate, and then read it as amended in the Senate?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He may have read the House bill as amended in the committee. The Senate bill is the House bill as it was amended in the committee. I compared it, with my clerk.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill on the same subject lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent that the report from the House committee and a letter from the contractors be printed with my remarks in the RECORD, so that the facts may be fully known.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to supplement his remarks by the printing of the report and a certain letter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report and letter referred to are as follows:

DRY DOCKS AT LEAGUE ISLAND, PA., AND MARE ISLAND, CAL.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4026) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone, beg leave to submit the following report:

The Secretary of the Navy, urging the speedy consideration and passage of this bill, submitted the following:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks reports in relation to the proposed change of material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone, that the condition of the work under the contracts for these docks is such "that it would be practicable to make a change in the construction without modifying the work already done or involving any increase of cost because of the abandonment of the work already done. The change proposed in the bill (H. R. 4026) should be made because of the advantages to the Government of the construction contemplated. A dry dock constructed of stone and concrete is greatly superior to one of timber, because of its permanence."

Reporting further in the premises, the Chief of the Bureau referred to has submitted the following, viz:

"Dry docks built of timber are found by the Government's experience to be structures of a temporary character, requiring very extensive repairs after the lapse of a few years, and frequently these repairs amount to a reconstruction of the work, while dry docks of stone or concrete masonry are permanent structures, requiring very slight repairs. The frequent repairs to timber dry docks are very disadvantageous, because extensive repairs or renewals throw the dry dock out of use for long periods of time, which results in very great inconvenience to the naval service when, as at the present time, the number of dry docks in the Navy is very small, and particularly when the urgent need of their services, as in time of war, would render such unreliable dry docks intolerable. The experience of the Government has shown that while slight repairs to a timber dry dock can be made without serious interruption in their use, the extensive repairs which are inevitable after the lapse of comparatively few years take them out of service for docking vessels for long periods of time. The masonry dry docks, on the contrary, require very slight and infrequent repairs, and these do not take them out of service for docking ships. In only a single instance in the naval service has a masonry dry dock been thrown out of service for any considerable time on account of repairs.

"Again, the peculiar and dangerous failures to which large and deep timber dry docks such as used in the Navy are liable involve great risk to very costly vessels, and, indeed, in some instances to the lives of those employed in the docks. The timber becomes decayed, and the construction is such that its hold upon the earth, which is never great, is liable to be much lessened from the removal or loosening of the soil due to leakage, and both conspire to render its resistance to the hydrostatic pressure, which is always present, precarious. When failure occurs it is liable to involve vital parts of the structure and to be extensive in its limits, and therein lies the great danger of extensive and costly injury to the dock and to what it may contain. Risks of this kind are not inherent in masonry dry docks.

"While the first cost of a timber dry dock is much less than that of one of masonry, the ultimate cost is greater. To keep a timber dry dock in good repair and safe condition requires large outlays after the lapse of a few years, and almost complete renewal takes place before many have elapsed. The timber dry docks belonging to the Navy, of which we now have six, the oldest being only ten years of age, are proving to be very costly structures to maintain, far exceeding in this respect the masonry docks. In the past ten years the Navy has spent upon the four of its timber dry docks in use from four to ten years for current repairs to those portions distinctive of timber dry docks eight times as much as has been spent similarly upon its four masonry dry docks during the same period, and this comparison excludes the extraordinary repairs to timber dock No. 3 at the New York Navy-Yard, which failed immediately after its acceptance, and those of large extent in progress upon timber dock No. 2 at New York and upon the timber dock at League Island, Pa.

"The stone and concrete docks can be built in a period of time little greater than that consumed in constructing timber dry docks.

"Altogether, the superiority of masonry dry docks for the naval service over those of timber is so manifest in the matters of permanence, safety, cost, and readiness for service at all times, and so fully proven in its experience, that the Bureau strongly hopes that Congress will authorize the modification contemplated in this bill."

The Department concurs fully in the foregoing, and accordingly commends the bill to the favorable consideration of the committee. In this connection attention is invited to the views of the Department, as contained in my annual report to the President for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, page 38, on this subject, and to the extended remarks of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks thereon in his annual report to the Department for the same period, page 37 et seq. (marked copies herewith).

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Acting Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

In view of the above facts, and the further fact that the contracts for the building of these two dry docks contain a clause which permits the Government to change and modify the plans and specifications, as well as the contract, so that said dry docks shall be constructed as concrete and stone dry docks instead of as timber dry docks, without any loss or damage to the Government by reason of such change, and that such additional cost as may be allowed the contractor for the change of material used in such construction shall be determined by a board of officers, of whom at least three shall be civil engineers of the Navy, and approved by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, your committee recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment as follows:

On page 2, in line 5, after the word "not," insert the words "in the aggregate."

THE SHOREHAM,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1900.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter of January 17, making certain inquiries as to the status of the contracts for building dry docks for the Government at League Island, Pa., and at Mare Island, Cal., I have to say that the situation in regard to these contracts is substantially as indicated in your letter.

On the League Island dock at Philadelphia no work whatever has been commenced other than the delivery of some material, which material would be required in its construction even if it be changed to concrete and stone. This change from timber to masonry was contemplated when the contract was entered into, and a clause was inserted in the contract giving the Government the option of making the change in case the same was authorized by Congress, and fixing the value of the same by a board of Government engineers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, three of whom are to be civil engineers. Therefore the Government will sustain no loss by reason of this change.

In regard to the status of the Mare Island dock, no material has been delivered that will not be required in the dock, even if the change be made. Practically nothing has been done on the Mare Island dock except the excavation for the same, which would be required in any event. Therefore no loss will accrue by reason of this change. Neither will the changes in either instance cause any delay for which the Government will have to award the contractor any compensation, if the change is made without unreasonable delay.

Yours, respectfully,

ATLANTIC, GULF AND PACIFIC COMPANY,
By J. McMULLEN.

Hon. H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] withdraws his objection to the bill (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. I again ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to?

Mr. LENTZ. I may want to object. I reserve the right to object until I hear an explanation from the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this bill is supplementary to legislation had by the House and by Congress granting a right of way to the Rock Island Railroad through the Territory of Oklahoma. The Congress of the United States believed that they had given ample power to the road to construct this road through the entire Territory; but on the line of road there are two large military reservations, and the Secretary of War held that Congress had not given in the general law the right of way through those reservations, and that he could not give it except as authorized by the Congress of the United States.

The bill follows in its language substantially the same terms as originally the bill passed by Congress. It grants 100 feet right of way; it grants 300 feet where the stations are located. I want to say to the House that the right of way and the stations must be approved by the Secretary of War before they can locate the stations or locate their right of way. The War Department has reserved to itself the entire control of the road as it goes through these reservations, and the Secretary of War reported the bill back to us with the statement that there could be no objection to the passage of the bill. My idea is that it simply enables the people living on each side of these reservations to have a road built into their communities, and that Congress would gladly grant them that power. I yield a minute to my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. Will you wait a minute until the gentleman from Oklahoma makes a statement? And then, if necessary, I will yield for a question.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, it was always customary until last Congress, whenever a railroad desired to build through the Indian or Oklahoma Territory, there being so much of Indian reservations and allotments, to come to Congress for the right of way. These requests became so numerous—in fact, almost every morning unanimous consent was asked to pass some special right of way bill—that Congress took up the subject and passed a general bill which gave the authority to grant this right to the Interior Department, subject to such rules and regulations as they might make. I was unaware until this bill was introduced that the authority did not also include military reservations. Now, the situation out there is this: Here is a railroad that has built in my Territory during the last year probably a hundred miles of road. They are up against a military reservation, which they must traverse in order to reach the State of Texas.

The War Department holds that the general act—and I am confident that it was an oversight on the part of Congress—failed to confer authority on the Department officers to approve a right of way across a military reservation, and consequently there has been nothing left but to come to Congress and ask it to grant a right of way across that reservation. Now, I desire to say further that the custom until two years ago was to grant 300 feet right of way. Congress saw fit to cut that down and limited it to 100 feet, except at points where stations were located and where switches were necessary. There it was provided—and this bill follows that precedent exactly—that there should be a right of way of 300 feet; but before they can even take that, the matter must be passed upon, maps filed, and receive the approval, in addition to this act, of the Secretary of War. Now, if there is any question the gentleman desires to ask, I will yield to him.

Mr. SNODGRASS. When was this legislation passed that has been referred to?

Mr. FLYNN. In the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. SNODGRASS. What guaranties have we that this road will build this way if the right of way is granted?

Mr. HULL. It has already built to the reservation.

Mr. FLYNN. And when the road is built it will develop this country. There is no question but what they will build it if this bill is passed.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Have you any security that they will build it?

Mr. FLYNN. If they do not build it the people of the Territory are the losers. There is no doubt but that the road will be built if you give them the right of way.

Mr. CURTIS. The character of the road—the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific—is proof enough that they will build the road.

Mr. SNODGRASS. They may build the road, but I am opposed to granting these valuable privileges unless they can give some bond or security that the road will be built.

Mr. FLYNN. They have built as far as they can without this grant.

Mr. CURTIS. They never would come here and ask for the passage of this bill unless they intended to build the road.

Mr. HULL. There has never been a bond put up that a road would build if a right of way was granted. In this case the road has put up something of a bond by building the road up to the line of the reservation. They believed that they could build through the reservation under the general authority given them by Congress, but they were stopped at the reservation by the War Department. The War Department recommends us to pass this bill and give them the power to build through the reservation, after they have complied with the requirements of the Department by filing the maps and after they have received the approval of the Department on the lines adopted.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Is any power reserved in the Department to refuse to grant the privilege of building the road?

The SPEAKER (rapping for order). There is so much confusion on the floor that gentlemen can not be heard. Will gentlemen please take their seats?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was asking the gentleman if there was any regulations adopted by the Department that secured any guaranty that they would build and occupy the privilege that we are asked to grant.

Mr. FLYNN. All I can say is this: The fact that they are up to the reservation and have made arrangements to build through the adjacent district in Texas, the district of the gentleman who stands before me [Mr. STEPHENS], shows that a corporation like this would not ask for a right of way unless they intended to carry it out.

Mr. HULL. They could not hold it nor transfer it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Could they not hold it indefinitely?

Mr. CURTIS. No; there is a limit in the act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a limit in the general act?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object. This is a very important matter to my State.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why do you want to give them a right of way 300 feet wide?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because it is necessary where they are to put in stations and switches. It only gives 150 feet on each side of the center.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. How far does the right of way extend through the Government reservation?

Mr. HULL. I can not answer that, but about 3 miles, I am informed. It is only through the military reservation. All else is already granted.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Does it protect the interests of the Government in this reservation of 300 feet? Suppose they should strike a coal mine or a mine of gilsonite.

Mr. HULL. It does not give them 300 feet for a right of way, but only 100 feet, with 300 feet at stations, and gives the Secretary of War absolute control over it and a veto of the whole thing.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. It simply gives an easement over the Government land?

Mr. HULL. That is all, and provides that it reverts to the Government if it is not occupied.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to know something about the size of these two reservations.

Mr. HULL. I can not give it exactly.

Mr. FLYNN. One is 3 miles by 10, and the other I do not know the size of. In all these Indian reservations they reserved an area anywhere from about 2 miles square to 5 miles square for military posts when the Indians were bad down in that country. The only ones left are this one at Fort Sill and this one at Fort Reno. They are about 3 to 5 miles square.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to know a little more about this 300 feet wide right of way. It says not to exceed 3,000 feet in length. How many are there and why should they be 300 feet wide; why not 200 feet wide, and why should not the language be "not to exceed 3,000 feet in length," and why should not that be determined by the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL. It is all determined by the Secretary of War. If the gentleman will read lines 9 and 10 of the bill, he will see that it gives the Secretary of War absolute control of it. If you have no station on the reservation, there will only be 100 feet right of way. Stations may be necessary for the Government, and they may require it. There will probably be but one station.

Mr. LENTZ. I do not object to the station, but I would like to know how many stations they are going to put there.

Mr. HULL. There will probably be but one.

Mr. LENTZ. I should like to see the language of this bill. We have no copies of it.

Mr. FLYNN. All that I can say about this matter is from past experience——

Mr. LENTZ. Well, I shall object unless you show me the bill itself.

Mr. HULL. This bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman from Ohio is a member, and the reason he does not understand anything about the bill is because he did not attend the meeting of the committee. I stated to the Speaker that it has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Military Affairs, including every Democrat, and of every Republican on the committee. I did not intend to mislead the Speaker when I stated that.

Mr. LENTZ. I know the gentleman did not intend to mislead anybody, and it is not a political question.

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. LENTZ. But I want to know how many 3,000-foot strips you can get under this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Under the general law they are limited to one station in 8 miles.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt but what this is merely for the purpose of enabling them to construct railway stations at such convenient points as is usual in the building of a railway. There is nothing unusual in this matter.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to see what that limitation is. [After examining the bill.] Mr. Speaker, I have no further objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 52, to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, caused by the death of William Preston Johnston, of Louisiana, shall be filled by the appointment of Richard Olney, a resident of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I understand this is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. McCLEARY. Unanimously reported by the Library Committee.

Mr. HITT. And I will say to the gentleman that the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, as far as I have been able to consult them, are all desirous that this resolution pass immediately, as the annual meeting is approaching.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MICHIGAN-LAKE SUPERIOR POWER CANAL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House resolution No. 101, reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and calling for information from the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish to the House of Representatives all correspondence and reports now on file in the War Department pertaining to the proposed power canal projected by the Michigan-Lake Superior Power Company and intended to be constructed in the State of Michigan, from Lake Superior, above St. Marys Rapids, to a point below said rapids.

The resolution was agreed to.

CERTAIN CLAIMANTS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5493) for the relief of claimants having suits against the United States pending in the circuit and district courts of the United States affected by the act of June 27, 1898, amending the act of March 3, 1887.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no suit shall abate or be affected by the act of June 27, 1898, entitled "An act to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1887," which was pending in any circuit court of appeals, circuit or district court of the United States at the time of the passsage of said act; and all such suits which have been dismissed by reason of said act shall be restored to their places in such courts and proceeded with as if the same had not been enacted.

With the following amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary:

In line 7, after the word "any," insert the words "circuit court of appeals."

On page 2, in line 1, after the word "enacted," insert the words: "and time within which an appeal or writ of error may be taken or prosecuted in any case affected by this act is hereby extended six months from the passage hereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. We should like to hear a statement about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have an explanation from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and the necessity for the law is: In 1898 we passed a bill taking jurisdiction from the circuit and district courts of the United States of certain claims against the Government made by officers of the Government, and relegating all such claimants to the Court of Claims. In doing that we had no purpose to abate or discontinue pending suits where the claimants had already gone into court, filed their bills, and commenced their action, and in some cases had obtained judgment. In construing the law to which I have referred, the question was raised that the passage of the act relegating these claimants to the Court of Claims had the effect to abate and throw out of court actions then pending. There has been a diversity of holdings in the United States courts on this question. In some places it is held that these actions were abated and could not be further prosecuted, while in other circuits or districts it has been held that such actions were not abated under this act and that they can be prosecuted.

So, in some localities the claimants have been getting their judgments and in others they have been thrown out of court. This matter being brought to our attention and to the attention of the Attorney-General of the United States, he recommended this legislation, and all the members of the Judiciary Committee are united in the opinion that it was not intended that the amendment referred to should have the effect to abate suits which had already been commenced. The Attorney-General of the United States says that when he recommended the legislation he had no such purpose, and his letter is appended to the report of the committee, in which he favors this legislation. The Democrats and Republicans on the committee are united as to the necessity, propriety, and justice of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the bill been regularly reported?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, certainly, and the report has been printed and is now in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OFFICERS OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1040) to amend section 4445 of Title XII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the licensing of officers of steam vessels.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4445, of Title LII, of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"Every applicant for license as either master, mate, pilot, or engineer under the provisions of this title shall make and subscribe to an oath or affirmation, before one of the inspectors referred to in this title, to the truth of all the statements set forth in his application for such license.

"Any person who shall make or subscribe to any oath or affirmation authorized in this title and knowing the same to be false shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

"Every licensed, master, mate, pilot, or engineer who shall change, by addition, interpolation, or erasure of any kind, any certificate or license issued by any inspector or inspectors referred to in this title shall, for every such offense, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 and by imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding three years."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, we should like to have some explanation of the necessity for taking this bill up out of order. Why can not it wait its regular course?

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, this is unanimously reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The object sought is to correct an evil and a defect in the law as applied to those officers who must obtain licenses, like captains, mates, and engineers. The Treasury Department, under the provisions of existing law, provide a blank for each applicant to fill out and state therein his experience in his own particular line of duty. It has been found that a great many applicants for licenses fill out these blanks with false statements, claiming to have had a number of years' experience, when the truth is that no such experience has been had. We are unable at present to reach the offenders, for the reason that the inspectors of steamships have never been vested with the power to administer that kind of an oath.

Now, we desire to invest the inspectors with that power and then to punish the violators of that law, because, as the gentleman from Tennessee will understand, the value of the services of these applicants for licenses depends largely on the experience of the men applying for them. If a man has not had the experience that is set forth in his application, then he ought not to be licensed and can not be, under the law.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MINOR. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. This provision is applicable to the rivers of the United States as well as to other navigable waters, is it not?

Mr. MINOR. So far as pilots and engineers are licensed by the Federal Government.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Now, does not the gentleman think the penalty prescribed for misstating the facts in regard to one's experience is somewhat severe? Permit me to call your attention to the fact that on some of the rivers of the United States it requires no very high degree of intelligence to act as pilot or engineer. On some of the rivers of the country men are accustomed to ply those rivers with limited experience as pilots and engineers in charge of very small craft; and to prescribe a maximum penalty of three years in prison and a maximum fine of $500 is a little severe. I happen to know something about that class of citizens, living in a large river district, and I do not think that you ought to send a man to the penitentiary for a mere misstatement of facts. It occurs to me that the penalty is too severe.

Mr. MINOR. The penalty ought to be severe. But in reply to your question, I would say this, that in my judgment it is a grave offense for an applicant for this license, for the purpose of procuring such a license, to go before the inspector of steamboats and make an affidavit to a complete falsehood, and then, securing the license, and his employer having confidence in his ability, which confidence is based upon his statement of experience, puts in his charge hundreds of precious lives that go down on the rivers as well as on the lakes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Just a moment, if you please. Does not the gentleman understand that often small craft, tugs and boats with a very small amount of steam pressure, do not require men of much ability as pilots and engineers, who will not be permitted to have a license if they carry passengers at all, and they may ply up one of these small rivers only 50 or 75 miles, and have very few passengers?

Mr. HULL. If he only plies a short distance, would he need a license at all?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Every man has to have a license to carry passengers at all; and I will say to the gentleman, if he lives in a district where there are large rivers, he knows that there are hundreds of little craft plying short distances that do not carry more than 50 passengers in a year.

Mr. MINOR. I would say that I have no doubt that the punishment would be imposed in accordance with the gravity of the offense.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I have practiced too much before Federal courts not to know what granting such power means.

Mr. MINOR. It has come to the attention of the Inspector-General, whose letter I have, that there are many such cases, and he condemns them and recommends the passage of this bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I believe in the merits of the bill, but the penalty is too severe.

Mr. MINOR. The Law Department of this Government recommends it. There is absolutely no opposition to this bill from one end of the United States to the other. In my judgment, it ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I object, unless the gentleman will consent to an amendment reducing the penalty.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LYNCHING AND MOB VIOLENCE.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a petition of 2,413 names of citizens of the United States, asking for national legislation against the crime of lynching and mob violence. I ask that the heading of the petition be read and that, accompanied by the bill I have drafted, it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that the heading of the petition be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the heading of a petition against lynching be read. The Chair will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that he has the right to introduce the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it ought to take the regular course of all other petitions and memorials.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SPIGHT indefinitely, on account of important business.

THE LATE HON. LORENZO DANFORD.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, the time set by the special order for memorial services on the death of the late Mr. DANFORD, of Ohio.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for paying tributes to the memory of Hon. LORENZO DANFORD, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Ordered, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker, it is in the presence of death and in the contemplation of his handiwork that the kinship of all humanity is most forcibly manifest to every thoughtful mind. Can it be other than a useful and humanizing experience to all that live to thus receive a new and most emphatic impress of the great truth of the brotherhood of man? The divine laws of kindness and of charity can not be too often freshened up in our hearts, and their timely exercise toward the living, both as an opportunity and as an obligation, should be earnestly resolved upon each time that we pay our loving and tearful tributes to the revered but unresponsive dead.

At such times the thoughts of the exalted should tend toward humility, and the lowly may lift his head to a higher level in the absolute assurance of a universal ultimate equality. For though the carved marble and the laurel wreath may be placed, and justly, over one, and the modest slab and a solitary flower may be the only mark that love can give to the resting place of another, yet beneath the token of remembrance in either case the silent lips, the pulseless heart, and the rigid clay are in every essential identical. Both, as they lie there prostrate, have been stripped of every possession, whether material, intellectual, or spiritual, and to neither is there anything left beyond the equal hope of a common resurrection morning. Surely some such thought as this justifies the poet when he exclaims:

O fading honors of the dead!
O high ambitions, lowly laid!

The full consciousness of this thought is borne in upon us in a striking manner if we but pause an instant to consider the sad havoc wrought by the fell destroyer during the past year in the ranks of those who have won fame in widely different walks of life. By so doing we can learn afresh the truth that the great Leveler grants no favors, but that high and low, rich and poor, youth and age, alike must obey the summons to that "unknown silent shore." Thus, even he who held the great office of Vice-President of the United States was not exempt from the chilling blast, and when the genial Hobart heard the summons, "Weary wanderer, come," he was, notwithstanding the showering tears of a nation bereaved, laid away in the bosom of our common mother earth, with the throng of undistinguished dead, to sleep the same dreamless sleep.

This House can not escape the universal experience, and to-day the work of legislation halts once again to permit the performance of the sad duty of paying our tributes of honor and respect to the memory of yet another of its members who has passed away in the last year.

Were it not that LORENZO DANFORD was my immediate predecessor as the Representative of my district on this floor, I would prefer to sit silent and listen to others more able to speak in fitting language of my dear and honored friend; but conscious as I am of the exalted place he held in the hearts of the people whom I have the honor to represent, I should, even in the absence of the custom of this House calling for my participation in the proceedings of this hour, feel that I had disregarded their wishes should I permit this occasion to pass without attempting to give expression to their high appreciation of his character and their love for his memory.

Not in years has a sorrow so universal pervaded the homes of the Sixteenth district of Ohio as that which followed the announcement on June 19, 1899, that LORENZO DANFORD was dead. Everywhere throughout the district the news came as a stroke of personal sorrow to all, and on the streets, in the factories, on the farms, and wherever men are wont to congregate were heard mingled expressions of keenest sorrow and regret. When I recall the faces of his friends shadowed o'er with thoughts of parting and the eloquent tears that sprang unbidden to the eye, I am reminded that no poor sentiment of mine can thrill the chords of love with such majesty and power as did his simple story, for each could say:

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Born on a farm in Washington Township, Belmont County, Ohio, October 18, 1829, he was fortunate in living through the most magnificent period of opportunity which the history of this nation presents. Breathing the free air of country life and intellectually expanding under the educational influences of his teachers and the ready knowledge of his father, he was soon able to comprehend the fateful trend of the political movements of the times and to intelligently play his part in the great drama of human affairs.

Beginning at the period of his majority, a time of great activity had set in along all lines of progress, not only in the sphere of politics, but also in the field of industrial advancement. Territorial acquisitions had extended the boundaries of our nation from ocean to ocean; property qualifications had been superseded by manhood suffrage; the isolated settler, in his humble cottage, was now the peer of any in the land; canals had brought the West into closer connection with the East and opened the markets for the surplus products of the farms; the Mexican war fired his youthful blood with martial valor, while the great discussion over slavery thrilled his soul with freedom's highest and noblest impulses.

He received a common-school education; attended college at Waynesburg, Pa., for two years, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. The people of his native county early recognized the characteristics which later were to carry him to higher positions of activity and responsibility by choosing him successively in 1857 and 1859 as prosecuting attorney; but ere his second term had expired, vehement discussion of the burning question of that hour had given way to a passionate appeal to the arbitrament of force, and the booming cannon heralded the first act in history's greatest tragedy.

In that hour of his country's peril he did not hesitate to sacrifice all upon its altar, and resigning his office, he enlisted for three months as private in the Seventeenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Upon the expiration of his service he returned home and assisted in raising a company of the Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which he was chosen second lieutenant, and later was promoted for bravery upon the field of battle to be first lieutenant and captain. He was one of the nation's heroes who sustained his country's honor upon the bloody fields of Shiloh, Stones River, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, and many others.

Owing to failing health he resigned his commission in 1864 and returned to his native county. The sterling qualities which had so successfully carried him through his early career were manifest in the richer and more conspicuous triumphs of his later years. Devoting himself assiduously to the practice of law, he soon became the leading advocate of the eastern Ohio bar, and step by step won the esteem and confidence not only of the people but also of his professional brethren. He was eminently fitted for forensic triumphs, and was in a most remarkable degree successful in obtaining favorable decisions in his jury cases.

Tall and graceful, with keen eye and massive head, a commanding presence and a most musical voice, he was an orator who carried conviction to the minds of his hearers, his clear logic and burning eloquence often enabling him to sway his auditors at will. Nor was this power exerted in the court room alone, for he was one of the most forceful and pleasing speakers who ever graced the political forum of his native State, and even in this Hall he has won notable triumphs in the arena of debate, of which, and of other details of his work in Congress, his friends and associates still serving here are in a position to speak more fully and satisfactorily than I can.

In 1864 he was a member of the electoral college of Ohio, and in 1892 he was again a member and president of same. In 1872 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from the Sixteenth Ohio district, and his personal popularity was so great that he was successful in his campaign over the intrepid and eloquent John A. Bingham, who enjoyed a national reputation as a brilliant statesman and scholar. Although the task before him was difficult, yet so well did he perform the arduous duties of his new trust that the people ratified the choice of that convention by reelecting him to Congress in 1874 and again in 1876.

Retiring from political life in 1879, he resumed the practice of law. His reputation as a powerful advocate was so well established that hardly a case of any importance was tried in his native county upon which he was not employed as attorney for one side or the other. Although in many heated contests, he never took an unfair advantage of a witness or an opponent, for, although intellectually combative and persistent in opposition, he was always generous to an adversary, and the kindness of his disposition was never more apparent than in the skill which he displayed in eliciting needed information. Always alert, active, and forceful in behalf of a client, his high sense of honor prevented him from falling into the tricks of a mere pettifogger, and he was consequently respected and admired even by his bitterest opponent. Just and dignified in his demeanor, he was a man of warm impulses, and his generous heart was large enough to carry within its sympathies all classes of men. To those who knew him well he was unassuming and confiding, and he was at all times absolutely steadfast in his friendships.

Reentering politics in 1894, he became a candidate for Congress, and after a heated contest was nominated for that high position and elected by a large majority. Appointed by Speaker Reed chairman of the Immigration Committee, he displayed unusual breadth and ability in the discussions arising out of the intricate and difficult problems coming within the scope of the work of that committee. He was reelected in 1896 and in 1898, but ere the Fifty-sixth Congress began its labors his spirit had taken its flight to the God who gave it.

In 1858 he was married to Annie H. Cook, of Jefferson County, and as a result of this union three sons were born—William, John, and Thomas—the first and last of whom still survive. His wife dying in 1867, he was again married in 1870 to Mary M. Allen, their only child being Carrie Lee, now a nurse in the Philippine Islands.

The proximate cause of his death was the exposure to which he was subjected in attending the funeral of his father, Samuel Danford, and his constitution, already weakened by disease, was unable to withstand the insidious attacks of la grippe which followed. Though he fought in the sick room with the same vim and determination he had always displayed, yet slowly but surely the tide of his life ebbed away. Surrounded by kind and sympathetic friends who forestalled his every wish, his mind wandered again to the scenes of his childhood, and he longed for the hills and vales, the simplicity and purity of country life.

Loving hands removed him to the home of his cousin, John Sidebottom, a few miles from his own home, at St. Clairsville, where, surrounded by peace and plenty, and subject to the gentle ministrations of his devoted daughter, Carrie Lee, the hourglass slowly ran its course, with hope freshening as renewed strength seemed to summon back the old fire and vigor, and anon giving way to despair, as the hectic flush faded, leaving the patient weaker than before, until at last, on a beautiful day in June, the morning sunrise seemed to flood his countenance with a strange, new light, and ere the evening shadows gathered Death's finger touched him and he fell asleep.

To describe him whom we honor to-day as merely an ordinary man would be to do his memory a great injustice; to say that he was a very great man, as that term is generally understood, would be fulsome flattery; but measured by the standard of purposes well and earnestly accomplished Captain DANFORD was truly great, for by faithful and honorable conduct in public and private life he won the confidence, esteem, and love of those who knew him best, and in their hearts his name will ever be written, like Abou Ben Adhem, as one who loved his fellow-man.

Mr. DANFORD was a man of action as well as a man of thought, and having that valuable possession generally termed "good common sense," he was clear and practical in his views of affairs, and it was needless to be in doubt as to his position upon any public question. He was frank in all that he did. He was faithful in every sphere of life, public as well as private, and whether as soldier or as civilian fidelity to his duty always characterized his conduct. He was a patriot in the best and broadest sense of that term, intensely loyal to his country. He loved the Republic because it meant a sovereignty under organized law, able and ready to give back to its citizens a full return for all services demanded of them—"a republic with iron in its blood."

He loved his country for its devotion to human rights and its adherence to every pledge of public faith, and he gloried in its onward march of freedom and in its progressive spirit. He had unlimited faith in its imperishable vitality, power, and purpose to protect and rule the American Continent. Mr. Speaker, our friend lives in all that is deathless; the physical body is laid away under the sod of the valley, but those qualities of soul which manifested themselves in devotion to God and country, in kindness and love to neighbors and friends, and in fidelity to truth and honesty of purpose in life, will bear his memory upon the bosom of everlasting remembrance. There is so much to be said that is good of him, and with such justice, that I feel entirely free to say that I do not wish to be understood as claiming that he was a perfect man.

Being only mortal, he had, like all of us, many faults, toward which he was even more severe than his most censorious critic; but when we think of the superabundance of his many virtues, all else melts away into insignificance.

It is also to be said that there was a sad minor strain of sorrow running through his life which brought to him a degree of suffering that at times gave his face that tenderly pathetic look which is born of irremediable heartache; but he complained not, and bore his cross manfully. Truly, in this, it must be admitted, there was after all nothing so very exceptional; for where is the life that is ideal, or in which the stream of happiness or even of satisfaction flows smoothly without the murmering rapids or even the thundering cataract at some point?

And here, not alone in contemplation of the facts in the life of Captain DANFORD, but referring to what I am sure is the too common experience of most mortals as to the painful contrast between the prospect and the retrospect of this life, I will venture to recall a vivid word picture by an eloquent tongue, in which there is very much of consolation to soften its somber shadows. He says:

> The loves and friendships of individuals partaking of the frail character of human life are brief and uncertain. The experiences of human life may be shortly summed up: A little loving and a good deal of sorrowing; some bright hopes and many bitter disappointments; some gorgeous Thursdays, when the skies are bright and the heavens blue, when Providence, bending over us in blessing, glads the heart almost to madness; many dismal Fridays, when the smoke of torment beclouds the mind and undying sorrows gnaw upon the heart; some high ambitions and many Waterloo defeats, until the heart becomes like the charnel house, filled with dead affections, embalmed in holy but sorrowful memories; and then the cord is loosened, the golden bowl is broken, the individual life—a cloud, a vapor—passeth away.

As Captain DANFORD sank into his last sleep some one inquired as to his comfort, and he replied, "All is well." Let us believe that at the dawning of the morning in the New Jerusalem he found a richer, fuller realization of his words than earth could give and was able to say, with Longfellow:

> There is no death! What seems so is transition;
> This life of mortal breath
> Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
> Whose portal we call Death.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, it was not my fortune to know LORENZO DANFORD before he became a member of this House, so that I did not have that intimate personal acquaintance with him which would justify me in making any extended remarks on this occasion. I would say, however, that in some of the work here, and especially the work which he as a member was most interested in, I was closely associated with him. He was chairman of the Committee on Immigration, of which I was a member, and I had occasion in the work of that committee to know him somewhat intimately, and especially to know something of the way in which he performed his public duty.

I was impressed with the great care and conscientiousness with which he did his work. He was, as members know, a firm believer in the policy of restricting immigration. He gave a great deal of his time while a member of this House and a great deal of ability as well to that single subject; he made the most elaborate preparation upon it, and it was an occasion of sorrow to him that he did not finally secure the passage of the bill he had so long advocated. His successor in this body has feelingly alluded to the sorrow which he appeared to have suffered. Very likely he had his full share, but he showed no sign of being consumed with vain regret over what had gone by, but he kept his face turned manfully toward the future, and did his utmost upon each new condition and to solve each new problem as it arose. He was an able and devoted Representative and a true friend, and in the presence of those who knew him well, and especially the members from the great State which he served and which he loved, I wish to add my word and pay my tribute to his worth and to his memory.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I shall undertake no eulogium upon the life and career of my dead colleague, but I want to leave upon the record a few words in remembrance of an old friend.

The statesmen of Ohio naturally divide into two classes and into two periods—those who precede and those who follow the days which marked Garfield's greatest fame. To this observation one exception should be noted. John Sherman belonged to both of these periods. His public career was respectable before Corwin's brilliant sun went toward its setting, and it was national and distinguished before the first gun of the civil war was fired, and in the end as it was longer so was it greater than that of any Ohioan. In practical statesmanship and in constructing legislation John Sherman has no peer among Ohio statesmen, living or dead.

In the days preceding Garfield, with one exception, John A. Bingham was the greatest orator Ohio had produced. Yet, when this great man was in full possession of his resplendent powers, "while his shadow still was falling toward the west," the people of his district took from him his seat in this House and gave it to LORENZO DANFORD. No ordinary man could have wrested from this old commoner of Ohio his seat in Congress.

When Captain DANFORD was first elected to Congress he was in the meridian of a splendid physical and mental manhood. His people had been contributing to the public service such men as Stanton and Stanbery and Bingham, and with these men was he measured and weighed. Those of us who knew him best as he was in his latter service here, somewhat burdened with years, his physical and mental strength weakened by infirmities, and the gloom of a constitutional melancholy thickening toward the end, can but little appreciate the strength and virility of the man during his service with such parliamentary giants as Blaine and Garfield and Hill and Randolph Tucker.

Mr. DANFORD'S experience has been duplicated hundreds, perhaps thousands, of times in the history of this body. He had many of the elements of greatness, and had his service been continuous, and a public career the concentrated and consecrated purpose of his life, he would have taken high rank in the House, but he was a lawyer, the profession his sure and certain staff; office was secondary or incidental. With him, as in all such cases, and they are the rule, his professional achievements were modified by his public career and his public career interrupted by the demands of his profession.

If I could extract from his combination of qualities the predominant one, I would say that it was his modesty. He shrank from making himself conspicuous, and it was only in the discharge of duty that he put himself in positions attracting attention or notice. Modesty has spoiled many a career and doomed many men of talent and aptitude to obscurity. But after all this quality in public men has its compensations. It escapes notoriety, which is worse than obscurity; against it the javelins of envy are seldom thrown; it escapes jealousy's poisoned fangs, and when life's fitful fever has burned out it rests as well and sleeps as sound as the head that has worn a crown.

I remember well the first time I saw LORENZO DANFORD; it was back in the seventies and among his old comrades of the Fifteenth Ohio. It was at a camp fire, and there he was at his best. I recall him now as he was then, strong, rugged, standing firmly upon the ground, perfectly at home among the men who had endured with him the dangers and hardships of war, my ideal of a citizen soldier, and, withal, in referring to those who had succumbed to the hurricane of battle, as tender as a mother.

He was modest even about his service in the civil war, long and distinguished as it was. I have talked to him many times about it—about his regiment, many of whose soldiers went from my district—and the only thing I now recall about it all with which he connected himself conspicuously was his paternal care and watchfulness over a younger brother who was in his command.

With a father's care and affection he shielded this young brother from the rude blasts of war; and when we are weighed and the credit given for balances, it will not be our performances in the larger sphere and more conspicuous relations of public life which will weigh most to our advantage or discomfiture, but rather in the narrow circle of family and friendship will the reckoning be made.

Mr. DANFORD was an eminent lawyer at the Ohio bar and in his section. When politics or public duty did not subtract from his professional efforts, he commanded one side or the other of every important case. He had a rugged, homely way of stating propositions of law and fact, and, with a reputation for honesty and candor, at a country bar and before country juries he won his cases, which, after all, is the best measure and test of the success or failure of a professional career.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not dwell upon my colleague as a statesman, a lawyer, or a public man.

I knew him best in the relations of friendship, and as a friend I pay his memory this modest tribute; I lay upon his grave a flower of remembrance.

[Mr. WEAVER addressed the House. See Appendix.]
[Mr. LYBRAND addressed the House. See Appendix.]
[Mr. VAN VOORHIS addressed the House. See Appendix.]
[Mr. BROWN addressed the House. See Appendix.]
[Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I will couple with that a request that all members of the House who speak on this occasion may have authority to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDDY). The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he and others who address the House on this occasion may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would be unmindful of the obligation imposed by a long acquaintance with LORENZO DANFORD, and of the high regard which I entertained and often expressed of his character and ability, if I did not take this opportunity to bear public testimony to that regard. The eminence of his early career at the bar and his effective and patriotic services as a soldier during the civil war brought him prominence and reputation among the people of Ohio many years ago, and that prominence and that reputation were emphasized and taken into a larger field by his election to Congress in 1872. We honor him because he deserves to be honored. He was honest as the sun; as free from cant or buncombe or hypocrisy as an absolutely simple, straightforward, and fearless character could possibly be.

I think, with my colleague [Mr. KERR], that his most engaging and conspicuous characteristic was his modesty. I never knew a man who had been so successful in everything he undertook, and who possessed in so large degree the capacity of bringing success in this body, who was so utterly lost to any sense of vanity or self-seeking or pushing himself into prominence. He was essentially, and like a youth or a girl, modest and simple. He wasted neither words nor action. He always aimed at the heart of the controversy and always reached it.

The years, full of usefulness and honor, came to him, and he died after a life well spent, mourned by all who knew him, and entered into a well-deserved rest, leaving behind him a legacy of good will and good deeds which will long survive.

[Mr. LENTZ addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is well that we should pause amid the exciting scenes of legislative action to thus pay tribute to the memory of one who but lately mingled with us in the conduct of affairs, whose voice was so recently heard in this Chamber, and whose wise counsels aided in the deliberations of Congress.

We are told that man was made in the image and likeness of the Almighty, and, sir, the man whose memory we cherish to-day exemplified in his spirit and in his life that man may be godlike.

My personal acquaintance with LORENZO DANFORD was not intimate nor my association with him extended, but my knowledge of his public life and of his private character has come to me through a long series of years, beginning a third of a century ago on the battlefield of Stone River, where he performed a hero's part in the discharge of his duty. From that time I have followed his career with admiring gaze. No man living in the State of Ohio and caring to know aught of its public men could remain ignorant of the valor, the ability, the virtues, and the beautiful life of LORENZO DANFORD. Soon after the close of the civil war I met him in the congregation of the boys who had been in the field; and although I then was young and he in the prime of his young manhood, knowing so well that he was one who had distinguished himself in the cause of his country and defense of its honor, I gave him my profoundest respect, if not my love.

Later in life my association with him was always in the field of political contention, and I was not often permitted to meet him save when the air was charged even to bitterness with partisan feeling, but I always found in him an honest advocate for what he believed to be right. I always found him not only able and courageous, but always absolutely fair and courteous; and although in our political discussions we differed, yet when we closed I never did, and no man ever could, leave LORENZO DANFORD without respect for and admiration of him.

When I came to this House I sought to know him better, and in my seeking, as well as from those who came closer in contact with him, I was more than ever convinced that he was a manly man. He was braver than most men gave him credit for. A man ladened with sorrow and disease in life, rising bright above them and always appearing among his fellows with cheerful smile and kind words upon his lips, moving about ever with kind and far-seeing counsel, is deserving of more sympathy than he who is in full enjoyment of physical health and strength.

There was that about him that can only be characterized in a sense as womanly. "Kind as a woman" is a frequent expression, and in his character there was that trait which may be called womanly kindness, a kindness that did not need to be drawn out by some great emergency, but welled up from the fountain of his heart at all times, wherever his daily walk led him, and communicated itself to every one he met.

His life was a benediction to his fellow-men; his death a universal loss. Not alone do his own people and home mourn, but over his native State a wave of sadness rolled, extending in widening circles until it covered every State whose Representatives sat in this Chamber with him.

It is often said that after the death of a man we sometimes carry to the extreme our praise of him. We know that in the grave lies buried all resentments. We know that it is easier to speak kindly of one that is gone from us than for the one who remains; but, Mr. Speaker, from the profoundest depths of my heart comes the belief that not one word has been uttered here to-day in commemoration of the life, character, and virtues of our departed friend that is not true and is fully warranted. I believe that around the grave of LORENZO DANFORD, from all who knew him, will gather for time and eternity clusters of memories of respect, honor, and love that will never die.

[Mr. MCDOWELL addressed the House. See Appendix.]
[Mr. GORDON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 22, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of amounts due certain newspapers for publishing advertisements for recruits, fuel, horses, etc., for the Army—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report on the claim of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced in aid of the suppression of the rebellion in the civil war—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending the transfer of the appropriation for the improvement of Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 124) providing for the erection of a monument at Put in Bay, Ohio, commemorative of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry and those who participated in the naval battle of Lake Erie on the 10th day of September, 1813, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 84); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 911) to amend section 1176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 87); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of joint resolution and bill of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 60) directing the presentation of a first-class life-saving medal to Lieut. Fidelio S. Carter, United States Navy—Committee on the Library discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 4710) for the relief of Josephus Johnson—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 6957) to revise and codify the laws, both civil and criminal, relating to the Post-Office Department and postal service, and to amend the same, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 6958) to amend sections 5398, 5399, and 5406 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: A bill (H. R. 6959) to amend an act approved January 5, 1893, entitled "An act granting increase of pension to soldiers of the Mexican war in certain cases," so as to extend the provisions of said act to all Mexican soldiers pensionable under law—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPERRY: A bill (H. R 6960) in relation to the service-pension act—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZENOR: A bill (H. R. 6961) for the establishment of a military post at the Falls of the Ohio—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: A bill (H. R. 6962) to establish a steam fog-signal station at the entrance to Holland Harbor, Michigan—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H. R. 6963) for the protection of all citizens of the United States against mob violence, and the penalty for breaking such laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 6964) to amend "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LAMB: A bill (H. R. 6965) to prescribe the number of chaplains in the Regular and Volunteer Armies and fix their salaries and allowances—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 6966) to increase the efficiency of the Navy by the purchase of submarine boats of the Holland type for coast and harbor defense—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 6967) making an appropriation for dredging a channel from Ship Island Harbor to Gulfport, Miss.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BELLAMY: A bill (H. R. 6968) to provide for a clerk of the district and circuit courts of the United States held in Charlotte, N. C.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 6969) making an appropriation for the purpose of dredging a channel from Ship Island Harbor to Biloxi, Miss.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) to provide for the purchase of the painting by J. Walker, representing the capture of the City of Mexico, September 13, 1847—to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ATWATER: A bill (H. R. 6970) for the relief of C. H. Dupree, son of John G. Dupree, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 6971) to refer the claim against the United States of J. M. Huston to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CORLISS: A bill (H. R. 6972) to increase the pension of David J. Newman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 6973) for the relief of Leonard W. Carpenter—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 6974) for the relief of Platte County, Mo.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6975) for the relief of the Presbyterian Church and Masonic lodge of Platte City, Mo.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 6976) for the relief of I. W. Whiteley—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 6977) for the relief of David Alexander—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6978) granting a medal to Mortimer S. Longwood—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6979) granting a pension to Louisa White, of Greensburg, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6980) granting a pension to Emily J. Smith, of Switzerland County, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6981) removing the charge of desertion against Daniel Lock, of Markland, Switzerland County, Ind.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6982) granting a pension to John Clarkson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of George W. Bromley, of Frederick County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6984) for the relief of William Mason, of Frederick County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6985) for the relief of John N. Bell, of Frederick County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 6986) granting a pension to Perry Dunton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 6987) for the relief of John C. Webb—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KLUTTZ (by request): A bill (H. R. 6988) for the relief of John F. Foard—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KLEBERG: A bill (H. R. 6989) granting a pension to Philip Barnhart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6990) granting a pension to Patrick O'Donnell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KNOX: A bill (H. R. 6991) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Lawrence Kennedy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H. R. 6992) to increase the pension of Edward W. Nortoni—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LENTZ: A bill (H. R. 6993) to correct the military record of William Phillips—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6994) to pension Mary A. Lawyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6995) to pension Catharine Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6996) to correct the military record of Charles H. Jessup—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6997) to increase pension of Mrs. Josephine H. Whitehead—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6998) to correct the military record of Harvey Williams—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 6999) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Meloy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7000) granting an increase of pension to James A. J. Ball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7001) granting a pension to John H. Hayden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7002) granting a pension to Mary G. Edmondson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7003) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Queen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 7004) restoring to the pension roll the name of Penelope Morton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 7005) for the relief of Elam Cooper, of Lauderdale County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 7006) granting an increase of pension to Isaac D. Wade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7007) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. Botts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 7008) granting a pension to Louise Donath—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 7009) for the relief of John M. Taylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 7010) to increase the pension of Elwin A. Scutt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 7011) for the relief of William Foy and Mrs. H. B. Lane, of North Carolina—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WEEKS: A bill (H. R. 7012) to increase the pension of Emma C. Stevenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7013) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael J. Dowling, Company C, Fourth Ohio Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7014) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Robert Pratt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7015) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Spencer D. Gleason—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Protest of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Maryland, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. ATWATER: Papers relating to the claim of John G. Dupree, of Wake County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of C. H. Dupree, son of John G. Dupree, deceased, for reference of war claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, favoring the passage of House bill No. 5067, concerning the boarding of vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the appointment of a commission to study and report upon the industrial and commercial conditions of China—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, requesting the passage of the shipping bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BRENNER: Petition of post-office clerks at Dayton, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351, for the reclassification of postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of post-office clerks at Waterville, Me., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of citizens of the Second Congressional district of Rhode Island, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

Also, petition of railway postal clerks of Rhode Island, favoring a bill providing for the reclassification of the Railway Mail Service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAVEY: Petitions of post-office clerks at New Orleans, La., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Petition of J. Heyward Thayer and other employees of the Charleston, S. C., post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of survivors of the Seventh Indiana Infantry, to accompany House bill asking that a medal of honor be conferred upon Mortimer S. Longwood—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Louisa White, to accompany bill granting a pension to her as dependent daughter of Giles E. White, late captain Company A, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROW (by request): Petition of the Woman's Suffrage Association of Pennsylvania, favoring a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, granting suffrage to women, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petitions of H. H. Beach, N. E. Thorn, W. M. Lemen, W. E. Hoyt, and others, and of the First Presbyterian Church of Oelwein, Iowa, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

Also, resolutions of the First Regiment, Hancock Command, Union Veterans' Union, Army of the Potomac, protesting against the passage of House bill No. 3988—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of George H. Thomas Regiment, No. 2, Union Veterans' Union, of Wichita, Kans., protesting against the passage of House bill No. 3988—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McLAIN (by request): Petition of the Mississippi Woman Suffrage Association, Mrs. Hala Hammond Butt, president, for a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting disfranchisement on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Paper in support of House bill for the relief of Thomas A. Queen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Louisa Meloy, widow of James A. Meloy, of Company A, Eighty-second Indiana Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of James A. J. Ball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUGH: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6528, for the relief of W. H. Copley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper in support of House bill No. 6534, to correct the military record of James H. C. Mann—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers in support of House bill No. 6533 to correct the military record of Gabriel R. Bartley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, evidence to accompany House bill No. 6532, for the relief of Thomas H. Stapleton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 6531, for the relief of Robert Ross—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 6529, for the relief of James C. Brickley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 3868, for the relief of Martin Lunsford—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Papers to accompany House bill to increase the pension of Caroline M. Botts, widow of Capt. Randolph Botts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of citizens of Lincklaen Center, Sanford, and Groton, N. Y., for the passage of a bill relating to dairy food and products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of James Skinner and others, favoring the passage of a bill for the establishment of a national military park on the battlefield of Stone River, Rutherford County, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana: Petition of the Wayne Knitting Mills, of Fort Wayne, Ind., against the French reciprocity treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHOWALTER: Petition of druggists of Butler, Pa., relating to the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petition of druggists of Waterbury, Conn., relating to the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEWART of New York: Petition of manufacturers and citizens of Catskill, N. Y., in favor of an appropriation for dredging and removing obstructions in the navigable portion of the Catskill Creek in New York—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: Resolutions of the Citizens League of Zanesville, Ohio, for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of 32 citizens of the Fifteenth Congressional district of Ohio, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. WHITE: Petition of 2,413 citizens of Massachusetts, urging legislation making lynching and mob violence a crime against the United States, providing penalties therefor, and for the creation of a central detective bureau at Washington, with branch offices in various sections of the country, to collect and transmit information of the movements of such lawless bodies—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 22, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on motion of Mr. TILLMAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of WILLIAM V. SULLIVAN, chosen by the legislature of Mississippi a Senator from that State for the unexpired term ending March 3, 1901; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

IMPROVEMENT OF PEARL HARBOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting information relative to the appropriation of $100,000 for improving Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, in accordance with the report submitted by Rear-Admiral Walker, United States Navy, June 11, 1894, and suggesting the desirability of transferring that appropriation to the jurisdiction of the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NEVADA STATE CLAIM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement from the Auditor for the War Department relative to the claim of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced in aid of the suppression of the rebellion in the civil war; which, on motion of Mr. STEWART, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting the annual report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF FELIX ROBERTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of Adele Virginia Spangler, administratrix de bonis non of the estate of Felix Robert vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 20, 1899, an itemized statement of all the real estate in the District of Columbia exempt from taxation, together with a reference to the statute under the authority of which such property has been exempted from taxation; also an itemized statement of all the real property in the District of Columbia acquired by the United States and the District government since the year 1893, inclusive; also an itemized statement indicating the property upon which the payments for construction and maintenance of sidewalks has been refused; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION ACT OF MARCH 9, 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Auditor for the Treasury Department, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, an itemized statement of expenditures for allotments made to the Treasury Department from appropriations made by act of Congress approved March 9, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes," covering the accounts settled in his office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the chief of the division of the Revenue-Cutter Service, requesting that of the unexpended balance for expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service for the fiscal year 1898 the sum of $100,000 be reappropriated and made available in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the service of the current fiscal year; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, requesting that the unexpended balance of the appropriation for rifle practice and matches for the militia of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1899, amounting to $708.61, be made available in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting urgent deficiency estimates of appropriations required for the service of the Interior Department, amounting to $37,214.50; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations under the control of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, a list of judgments, amounting to $27,730.22, rendered by the Court of Claims and requiring an appropriation for their payment; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 52) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5493) for the relief of claimants having suits against the United States pending in the circuit and district courts of the United States affected by the act of June 27, 1898, amending the act of March 3, 1897;

A bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador.

The message also transmitted the resolutions of the House adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. LORENZO DANFORD, deceased, late a member of the House of Representatives from Ohio.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SIMON. I present the petition of H. W. Corbett, president of the Home for Destitute Children, and sundry other citizens of Portland, Oreg., praying for a modification of the present Federal tax on legacies and bequests to colleges and benevolent and religious societies. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully petition the Congress to amend paragraph 5, section 29, of "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, by adding thereto the following:

"And further provided, That where the body corporate entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be a religious, charitable, or educational corporation the duty or tax shall be at the same rate as that imposed on such property passing to the lineal issue to the person who died possessed of such property."

Your petitioners are all religious, charitable, or educational corporations engaged in performing works and disbursing funds for the public welfare solely and not in any manner for private profit or gain. This amendment is asked for the following, among other, reasons:

(1) It has always been the policy of the Government to exempt from taxation religious, charitable, and educational institutions, on account of their meritorious nature and the fact that they relieve the Government of burdens which it would otherwise have to bear.

(2) The present tax compels such institutions as your petitioners to pay as high a tax as bodies corporate engaged in business for private gain.

(3) The present tax places a premium on cutting off legacies to such institutions as your petitioners and operates to close an important source of revenue, which in the past has been one of the chief means of obtaining funds for the work to be performed, the rate of taxation being six and two-thirds times as great as that levied on legacies to lineal issues.

(4) The present tax defeats itself as it discourages legacies, and hence fails as a source of revenue to the Government as well as to your petitioners.

Mr. SIMON. I present a petition, signed by sundry property owners and taxpayers of the county of Tillamook, Oreg., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Nehalem River in that county. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress convened:

Your petitioners, citizens of the State of Oregon and property owners and taxpayers of the county of Tillamook, of said State, respectfully petition Congress of the United States for an appropriation of money, and for such measures as may be deemed proper, for the improvement at the mouth of the Nehalem River in said county.

We, the undersigned, being familiar with the resources of said county and the requirements essential and needful, respectfully represent:

That said Nehalem River drains a large and fertile region, rich in coal, farm and dairy products, and inexhaustible timber.

That large and varied enterprises, such as sawmills, canneries of various kinds, stock raising, dairies, etc., are established in said county, particularly along the region above the mouth of said river, and that these, and more to be established, are but waiting for the opportunities the improvement asked for would afford for developments of vast importance to the people and the State.

That there is now an established coal field of sufficient depth for economic mining in Lower Nehalem is further evidenced by the United States Geological report, by Prof. G. S. Diller, of the years 1895 and 1896.

That the region referred to is one of the richest in the State in natural resources, and that the Nehalem River is the principal water course, affording among the inlets the most easy and convenient access to and by the commercial world by sea, and is therefore the river first requiring such attention.

That the mouth of said river now divides into two distinct channels, causing the waters to divide or spread in such manner as to not afford sufficient depth in either of said channels for the convenient entrance into said bay and river by ocean ships and steamers.

That this inconvenience greatly retards development, and that the improvement asked for, if made, would afford commercial opportunities and insure results immeasurably greater than the cost of making such improvement.

That said improvement may be made by closing one of said channels by means of a jetty or dike, which, by causing the waters to flow in but one of said channels, would secure sufficient depth for all navigable purposes.

That said jetty or dike may be built with ease and at comparatively small cost, the needed material being near at hand, close by said channels; and that the cost of building such jetty or dike would hardly exceed the sum of $15,000 or $25,000.

Wherefore, in praying for this appropriation for said improvement, we feel that our request is reasonable and just; that, in view of the urgent need and the commercial opportunities it would afford, the cost is but small; and that the granting of such appropriation will meet with approval of the people and the gratitude of your petitioners and all our citizens.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the drug-trade section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of 139 railway mail clerks of New York City, 104 railway mail clerks of Buffalo, and sundry railway mail clerks of Cortland and Madison, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented sundry petitions of railway mail clerks of Boston, Wakefield, Cambridge, Lawrence, Lynn, Medford, Dorchester, Haverhill, Ware, and Jamaica Plain, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petitions of J. J. Pike & Co., of Chelsea; C. S. Hamlin and sundry other citizens of Boston, and of the Omega Chemical Company, of Boston, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Mary A. Livermore, president of the Woman Suffrage Association of Melrose, Mass., praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented the petition of Salome Merritt, president of the National Woman Suffrage Association of Massachusetts, praying that the women of the new island possessions be granted equal rights with men; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a petition of the common council of Detroit, Mich., praying for the construction of a railway bridge across the Detroit River at that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Alabama, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BURROWS presented sundry petitions of citizens of Manistee, Escanaba, Muskegon, and Three Rivers, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a letter, in the nature of a petition, from Albert B. Guyton, secretary of the North Carolina Letter Carriers' Association, of Winston-Salem, N. C., praying for the passage of House bill 4911, to increase the pay of letter carriers. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of W. A. Reynolds and 75 other citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Rock Island, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Mary A. Livermore, president, and Henry B. Blackwell, secretary, of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, praying that the equality of political rights be granted the women of Hawaii and the other islands over which Congress has control; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of sundry soldiers of Capt. James M. Dennis's Company, Osage and Maries County militia, of Missouri, praying that they be placed on the pension roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 101) for the relief of Clinton F. Pulsifer, of the State of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 194) providing for a monument to mark the site of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 739) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 200) granting to the State of Wyoming 50,000 acres of land to aid in the continuation, enlargement, and maintenance of the Wyoming State Soldiers and Sailors' Home, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 68) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1533) granting a pension to David Carroll, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 36) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Generals Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2176) to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1489) granting an increase of pension to Robert C. Rogers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 492) granting an increase of pension to William Carothers, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely, the claimant having died and no right descending to any heir.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FORAKER on the 18th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

INDEX TO PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the usual number of the index to private claims, from the 4th day of March, 1891, and up to the 4th day of March, 1899, inclusive, prepared under direction of the Committee on Claims, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of June 10, 1898, be printed.

PRACTICE OF POLYGAMY, ETC.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] December 6, 1899, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to inquire into and to report to the Senate—

First. To what extent polygamy is practiced or polygamous marriages entered into in the United States or in places over which they have jurisdiction.

Second. Have polygamists or persons reputed to have more than one wife been elected to office by the people of Utah; and if so, has such election been for the purpose of encouraging polygamy or in violation of any compact between said State and the United States?

Third. Have polygamists or persons reputed to have more than one wife been appointed to office by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or in cases where the concurrence of the Senate is not required; and if so, have such appointments been made in aid of polygamy or in violation of the compact between the United States and the State of Utah with reference to that subject?

Fourth. What, if any, steps should be taken or measures enacted for the prevention of polygamy in the United States and in places over which they have jurisdiction?

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on the Judiciary recommends striking out the second and third paragraphs and adopting the first and last paragraphs. I ask for the adoption of the amendment. There is no necessity to read it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraphs 2 and 3, as follows.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it is not necessary to read the paragraphs again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to inquire into and to report to the Senate—

First. To what extent polygamy is practiced or polygamous marriages entered into in the United States or in places over which they have jurisdiction.

Second. What, if any, steps should be taken or measures enacted for the prevention of polygamy in the United States and in places over which they have jurisdiction?

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2577) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States revenue cutter Gallatin off the coast of Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2578) for the relief of Eliza M. Abbott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 2579) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet A. Ferguson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2580) granting an increase of pension to William Strain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2581) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (S. 2582) to provide for the establishment of the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River; to ascertain the amount of taxes collected by the State of Texas in what was formerly known as Greer County, and the expenditures made on account of said county by said State, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2583) providing for enlarging the public building at Dallas, Tex.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MARTIN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 2584) for the relief of Mary E. McDonald;

A bill (S. 2585) for the relief of J. V. Davis;

A bill (S. 2586) to give the Court of Claims of the United States jurisdiction of the claims of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company and others against the United States for compensation for the use and occupation of the railroad of said company by the United States or the military authorities thereof; and

A bill (S. 2587) for the relief of the heirs of Valorous G. Austin, deceased.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 2588) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of Gray's Battalion, Arkansas Volunteers," approved February 17, 1897; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2589) for the relief of W. N. Hedden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2590) for the relief of John P. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2591) to correct the military record of Cyrus E. Burnett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2592) granting a pension to Joseph A. Dudgeon;

A bill (S. 2593) granting a pension to Henry Bowerman;

A bill (S. 2594) granting an increase of pension to William McBrien;

A bill (S. 2595) granting an increase of pension to George W. Patterson;

A bill (S. 2596) granting a pension to W. P. Snowden;

A bill (S. 2597) granting a pension to Owen E. Davidson (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2598) granting a pension to Alden B. Thompson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2599) granting an increase of pension to George M. Ireland (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2600) granting an increase of pension to Charles Allen (with accompanying papers).

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 2601) providing for an additional district judge in the district of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2602) to remove the charge of desertion standing against John Daley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2603) for the relief of L. B. Shepherd; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2604) to revive and amend and extend the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, to encourage and promote telegraphic communications between America and Asia, across the Pacific Ocean, from the western shores of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands, to Japan and China; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2605) granting an increase of pension to Elijah Gay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2606) to amend sections 5398, 5399, and 5406, Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 2607) granting a pension to Emily Brooks; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2608) to provide for and create a judicial district in the State of Michigan, to be designated as the northeastern district of Michigan, and for the appointment of a district judge and other officers therein, and for the holding of courts therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2609) to transfer certain old records of the city of Washington from the custody of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to that of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 2610) to authorize the purchase of the property known as the Corcoran Art Gallery, in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2611) providing that the State of Wyoming be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 2612) to remove the charge of desertion against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2613) for the relief of Jacob Falwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2614) to grant a pension to Miss Eva Turner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 2615) for the relief of Joseph Loudermilk; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2616) for the relief of J. W. and J. P. Hall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2617) to abolish the office of justice of the peace within and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2618) granting a pension to William H. Winans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHILTON introduced a bill (S. 2619) to amend section 29 of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2620) granting a pension to Mary A. Steere; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2621) granting an increase of pension to Charles Frye; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2622) granting a pension to Maria A. Thompson; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Mrs. Maria A. Thompson, widow of Dr. Charles A. Thompson, surgeon Thirteenth Illinois and Ninetieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with affidavit of herself, and of Dr. R. E. Young, and of F. W. Roer and T. W. Towles, and of Dr. J. F. Thorpe, with a letter from the Pension Office. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 71) authorizing the President of the United States to invite the Government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an international commission to examine and report upon the diversion of the waters that are the boundaries of the two countries; which was read twice by its title, and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 72) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint David Bagley as an additional cadet at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $463,441.97 to reimburse the State of Nevada for moneys advanced in aid of the suppression of the war of the rebellion, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to fix the salary of the chief clerk, office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, at $2,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $10,000 for printing in book form reports of the committee on awards of the World's Columbian Commission on special subjects, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LAKE TAHOE NATIONAL PARK.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, it was Ordered, That 500 extra copies of S. 2320, "to set apart certain lands in the States of California and Nevada as a public park and forest reservation, to be known as the Lake Tahoe National Park, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the Senate.

TRANSACTIONS WITH NATIONAL CITY BANK, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to the Senate resolution of inquiry of January 4, 1900, is not complete in all respects and fails to transmit to the Senate copies of certain correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the officials of the National City Bank, of New York: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all letters and the substance of any conversation or agreement he may have written or had with A. B. Hepburn, of the National City Bank, of New York, in reply to a letter from Mr. Hepburn to him, dated June 5, 1897; also copies of any letters, communications, agreements, papers, and documents between the Treasury Department and the National City Bank, of New York, within the period embraced between June 5, 1897, and October 27, 1897; also copies of any letters, communications, agreements, papers, documents, or conversation between the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinate officers or officials and the officials of the National City Bank, of New York, or the officials of the National City Bank and the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinates, in reference to the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, of New York, of December 21, 1897, in which the Secretary of the Treasury wrote, "I have yours of the 20th instant, and note your suggestions as to a conference with Mr. Morgan in relation to the Treasury deposits in the national bank depositaries of New York."

And the Secretary of the Treasury is further directed to transmit to the Senate copies of any letters, agreements, communications, papers, documents, or other information in his possession or in the possession of the Treasury Department respecting the conference between the Secretary of the Treasury and James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York, and any other person or persons with whom he conferred in Philadelphia, as mentioned in his letter to James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, of New York, of December 21, 1897; and also whether or not the conference resulted in any agreement or understanding in regard to depositing Government moneys in the national-bank depositaries in the city of New York; whether or not any record was kept in the Treasury Department of telephonic or telegraphic communications between the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinate officers and the officials of the National City Bank, of New York City, and if so, what agreement and understanding was arrived at by means of these telephonic, telegraphic, or other communications; whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury knew or had reason to believe that the Government funds deposited in the National City Bank, of New York, were used with a view of causing a liquidation of speculative stocks, as mentioned in the letter of James Stillman to the Hon. Lyman J. Gage of April 8, 1899, and whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury or any of his subordinates had any correspondence, telegraphic or telephonic, or otherwise, or any agreements, documents, papers, or conversation with the officials of the National City Bank, of New York, between the period embraced from April 28, 1898, to June 2, 1898; September 19, 1898, to October 29, 1898; August 26, 1899, to December 19, 1899; and if so, let him accompany his response to this resolution with copies thereof. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further directed to inform the Senate of the amount of United States bonds held in trust by the Treasury Department for the Standard Oil Company, of the city of New York, to secure Government deposits for the National City Bank, of New York City, and upon what dates these bonds were assigned and the amount thereof now or at any time held by the Government of the United States for the Standard Oil Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed and go over under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Has objection been made to present consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made.

GETTYSBURG NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate how far the act of Congress of February 11, 1895, which "authorized and directed the Secretary of War to acquire such lands in the vicinity of Gettysburg not exceeding in area the parcels of land shown on the map prepared by Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles and now on file in the office of the Secretary of War, which were occupied by the infantry, cavalry, and artillery on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1863, and such other adjacent lands as he may deem necessary to preserve the important topographical features of the battlefield," has been carried out, how much of the land indicated has been secured, how much money the commissioners of the Gettysburg National Park have expended on account of their salaries and otherwise, and the value of the improvements in said park turned over to the United States Government by the several States, and to inform the Senate what additional legislation, if any, is necessary to carry out the provisions of the said act of February 11, 1895.

REPORT ON COPPER RIVER EXPLORATION EXPEDITION.

Mr. ELKINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of Capt. W. R. Abercrombie on the Copper River exploration expedition to Alaska.

Mr. ELKINS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. W. R. Abercrombie on the Copper River exploration expedition to Alaska, transmitted by the Secretary of War, of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for distribution by the War Department.

BRUNSWICK (GA.) HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CLAY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the Senate a report from H. L. Marinden, an engineer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, recently detailed by him to survey the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., showing the amount of work done on said bar since his last report, its cost and its value to the Government, and an estimate as to the annual cost of maintaining the channel across said outer bar.

EXPENDITURE OF WAR APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of January 8, 1900, asking for information as to what portion of the $50,000,000 appropriated by Congress under the act approved March 9, 1898, was expended by or under direction of the Department of State, I transmit herewith a detailed statement from the Secretary of State.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 22, 1900.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5493) for the relief of claimants having suits against the United States pending in the circuit and district courts of the United States affected by the act of June 27, 1898, amending the act of March 3, 1897, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CLAY. Last Thursday my colleague [Mr. BACON] gave notice that he would on next Wednesday call up Senate joint resolution 45, introduced by himself, declaring the purpose of the United States with reference to the Philippine Islands, with a view of submitting some remarks thereon. I received a message from my colleague this morning stating that he has been called home for providential reasons and can not be here next Wednesday. I give notice for him that on Tuesday of next week, immediately after the morning business has been completed, he will call up the same joint resolution for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 68 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted on the 8th instant by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] relative to the violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That an enactment, by constitution or otherwise, by any State which confers the right to vote upon any of its citizens because of their descent from certain persons or classes of persons, and excludes other citizens because they are not descended from such persons or classes of persons, having all other qualifications prescribed by law, in the opinion of the Senate, is in violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States and of a fundamental principle of our republican form of government.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I have carefully considered the speech of the honorable Senator from Alabama on the pending resolution. He has discussed the questions at issue with great adroitness, and has displayed that splendid ability which he brings to bear upon all the important questions that come before this body for consideration.

The distinguished Senator undertakes to show that this body does not have jurisdiction of the questions involved in the resolution, and in the next breath he insists that it relates to a question which in his judgment is now before the country for solution by popular suffrage. He says that it is a question which can not be repressed or evaded in the coming election. In dealing with this particular phase of the question, he says:

To refuse now to consider this question is to draw the country into a vortex of angry and dangerous excitement, such as seriously endangered the Republic in 1876 and 1877.

I heartily concur in the opinion that the question does involve the peace and welfare of the nation and the stability of our institutions. It does seem to me that no more important question will be presented for our consideration during the present session of Congress.

Article IV, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

In reading the foregoing provision of the Constitution it will be observed that it is the duty of the United States to guarantee to each State a republican form of government. The language of the Constitution is mandatory, plain, and unequivocal. When the members of this body took the oath of office, among other things, they agreed to maintain the Constitution of the United States. However, the honorable Senator does not entertain this view as to the amendments in question. He says:

The question of the protection of the suffrage of the negro against discrimination under the laws is the only one in reference to which the Constitution gives specific plenary and discretionary power to Congress, to be exercised by appropriate legislation or to be declined if Congress refuses to exercise the power. It is not mandatory, and no man can be conscience bound to exercise the power if he feels that it would imperil the country. In the fourteenth amendment the power to reject the negro vote is admitted in favor of the States, and this right is nowhere taken away.

If the right thus given to the States is taken away by the fifteenth amendment, as I do not believe that it is, the power of Congress over the subject is again repeated separately in that amendment, and it stands as the sole authority to deal with the subject, to be exercised at the discretion of Congress. It may be that a power is given to Congress to deprive the State of the right reserved in the fourteenth amendment; but if so, it is only a power, and Congress is not bound to use it.

Unquestionably this legislative power is political and is not judicial, and it conveys no vested right in the negro race to vote that can stand against the power of Congress to permit a State to disqualify them by refusing to proceed to enforce their demand for the ballot.

Mr. President, this is indeed a startling declaration in view of the plain language contained in the amendments in question. According to the Senator's contention, we can violate the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments with impunity, provided it becomes necessary to do so in order to perpetuate Democratic rule in the South. This sounds to me very much like the doctrine that was taught by Calhoun in his time. In other words, it is nullification pure and simple. That section of the fourteenth amendment which relates to the representation of States in the electoral college and in the House of Representatives relates solely to the instances wherein the States, acting within the scope of their authority, see fit to deny the right of suffrage to any citizens residing therein in a manner so as to not discriminate against other citizens similarly situated on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. In discussing this phase of the question, Mr. Blaine, in his Twenty Years of Congress, says:

The adoption of the fifteenth amendment seriously modified the effect and potency of the second section of the fourteenth amendment. Under that section a State could exclude the negro from the right of suffrage if willing to accept the penalty of the proportional loss of representation in Congress which the exclusion of the colored population from the basis of apportionment would entail. But the fifteenth amendment took away absolutely from the State the power to exclude the negro from suffrage, and therefore the second section of the fourteenth amendment can refer only to those other disqualifications, never likely to be applied, by which a State might lessen her voting population by basing the right of suffrage on the ownership of real estate, or on the possession of a fixed income, or upon a certain degree of education, or upon nativity or religious creed. It is still in the power of the States to apply any one of these tests or all of them, if willing to hazard the penalty prescribed in the fourteenth amendment.

This is a complete answer to the statement made by the Senator from Alabama and leaves no doubt as to the proper construction to be placed upon the amendments.

In view of the fact that this resolution relates to the question as to whether or not the Constitution of the United States has been violated by constitutional enactment by certain States, about which we may be called upon at any time to legislate, I assume that no one will controvert the proposition that this body has jurisdiction of the subject to which it relates. In considering the question the inquiry naturally arises as to whether or not any State has adopted as a part of its constitution or by legislative enactment done that which is calculated to deprive any of its citizens of the privileges to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States. I am prepared to show that a number of States have attempted, by constitutional enactment, to deprive a certain class of citizens residing therein of privileges that are vouchsafed to them by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution.

The State of Louisiana has already adopted as an amendment to her constitution a provision which is in contravention of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, in that it discriminates against a certain class of citizens of that State to such an extent as to deprive them of the privileges that are guaranteed to other citizens who are similarly situated. There are other States that have adopted provisions that are equally repugnant to the amendments in question.

I call attention to the fact that the Democratic party in the State which I have the honor in part to represent is attempting to secure the adoption of a proposition to amend our constitution that is in many respects similar to the one which has been adopted by the people of the State of Louisiana.

The Constitution of the United States is not only intended for our guidance as representatives of the people, but it is consigned to the care and keeping of the Congress of the United States, and it is the duty of every member of this body to guard with zealous care each of its provisions and at all times to see that the principles enunciated therein are maintained and upheld in the spirit in which they were adopted.

Recognizing this fact, and realizing the responsibility that rests upon me as a member of this body, I feel that I would be recreant to the trust reposed in me were I to remain silent and without protest permit the Democratic party of North Carolina to adopt a policy that will ultimately result in the curtailment of our representation in the House of Representatives and in the electoral college. What is it that enables the States of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Illinois to exert such a wonderful influence in the House of Representatives? Is it not due to their numerical strength in that body? The greater the numerical strength of a State in the House of Representatives the greater influence that State will be able to exercise in our national councils.

The State which I have the honor in part to represent is one that is rich in undeveloped resources. It has greater possibilities than any other Southern State. I point with pride to the fact that more cotton factories were established in North Carolina, under the benign influence of Republican legislation during the last year, than in any other Southern State. This is but an earnest of what we can do in the future if we are accorded that nurture and encouragement to which we are entitled as one of the great States of the Union.

How are we to secure needful legislation? Certainly not by the curtailment of our representation in the House of Representatives; and in this connection I wish to be plainly understood. I am a Southerner, I sympathize with the Southern people, and I will do everything in my power to prevent the adoption of any legislation that is calculated and intended to lessen the power and influence of the State of North Carolina. And while discussing this particular phase of the question I desire to call attention to a fact that has probably escaped the attention of many of the people of the South, and that is that the fourteenth amendment, among other things, provides:

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

This section of the fourteenth amendment clearly makes it the duty of Congress in the apportionment of representation to base the same upon the numerical strength of each State as shown by the number of votes therein cast. And it only remains for Congress to ascertain the facts as to any particular State in order to deprive that State of representation in proportion to the number of citizens denied the right of suffrage.

It is generally understood that the Republican party forced negro suffrage upon the South. This proposition is erroneous. I am prepared to show that the Democratic party of the South is in a great measure responsible for the enfranchisement of the negro. It will be remembered that the Howard amendment, which among other things provided that the Southern States should resume representation in Congress, did not undertake to place any restriction upon the States with respect to the elective franchise. It only undertook to fix the status of citizenship in each State in the Union, and, among other safeguards, provided that as long as the negro was denied the right to vote he should not be counted in the Federal enumeration.

The Howard amendment was rejected by all of the Southern States with the exception of Tennessee. The legislature of North Carolina, which was overwhelmingly Democratic at that time, voted almost unanimously to reject it. I do not propose to discuss the question as to whether or not the adoption of the fifteenth amendment was the proper course to pursue at that time. That question has been settled by the people of the United States, and the fifteenth amendment is as much a part of the Constitution of the United States as any other amendment thereto. I find by an examination of the legislative journals of my State that ex-Senator Thomas J. Jarvis, a leading Democrat, together with the Hon. James L. Robinson, who was at one time elected lieutenant-governor of North Carolina by the Democratic party, Thomas M. Argo, W. W. Greer, P. Hodnett, T. C. Humphreys, J. A. Kelly, J. A. Mason, W. P. Welsh, R. D. Whitley, W. L. Lord, L. A. Mason, and J. W. Osborne, all Democrats, voted for the ratification of the fifteenth amendment.

If these distinguished Democrats at a time when the colored race had just been emancipated and was in a helpless state of ignorance thought it wise and proper that they should exercise the right of suffrage, I assume that I am right in contending, after a lapse of thirty years, that it is our duty as representatives of the American people to use all means in our power to secure the proper enforcement of the fifteenth amendment.

If the Senator from Alabama is right in his contention that the negro is not entitled to exercise the elective franchise, the Democratic party should have the manhood to propose the abrogation of the fifteenth amendment. This would raise the issue for which my distinguished friend contends and would afford the people of the United States an opportunity to pass upon the question—the only lawful method by which the colored people can be deprived of the rights which are now guaranteed to them by said amendment.

Judge Story, in his great work on the Constitution, said: "What is to become of the constitutions of government if they are to rest not upon the plain import of their words, but upon conjectural enlargements and restrictions, to suit the temporary passions and interests of the day?" Let us never forget that our constitutions of government are solemn instruments, addressed to the common sense of the people, and designed to fix and perpetuate their rights and liberties. They are not to be frittered away to please the demagogues of the day; they are not to be violated to gratify the ambitions of political leaders—they are to speak in the same voice now and forever. They are no man's private interpretation. They are ordained by the will of the people, and can be changed only by the sovereign command of the people.

And until the majority of the American people shall decree the abrogation of that amendment, the States are powerless by constitutional enactment or otherwise to do that which is a discrimination against any class of people residing therein, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I consider the proposed amendment to the constitution of the State of North Carolina as the most important question that we have been called upon to deal with since the war. The right of suffrage is one that is prized very highly by the people of the United States. It is a historical fact that those who have once enjoyed the high privilege of the elective franchise are loath to yield it without a struggle. The constitution of 1868 of North Carolina was framed by the Republican party, and among other things it contained a provision which guarantees free suffrage to the rich, the poor, the illiterate, and the educated alike. Its adoption marked an era of encouragement to the common people of the State.

Theretofore there had existed a deep-seated prejudice against the poor and illiterate white man as a result of the system of slavery which had done so much to degrade the poor man and to discourage those who earn their living by manual labor. This section of our constitution is consonant with the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. Justice Swaine in the slaughterhouse cases, in referring to these amendments, among other things, said: "Fairly construed, these amendments may be said to rise to the dignity of a new Magna Charta."

There is to-day a manifest disposition to invade the liberty of the individual and to ignore the rights of property—a disposition which is concealed under many pretexts, and referring to which Mr. Guthrie, in his work on the fourteenth amendment, on page 30, says:

This tendency, bred of envy and discontent and the thirst for organic change—call it socialism or communism, or what you will—is the grave danger of the present, and it threatens humiliation and disaster. In this tendency lies the difficult problem which we of this generation must prepare to face and to solve. Much is to be dreaded and guarded against in the despotism of the majority wielding and abusing the power of legislation and ignorantly or intentionally undermining the foundation of the Constitution itself.

This is a correct portrayal of the conduct of those who seek to deprive the citizens of North Carolina of the rights that are guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States. There has never been a moment since the adoption of the constitution in 1868 when it has not been the intention of the leaders of the Democratic party to do all in their power, if the opportunity should present itself, to amend our constitution so as to restrict the right of suffrage, and, if possible, prevent the poor and illiterate white people of that State from exercising that privilege.

It has been contended all the while by the Republican party that, in the event of the Democratic party being permitted again to control our affairs, it would attempt eventually to so amend the constitution as to exclude the poor and illiterate people of both races from the enjoyment of the privilege guaranteed them by the constitution of 1868.

On the other hand, the Democrats have strenuously denied that such was their intention, and, in doing so, have ridiculed the charges made by Republicans. During the last campaign Mr. Simmons, chairman of the Democratic executive committee, devoted a good deal of his time in attempting to convince the people that his party was not inclined to restrict the right of suffrage. I call attention to the following interview which Mr. Simmons gave out on the 25th of September of that year, published in the Raleigh News and Observer, one of the leading Democratic newspapers of the State:

For the past twenty years or more just before every election the Republican speakers, at their midnight meetings, have been in the habit of telling the negro that if the Democrats came into power their right to vote would be taken away from them. After the Democrats came into power in this State they always had some reason to give the credulous beings why the Democrats had not disfranchised them as they had before predicted.

First, they told them that if the Democrats got the State government they would disfranchise them. The Democrats got the State government and did not disfranchise them. Then they told them that if the Democrats elected a President they would disfranchise them. The Democrats elected a President and did not disfranchise them. Then they told them if the Democrats got control of Congress they would disfranchise them. The Democrats got control of Congress and did not disfranchise them. All along the honest white man of the State laughed at these lies and marveled that the negro did not have sense enough to see that he was being duped.

Finally, the negro himself began to see through the trick. He had seen the Democrats in full power in the State for twenty-odd years, and had learned through experience that that party did not propose to disfranchise him, and he, too, began to laugh at these lies, and finally refused to be frightened by their rot any longer. So the old Republican scarecrow had to be pulled down and put away.

I also call attention to the following statement contained in an address issued and signed by the Democratic members of the legislature of North Carolina in 1870:

In the last contest in this State the principal issue was upon the question of colored suffrage and civil rights of the colored race. That matter has been decided upon a solemn appeal by the people of the United States. The guaranty of their rights has now become a part of the Constitution. To that Constitution we have ever been willing to defer; to the laws made in pursuance of it we yield and ever have yielded a ready obedience.

The reconstruction acts of Congress, with the civil and political rights they confer on the colored race, we regard as a finality; we accept them in good faith. We are one of the States of the Union. Let us seek to forget the bitterness of the past, to build up the places made waste by the unfortunate war, and to promote the harmony and prosperity of all sections of our great country.

The colored man now enjoys the same political and civil rights as the white man. We accept his status as fixed by the constitution of this State and United States in good faith. We regard it as a final settlement of the question. It now becomes our duty as good citizens to elevate him morally and intellectually.

The foregoing is a portion of the address in question, which was dated on the 26th of March, 1870, and signed by the following gentlemen, who were Democrats, members of the legislature:

Thomas J. Jarvis, of Tyrrell; H. C. Jones, of Mecklenburg; C. T. Murphy, of Sampson; F. N Strudwick, of Orange; J. A. Moore, of Caldwell; Plato Durham, of Cleveland; J. A. Moore, of Alamance; R. P. Matheson, of Alexander; John L. Smith, of Alleghany; J. H. Davis, of Carteret; Philip Hodnett, of Caswell; Joshua Barnes, of Wilson; J. Scott, of Onslow; J. W. Graham, of Orange; C. Melchor, of Cabarrus; A. M. Robbins, of Rowan; J. M. McLaughlin, of Iredell; L. A. Mason, of Gaston; R. S. Beal; of Caldwell; W. L. Love, of Jackson; B. P. High, of Columbus; W. T. Ferebee, of Camden; T. C. Humphries, of Currituck; J. A. Kelly, of Davie; J. C. McMillan, of Duplin; W. E. Armstrong, of Duplin; John Gatling, of Gates; B. C. Williams, of Harnett; W. P. Welsh, of Haywood; Tilman Farrow, of Hyde; T. A. Nicholson, of Iredell; G. F. Dardson, of Iredell; E. M. Painter, of Jackson; J. L. Robinson, of Macon; R. D. Whitley, of Mecklenburg; W. W. Grier, of Mecklenburg; W. W. Bodie, of Nash; Frank Thompson, of Onslow; T. M. Argo, of Orange; J. Hawkins, of Rowan; J. M. Shaver, of Rowan; J. C. Williams, of Sampson; J. W. Clayton, of Transylvania; D. E. Smith, of Wayne; David Pruitt, of Vancey; J. O. Hicks, of Clay.

This was the position taken by the Democrats in 1870, and when the question arose during the last campaign in North Carolina as to whether or not the Democrats sought to restrict the right of suffrage, the Democratic executive committee of that State printed the address in question in full in the Democratic campaign book, beginning on page 8. In order to allay this apprehension the executive committee of that party issued a supplement to their handbook entitled: "Comments by the State Democratic Committee on the handbook issued by the People's Party State Executive Committee."

On page 18 of the supplement, in discussing the question as to whether or not they proposed to disfranchise any of the voters in that State, among other things I find the following:

It is the poor man's party. Nine-tenths of its members are poor men. How utterly absurd, then, is the false charge that the Republicans are trumping up to deceive the unwary. In order to give some color to it, they quote something from a Yankee newspaper, whose owners and editors are, we have always understood, Republicans, that Gen. W. R. Cox, who lives in Washington, told a reporter if the Democrats succeeded they would disfranchise the ignorant negro. But General Cox publishes over his own name a declaration that he never said that and never said anything like it, for he well knew that if even the Democrats should succeed and should have control of the legislature they would be powerless to disfranchise anybody. The Constitution forbids it.

The Constitution gives the right of suffrage to all male persons over 21 years of age not disqualified by crime, and the legislature can not add or take away a letter from that. That can only be done by the people themselves, and the Democrats will never submit any proposition to the people to take from a man his right to vote. No Democrat has ever proposed such a thing. The charge is only intended to mislead, to deceive, and to make political capital. It is entirely false. There is not a Democratic convention that would not spit upon the man who might make such a proposition. There is not a Democratic candidate for office who would not pledge himself most solemnly against it. There is not a man who has any respect for his word who would make such a charge. It is, we learn, made by some radicals, but our people know the character of these men. They have no self-respect, and nobody else respects them. They are not entitled to the respect of people, because they do not respect themselves. It is wonderful how low down some people can get in political matters; with what unblushing effrontery they can invent falsehoods, until they become like the "organized" being referred to in the Populist Handbook.

The Wilmington Messenger, a Democratic organ, on the 18th of September, 1898, contained the following as part of an editorial:

The most stupid lie of the campaign is the Populist lie put out by the Skinner and Thompson gang and slyly repeated by the black radicals, the bald-faced lie that if the Democrats should carry the State they would disfranchise the negroes. If they desired it ever so much, they have no power to effect it. The lie is so stupid that it could not have been started and repeated but for the profound ignorance of the niggers generally. If they knew anything they would know that North Carolina has no power under Heaven to abridge the political rights and to deprive of the privilege of voting the negroes any more than the whites. The franchise is a right secured under the Constitution of the United States, and it takes the same power to abrogate the right as to confer, to repeal a law as to make it. So it is all bosh and falsehood to try and bewilder and befool the poor, ignorant negroes in the way it has done. It is pitiful and mean to so work up them by lying and deception. Their right to vote is as absolutely secure as the white man's right to vote.

As we stated yesterday, the three amendments to the Constitution introduced and adopted soon after the war fixed the status of the negroes as citizens equal with that of the whites in their rights. The only way to rid the country of the negro ballot is by the same means and processes that were gone through with to enfranchise him in his stolid and stupid condition. So it is a lie out of whole cloth when the dirty tricksters imposed upon the ignorant, credulous negroes by telling them that a Democratic victory means depriving them of the right to vote.

The foregoing statements indicate the kind of campaign that was conducted by the Democratic party in North Carolina at the last election. The statement contained in the supplement reminds one very much of the declaration of the Apostle Peter on a certain occasion when he was about to betray our Saviour. It does seem to me that the statements ought to be treated as a solemn pledge made by the Democratic party of North Carolina to the people of that State with respect to the question of suffrage.

At that time we were in the midst of a most exciting campaign. The Democratic executive committee realized full well that unless it made a full and complete denial of the allegations that were being made by the Republicans against them that the voters of that State would again repudiate them. There has never been a more binding and solemn contract entered into by any political party than when a majority of the people of North Carolina voted the Democratic ticket with the assurance from its committee that there was no foundation for the statement that either white or colored would be deprived of the right of suffrage in the event of their party being successful. They even went so far as to characterize the Republicans as not being entitled to respect, and with inventing falsehoods, hoping thereby to convince the people that there was not the slightest foundation for the allegation that they proposed to disfranchise any citizen of that State. They sought to show that it was absurd to even intimate that the Democracy of North Carolina would favor the abridgment of the right of suffrage in the slightest degree, and in order to remove all doubt as to the sincerity of their professions they called attention to the fact that the Constitution (meaning thereby the Constitution of the United States) would not permit them to do that which the Republicans were alleging they would do in the event they should succeed. They said, among other things:

There is not a Democratic convention that would not spit upon the man who would attempt to make such a proposition.

What proposition? The proposition to submit to the people a proposed amendment to the Constitution which should have for its object the disfranchisement of the negro. It was not only the Democratic committee that made these pledges, but almost every Democratic candidate for the legislature made solemn pledges to the voters in their respective counties that, if elected, they would oppose any and all measures that might be presented for the disfranchisement of any class of our citizens.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that every Democratic leader in North Carolina has been guilty of duplicity in dealing with our people, because there are several honorable exceptions; and notably among these was my distinguished predecessor, the late Senator Vance, who was respected and admired by all parties for his honesty and strict integrity. So long as he remained at the helm of the Democratic party in North Carolina all attempts to disfranchise the poor and illiterate classes of both races were futile. I am informed that on one occasion, when it was proposed by that element of the Democratic party which now dominates its actions to pass an election law which would enable them by manipulation to thwart the will of the majority of the people, he went in person to the city of Raleigh and, by his wonderful influence, prevented the consummation of the conspiracy to deprive the people of their liberties. In this connection I call attention to the following statement, to which he gave utterance in his speech delivered in the Senate of the United States on the 7th of April, 1881. Among other things he said:

The black people of my State have the same patriotism that we claim to have; they have the same pride in the character and the reputation and the prosperity of the Old North State that we claim to have; and when they came before the exodus committee they showed as much determination to maintain the good character and the good name of the land of their birth as the white people did, and they would do it now if you would let them alone. We have no objection to universal suffrage; we have no objection to the black people voting; we are willing for them to vote, and we are willing for them to continue to vote just as long as anybody else votes. They are improving daily; they are far more qualified to vote now than they were when you first gave them the suffrage; they are acquiring property, and they are acquiring intelligence; and, what is more, they are acquiring good feeling for the people of North Carolina; and the worst thing you can do, Senators, for the comfort and for the advancement of the black race, whose destiny you pretend to have so much at heart, is to step between them and their white neighbors of the South again, proclaiming that they are not now receiving their rights at the ballot box or in the courts or elsewhere. It is not true. It is alleged simply for the purposes of party aggrandizement.

It is a remarkable fact that the moment Senator Vance passed away the element of the Democratic party which had been held in check by his influence at once asserted itself and assumed control of the party machinery in that State.

If we are to profit by the lessons taught by the election methods in the States of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Mississippi, we are justified in the assumption that the adoption of the proposed amendment in North Carolina will sound the death knell to the aspirations of every Zeb. Vance Democrat in the State. While the proposed amendment is intended to crush out the principles of Republicanism, it is likewise intended to eliminate those who entertain the liberal views of the late Senator Vance, as well as those who are not willing to submit to the dictation of the machine.

Notwithstanding the many pledges made by the Democrats in order to induce the citizens of that State to vote for them, and thereby enable them to obtain control of the legislature, we are confronted with a proposition to amend our constitution, which, if adopted, will, in my judgment, disfranchise the poor and illiterate classes of both races. They were not content with submitting this proposition under the fair and impartial election law which had been enacted by a legislature consisting of Republicans and Populists, and under which they had so recently obtained control of the legislature, but, in order to carry into effect the scheme of disfranchisement of the unfortunate classes of our people to whom it refers, they enacted an election law which is framed with the sole view of manipulating our elections so as to thwart the will of the people, and thereby enable them to do that which the people would never consent to if given a fair opportunity of expressing their views at the ballot box and having the same recorded as expressed.

In order that we may have an intelligent conception as to the proposition which is submitted, I call attention to Article VI, section 1, of the constitution of North Carolina, which it is proposed to abrogate, which reads as follows:

Art. VI, sec. 1. Qualifications of an elector. Every male person born in the United States and every male person who has been naturalized, 21 years old or upwards, who shall have resided in the State twelve months next preceding the election and ninety days in the county in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed an elector; but no person who, upon conviction or confession in open court, shall be adjudged guilty of felony or any other crime infamous by the laws of this State, and hereafter committed, shall be deemed an elector, unless such person shall be restored to the rights of citizenship in a manner prescribed by law.

It will be observed that the foregoing article is in harmony with the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which read as follows:

Art. XIV, sec. 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without the due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

* * * * * * *

Art. XV, sec. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

It was expressly agreed at the time North Carolina was readmitted into the Union that the people of our State should retain a provision in its constitution in harmony with the provisions of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and in order that there may be no mistake about the matter I call attention to the following provision contained in the enabling act, which was passed on the 25th day of June, 1868:

That each of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as a State of the Union when the legislature of such State shall have duly ratified the amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as Article XIV, upon the following fundamental conditions: That the constitution of neither of the said States shall ever be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of a right to vote in said State who are entitled to vote by the constitution thereof, herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said States.

The foregoing is plain and explicit, and leaves no doubt as to the precise conditions upon which the Southern States were readmitted into the Union. While it does not affect this controversy in a strictly legal sense, at the same time it clearly indicates the nature of the compact which was to be observed by the people of our State as the condition upon which the State was readmitted into the Union.

It may be contended by some that this enactment is the product of a Republican Congress and that a majority of the people of North Carolina never consented to its provision. The Republicans of that State gave their assent to it when they voted to ratify the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and the Democrats, through their representatives who were members of the legislature in 1870, gave their assent to it when they issued the address to which I have heretofore referred.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, together with the compact which was entered into when the enabling act was adopted, the legislature has submitted, among other things, certain sections as part of the amendment which is intended to be made to the constitution of North Carolina. I will ask the Secretary to read sections 4 and 5.

Mr. MASON. Of the proposed amendment?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; of the proposed amendment.

Mr. MASON. Proposed by the legislature?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; and submitted to the people for ratification.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. Every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the constitution in the English language; and before he shall be entitled to vote shall have paid, on or before the 1st day of March of the year in which he proposes to vote, his poll tax, as prescribed by law, for the previous year. Poll taxes shall be a lien only on assessed property, and no process shall issue to enforce the collection of the same, except against assessed property.

SEC. 5. No male person who was on January 1, 1867, or at any time prior thereto entitled to vote under the laws of any State in the United States, wherein he then resided, and no lineal descendant of any such person shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in the State by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications prescribed in section 4 of this article: Provided, He shall have registered in accordance with the terms of this section prior to December 1, 1908. The general assembly shall provide for a permanent record of all persons who register under this section on or before November 1, 1908; and all such persons shall be entitled to register and vote at all elections by the people in this State, unless disqualified under section 2 of this article: Provided, Such persons shall have paid their poll taxes, as required by law.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is a historical fact, of which the courts will take judicial notice, that in the year 1867 the colored people were not entitled to vote. It is contended by the honorable Senator from Alabama that section five of the amendment which is proposed to our constitution is not repugnant to the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that there is nothing on the face of the amendment which in plain terms proposes to exclude the colored race from the exercise of the elective franchise. This contention is not warranted by the facts in the case. It is true that there is no provision in section five which in so many words declares that those of African descent shall not be entitled to vote, but there is a provision in that section which attempts to confer the right of suffrage upon those whose ancestors were entitled to vote in the year 1867, which can only be construed as an effort to exclude all citizens from the enjoyment of that right who were not entitled to vote in that year.

In order that we may be able to place an intelligent construction upon the proposed amendment and correctly determine as to whether or not it is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, it is necessary to carefully ascertain the true intent and meaning of the fifteenth amendment. It is evident that the framers of the fifteenth amendment had but one object in view, and that was to embody in the Constitution of the United States a guarantee that there should be no discrimination on the part of any State against any class of people on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The framers of the fifteenth amendment had in mind that race of people which had just been emancipated from slavery, and in order that there might be no cavil as to the true intent and meaning of said amendment, they not only provided that the right to vote should not be denied on account of race or color, but they went a step further and provided that no one should be denied the right on account of "previous condition of servitude." I call upon my Democratic friends to show me a single individual who, while in a condition of servitude, was entitled to vote. All will admit that no one had that right while in such condition. Therefore, the proposed amendment is as much in conflict with this clause of the fifteenth amendment as it would be with other portions of the amendment if it had declared that no one of African descent should be entitled to vote.

In this connection I call attention to the case of the United States vs. Reese, to be found in 92 United States Reports, on page 214, Chief Justice Waite, in discussing the questions at issue in that case, and referring to the intent and meaning of the fifteenth amendment, among other things said:

The fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone. It prevents the States, or the United States, however, from giving preference in this particular to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Before its adoption this could be done. It was as much within the power of a State to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of race, etc., as it was on account of age, property, or education. Now it is not. If citizens of one race, having certain qualifications, are permitted by the law to vote, those of another having the same qualifications must be. Previous to this amendment there was no constitutional guarantee against this discrimination. Now there is. It follows that the amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress. That right is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

This construction by the Supreme Court of the United States leaves no doubt as to the real intent and meaning of the fifteenth amendment, but I do not rely solely on the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The supreme court of North Carolina has rendered a decision in the case of Riggsbee vs. Town, of Durham, reported in 94 North Carolina Reports, on page 800, which involves the principle in question. This was a case wherein the legislature sought, by enactment, to levy a tax on the property of the white people for the purpose of maintaining white schools, and likewise on the property of the colored people for the purpose of maintaining colored schools. Chief Justice Smith, in rendering the opinion of the court, among other things said:

It matters not however regular and free from objection may be the prescribed method of levying the taxes, if, when collected, those paid by one race are to be separated and applied exclusively to the schools in which children of that race are taught, and the same discrimination in the disposition of the fund is made, as if the taxes had been raised by separate and distinct assessments on the races. It is true, as was ruled by the judge, the present assessment is uniform, and not obnoxious to one of the objections considered in the case referred to, but the essential objection remains, that there is "discrimination in favor or to the prejudice of" one of the races (Const., art. 9, par. 2), which renders the enforcement of the tax for such proposition illegal.

Mr. BUTLER. That was a Democratic court.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; that was a Democratic court.

The foregoing construction which has been placed on article 9, section 2, of our constitution is to the effect that funds that were raised by taxing the property of white people can not be applied to the education of the white children to the exclusion of the colored children, on the ground that it would be discrimination in favor of, or to the prejudice of one of, the races. Is it not reasonable to infer that it will likewise be held to be a discrimination against the colored race to attempt to confer upon a certain class of our people the right of suffrage to the exclusion of the colored race, when the fifteenth amendment provides that there shall be no discrimination against any class of people on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, in much plainer language than that of article 9, section 2, of our State constitution.

Also in the case of Preuit vs. Commission, 94 N. C., page 719, Chief Justice Smith says:

It is not therefore every distinction dependent upon race, color, or previous condition of servitude that comes in conflict with the Federal Constitution, but only when it produces inequality in right or interests; and when this is the result the State legislation from which it flows is rendered inoperative. When the same essential privileges are secured to all, such legislation is valid and rests in the sound discretion and views of public policy of those who make the law.

It will be observed that the opinions rendered by the supreme court of North Carolina are in harmony with the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the right of a State legislature, by enactment, to discriminate against any class of people similarly situated on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. As my colleague suggested a while ago, I call attention to the fact that this court at that time was composed exclusively of Democrats.

It is also contended by some that the proposed amendment contains identically the same provisions that are to be found in the amendment to the constitution of the State of Massachusetts. The statement is without foundation, as will appear by an examination of the Massachusetts constitution. The amendment to the Massachusetts constitution to which they refer reads as follows:

Art. XX. No person shall have the right to vote, or be eligible to office, under the constitution of this Commonwealth who shall not be able to read the constitution in the English language and write his name: Provided, however, That the provisions of this amendment shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be 60 years of age or upward at the time this amendment shall take effect.

There is no similarity between the amendment to the constitution of Massachusetts and the proposed amendment to the constitution of North Carolina. The amendment to the constitution of Massachusetts requires all parties to be able to read and write as a condition precedent to a right to vote; the only exceptions being those who are physically incapacitated to comply with the requirements, those who were at the time of the adoption of said amendment entitled to vote, and those who had attained the age of 60 years, and were therefore presumed to have reached that point where they were practically incapacitated from learning to read and write the English language. There is nothing in the exceptions that can be construed so as to exclude any race of people from its operations. It is a provision which affects all races alike, and does not conflict with the fifteenth amendment in the slightest degree.

It is different with the proviso which accompanies the amendment to the constitution of North Carolina, in which it is provided that all those whose ancestors were entitled to vote in the year 1867 shall not be required to comply with the educational requirements of the amendment as a condition precedent to the right to vote. It is plain that it is an attempt to deprive the colored race of the right to vote, which is now guaranteed them by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator if he knows why the date January 1, 1867, was fixed?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It was fixed, I understand, with a view of caring for the white men of the State who were entitled to vote at that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. That being the date of the reconstruction acts of Congress which gave the right to the colored people to vote?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir. You will remember that the fifteenth amendment was not ratified by the several States and the result announced until about the 20th of March, 1870, I believe it was. In 1867 they were not entitled to vote.

Mr. MASON. That is, the ancestor of the black man was not entitled to vote?

Mr. PRITCHARD. No, sir.

Mr. MASON. But the ancestor of the white man was?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes.

Mr. MASON. Regardless of any qualifications?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. I did not intend to do so but for the two questions put by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Illinois. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to say that the descendants of those who could vote in 1867 were entitled to vote under the proposed amendment. That is your proposition?

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is what the proposed amendment provides.

Mr. MONEY. They are not compelled to comply with the requirements of section 4 of the proposed amendment?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The way the constitutional amendment was read at the desk was that those who voted at that time——

Mr. MONEY. Or prior to that time.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. Either in North Carolina or in any other State.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. Does not the Senator from North Carolina know that up to 1835 the colored people did vote and there must be in that State a great many descendants of such people; and is it not quite likely that many colored people under the amendment will be able to vote? I only ask that question in view of the two questions which have been asked.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from North Carolina will allow me, I will ask a question so that he can answer it with the question of the Senator from Mississippi. The question is whether that language was not intended by the framers to mean white people alone?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I so understand it.

In reply to the question propounded by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Mississippi, I desire to say that while it is true that the colored people were entitled to vote in North Carolina prior to 1835——

Mr. BUTLER. That is, free negroes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Free negroes; it is also true that in the Dred Scott decision the court decided that they were not citizens of the United States; and I further call attention to the fact that you may eliminate the word "color" and the word "race" and the proposed amendment is still in violation of the fifteenth amendment, which expressly provides against discrimination on account of "previous condition of servitude."

I ask the Senator from Mississippi when he comes to make his speech to show me a single individual in any State in this Union who was entitled to vote while in a condition of servitude.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire that I shall answer him now?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator can answer it any time he desires, but I would rather go on now. I will be delighted to hear from him at any time, however.

It is unfair to attempt a comparison between North Carolina and Massachusetts, when it is well known that Massachusetts has all the while had the best public-school system of any State in the Union, while ours has been weak and inefficient. At the close of the late civil war the soldier from the State of Massachusetts returned to a home of peace and plenty, where his children had enjoyed uninterruptedly the benefits of the public school, while, on the other hand, the Confederate soldier returned to a home of desolation and ruin, to find that his children had been denied the privilege that had been enjoyed by the children of Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts soldier, if diseased or wounded, was granted a pension by a generous Government for service rendered in its behalf; the Southern soldier, if diseased or wounded, was called upon to face the struggle for life in his pitiable and destitute condition, and the only ones who aided him were the children of his household, who at that time ought to have been in the public schools learning to read and write, and as a result they were unable to obtain an education. It is now proposed by the leaders of the Democratic party that his children and their descendants shall be denied the right of suffrage because of their inability to read and write the constitution in the English language.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. The fifth section of the amendment proposed for adoption by the people of North Carolina provides virtually that all white men who could vote on or before the 1st of January, 1867, their sons and grandsons, shall be entitled to vote under the suffrage amendment, notwithstanding that they do not possess the qualifications required by the fourth section. Now, would not that qualify the illiterate white people whom he says this ordinance would deprive of the right of suffrage?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It would, provided the Supreme Court of the United States should decide that section 5 is constitutional. I will discuss that phase of the question later on.

The Senator from Alabama contends that the Mississippi case has practically settled the question in favor of the proposed amendment. The case in question is Williams vs. State of Mississippi, reported in 170 United States Reports, page 213. In that case the syllabus reads as follows:

> The equal protection of the laws is not denied by a State constitution and laws which make no discrimination against the colored race in terms, but which grants a discretion to certain officers, which can be used to the abridgment of the rights of colored persons to vote and serve on juries, when it is not shown that their actual administration is evil, but only that evil is possible under them.

The case is one wherein the defendant, who was indicted on a charge of murder, moved to quash the bill of indictment on the ground that the section of the act under which the grand jury had been summoned and charged was unconstitutional and repugnant to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States of America, fourteenth amendment thereof, in that colored men were not permitted to serve on the grand jury. It will be observed by reading the facts as stated in that case that there was no discrimination against the colored race in terms, and it was not shown that the administration of the provisions was of such a character as to exclude the colored race from voting.

The constitution of Mississippi provides, section 244 of article 12, that:

> On and after the 1st day of January, 1892, every elector shall, in addition to the qualifications, be able to read any section of the constitution of this State; or he shall be able to understand the same when read to him or give a reasonable interpretation thereof.

This provision on its face applies to all races of that State alike, and there is nothing contained therein that undertakes to classify its citizens, and the only possible harm that could come to any particular race in consequence thereof would be the evil administration of the same, and at the time the case in question was heard it was not shown that there had been an improper administration of the law; that no valid objection can be raised to said amendment until it shall appear to the court that its provisions are administered to the detriment of the colored race.

Justice McKenna, in discussing the case at bar, among other things said:

> It can not be said, therefore, that the denial of the equal protection of the law arises primarily from the constitution and laws of Mississippi, nor is there any sufficient allegation of an evil and discriminating administration of them. The only allegation is "by granting a discretion to the said officers," as mentioned in the several sections of the constitution of the State and the statute of the State adopted under the said constitution, the use of which discretion can be and has been used by said officers in the said Washington County to the end complained of, to wit, the abridgment of the elective franchise of the colored voters of Washington County, and such citizens are denied the right to be selected as such jurors to serve in the circuit court of the county, and that this denial to them of the right of equal protection and benefits of the law of the State of Mississippi on account of their color and race, resulting from the exercise of the discretion partial to the white citizens, is in accordance with the purpose and intent of the framers of the present constitution of said State.

The case in question was decided solely on what appeared in the constitution, and there was no evidence that there had been an evil administration of its provisions. In this connection I call attention to what Justice Matthews, among other things, said in the case of Yick Wo vs. Hopkins Sheriff, 118 U. S., 356:

> Though the law itself is fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered with an evil eye and unequal hand, so as to practically make unjust and illegal discrimination between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

These principles of interpretation have been sustained in Henderson vs. Mayor of New York (Henderson vs. Wickham), 92 U. S., 259; Chy Lung vs. Freeman, 92 U. S., 275; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S., 339; Neal vs. Delaware, 103 U. S., 370, and Soon Hing vs. Crowley, 133 U. S., 703.

Here is an explicit statement by Justice Matthews which declares that although a law may be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is capable of being administered "with an evil eye or an unequal hand," so as to discriminate between persons similarly situated, that the denial of guaranteed rights is violative of the spirit and letter of the Constitution. Will any one deny that the proposed amendment is capable of being administered "with an evil eye and unequal hand?"

In commenting on the foregoing statement Justice McKenna said, page 225:

> This comment is not applicable to the constitution of Mississippi and its statutes. They do on their face discriminate between the races, and it has not been shown that their actual administration was evil, only that evil was possible under them.

According to the quotations which I make, it is apparent that the decision in the Mississippi case can not be taken as having the slightest bearing on the proposed amendment for two reasons: First, there is nothing in the constitution of Mississippi which proposes to classify the citizens of that State, or which can be construed, in a spirit of fairness so as to exclude any race from the operation of its provisions. Secondly, it was not shown in that case that there had been an improper administration of its provisions which had resulted in an injury to any particular race of people in that State.

However, I am of the opinion that if the amendment to the constitution of Mississippi is enforced with a view to disfranchising the colored people of that State, and if it should be made to appear to the court that its provisions are administered with "an evil eye and unequal hand," in that event it would be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

There is much in the proposed amendment which is calculated to create apprehension and alarm on the part of the illiterate and poor white people of North Carolina, as well as the colored race. It is a carefully prepared and well-devised scheme by which it is sought to forever prevent the common people of North Carolina from participating in the management and control of her affairs. While it is pretended by those who advocate the proposed amendment that its object is to secure white supremacy, at the same time there lurks beneath the surface a purpose to disfranchise thousands of our citizens, both white and colored, and thereby enable a certain class in our State to hold the offices and enjoy the emoluments of the same.

The proposition which they propose to submit is an attempt to confer the right of suffrage by inheritance, a plan which is repugnant to every principle of the organic law of the land, and one which ignores all that is sacred and dear to a free and independent people. If it were possible to enforce this unwise provision, it would sooner or later result in the complete overthrow of that republican form of government to which we are entitled under the Constitution of the United States.

There are perils attending the submission of this amendment which, in my judgment, can not be escaped by the poor and illiterate white people of North Carolina, and in order that I may be fully understood when I make this declaration I call attention to the fact that in the event the Supreme Court of the United States should decide that the ancestor and grandfather clause of the proposed amendment is unconstitutional, there is danger that they may go a step further and decide that the educational and poll-tax qualifications can properly be segregated from the other provisions, and thereby permitted to become a part of the organic law of our State, and as such apply to all classes and races of people alike, and as a result thousands of white farmers and laboring men would be disfranchised and denied the rights for which their ancestors fought at Kings Mountain and Guilford Court-House.

My distinguished friend from Alabama, in attempting to defend the action of the Democracy of North Carolina, failed to consider this important phase of the question. The fact that he did not undertake to show that there was no danger of section 5 being declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court and at the same time section 4 permitted to become part of our organic law is conclusive to my mind that he realizes that there is grave doubt about the result, to say the least of it, and his silence on this subject is enough within itself to alarm every illiterate white man in that State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I understood the Senator in the remark he has just made, he is afraid of some possible decision of the Supreme Court on this question when it reaches it.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If we should ever get one I fear that it will disfranchise both races.

Mr. TILLMAN. If you succeed in defeating the amendment before the people next summer, of course it will never get there; but if you do not, will it not be time enough for us to consider this proposition when it reaches us in the regular order of our affairs, when some Senator appears here elected under it, or when the other end of the Capitol shall have taken it up in the election of a Representative?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Are you through?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is question enough. If you will answer that it will satisfy us all, I think.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, among other things it is our duty to uphold and maintain the Constitution of the United States, and I know of no better employment that we can engage in than to do that which will prevent the violation of the plain language of the Constitution of the United States. I do not think that the proposed amendment to our Constitution will be adopted by the people of my State if we get a fair election, but I want to say to the Senator now that if the election methods are applied in my State that have been applied in other Southern States, we shall have no opportunity whatever to be heard at the ballot box, and it is for that reason that I want to call the attention of the country at large to this proposed attempt to disfranchise not only the colored men of my State, but the poor white men as well.

However, Mr. President, it is contended by some of the Democratic leaders that sections 4 and 5 of the proposed amendment will either stand or fall together, and that the Supreme Court does not have the power in dealing with this question to segregate the objectionable or unconstitutional part from that which is not in conflict with the Constitution. This is an erroneous idea, and in order that there may be no doubt about the question I call attention to the following statement of Chief Justice Fuller in the income-tax cases recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States:

> It is elementary that the same statute may be in part constitutional and in part unconstitutional, and if the parts are wholly independent of each other, that which is constitutional may stand while that which is unconstitutional will be rejected.

This case will be found in 158 U. S. Reports, page 635.

I also call attention to the case of Riggsbee vs. Town of Durham, 94 N. C., page 800; Johnson vs. Winslow, 63 N. C., page 553.

The question then arises, Does section 4 depend upon section 5 in any respect for its validity? In other words, is it not complete within itself, and does it not give full expression to the legislative will without referring to section 5? I shall assume that the advocates of the proposed amendment, if they should ever reach the courts, will take the position that there is no discrimination in the proposed amendment, and that therefore it does not conflict with the fifteenth amendment.

They will be compelled to take this position in order to obtain standing in any court, and when they once admit that it was not the intention of the legislature to discriminate against any race of people the court will have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that section 4 is complete within itself, because it certainly provides for that which the advocates of the proposed amendment say was the object of those who framed it. What was the object of the legislature if there was no discrimination meant? Was it not to restrict and qualify suffrage? Such being the case, does not the fourth section restrict and qualify suffrage by requiring all the citizens of North Carolina to be able to read and write the Constitution in the English language and pay a poll tax as a condition precedent to the right to vote? Can there be any doubt as to the construction that the court will place upon the proposed amendment?

Mr. President, in addition to the dangers already pointed out, there is another to which I desire to call attention. It will be observed by reading section 5 that the last proviso therein contained reads as follows:

> Provided such persons shall have paid their poll tax as required by law.

That is to say, the grandfather clause will not avail those citizens who, in consequence of poverty and misfortune, are unable to pay their poll tax on or before the 1st of March in the year in which they propose to vote, as provided in section 4 of the proposed amendment. This clause, if adopted, will disfranchise many of the best people of our State. There are hundreds of good citizens to be found in every county of North Carolina who do not pay their poll tax promptly on or before the 1st day of March, owing to some misfortune over which they have no control. It is only the rich class of people, and those who are engaged in business in the towns and cities, who can promptly pay their poll tax on or before the 1st day of March of each election year.

I am informed that the framers of the amendment, after they had inserted the educational qualification, became alarmed lest our poor people should all learn to read and write, and in order to render it more difficult for that class of people to exercise the right of suffrage it was provided that they should not only be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language, but it was also provided that they must pay their poll tax on or before the 1st day of March. Why fix the 1st day of March? And why was it that they failed to fix the day of election as the time on or before which citizens should be required to pay their poll tax? Can it be possible that it occurred to them that if more time was given our people that it might enable them to realize on their crops, or by hard labor earn enough money and pay their poll tax and thereby qualify themselves to exercise the right of franchise?

In order that you may fully understand and appreciate the result of the proposed amendment, it is necessary for each citizen of North Carolina to answer this question: How many men in your voting precinct, if called upon to-morrow to write any section of the Constitution in the English language, from dictation, would be able to correctly write the same, and if they should succeed in doing so, how many are able to pay their tax promptly on or before the 1st day of March in each election year?

During the late civil war there were no property or educational qualifications required of those who were called upon to fight for the Confederacy, neither were there any educational or property qualifications required of the brave and patriotic North Carolina boys who responded so nobly to the call of their country during the war with Spain. Many of the brave boys who faced the shot and shell during the war with Spain were unable to read and write, and I am informed that an examination of the muster rolls discloses the fact that not a member of the legislature which submitted the proposed amendment participated in that struggle. It is not the first time in history that an attempt has been made by the rich and educated to cast reflection upon the illiterate class.

After the battle of Cowpens the British officer, Tarleton, in conversation with Mrs. Wiley Jones, of North Carolina, observed: "You appear to think very highly of Colonel Washington; and yet I have been told that he is so ignorant a fellow that he can hardly write his own name." "It may be the case," she readily replied, "but no man better than yourself, Colonel, can testify that he knows how to make his mark." It was in the battle of Cowpens that Colonel Washington had wounded Tarleton in the hand, and which caused Mrs. Jones to make the pointed retort.

Some of the best people in my State, owing to circumstances over which they had no control, are unable to read and write, but they know how to make their marks, and many of them have acquired what might be termed large fortunes; and in almost every instance they are people of high character and standing, with sufficient intelligence to vote on any of the great questions that may be submitted to the American people for their consideration. I want to suggest to those gentlemen who, like Tarleton, would cast reflection upon them and deprive them of their liberty as Tarleton proposed, that they must not forget the fact that although they may not be able to read and write they can make their marks when it comes to the question of depriving them of their liberties, for which their ancestors fought at Cowpens. It is the poor and illiterate classes of our people who perform the greater portion of the public duties required by the State.

In time of peace they are required to pay poll tax and work the roads, and in time of war they sacrifice their health and risk their lives in defense of our people. The State of North Carolina has not afforded her citizens proper educational facilities in the past, and as a result we have a large per cent of illiteracy; and the Democratic party, having been in control of the State for a greater portion of the time since the war, is responsible for this deplorable condition of affairs, and it is cruel and inhuman in the leaders of that party to attempt to punish our people for that which they can not help.

In this connection I call attention to the following letter written by Prof. C. H. Mebane, superintendent of public instruction of the State of North Carolina. This letter clearly indicates the deplorable condition of the public-school system in North Carolina. Among other things it discloses the fact that 23 per cent of the white population are unable to read and write.

Mr. TELLER. Is that a recent letter?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; it was dated just the other day. I have not the date of it, but it is quite a recent letter.

We can not hope to reduce the percentage of illiteracy of that State in any appreciable degree with our present school facilities between now and December, 1908, the period at which time it is provided the proposed amendment shall apply to white as well as colored people.

Mr. Mebane, in his letter, says:

> In reply to your letter, will say as to illiteracy I can only give you the figures taken from the Census Reports of 1890, which are as follows:
>
> Illiteracy of the whole population of North Carolina, 36 per cent. Illiteracy of white population, 23 per cent. Illiteracy of colored population, 60 per cent. Percentage of school children in North Carolina according to Educational Report of this Department, enrolled in schools was in 1898, 62⅔ white and 64 7/10 colored. Percentage of school population in average attendance on school was in 1898, white, 34 7/10; colored, 32 2/3 per cent. Average length of school terms in weeks or days was in 1898, whites, 14½ weeks, or 71 days; for colored, 12½ weeks, or 64 days. Total expenditure for schools for the school year ending June 30, 1899, was $936,801. Number of insolvent white polls was 20,076. Number of insolvent colored polls was 18,233.

Massachusetts has about nine and one-half months of public school. Their term for the entire State will average this. In North Carolina the term will only average about three and one-half months.

We spend $336,000 for three and one-half months school, and this pays only a salary to teachers of an average of about $25 per month.

Even at the low prices paid teachers, in order to make our term equal to that of Massachusetts, we would have to spend more than three times as much as we do now.

It has been boldly proclaimed by Chairman Simmons and other leaders of the Democratic party that the proposed amendment will not, if adopted, disfranchise a single white voter in the State of North Carolina. May I ask those gentlemen what is to become of that unfortunate class of our white people who are unable to pay their poll tax and in consequence thereof have been placed on the insolvent list? The fact that they are unable, by sickness, poverty, or otherwise, to pay their poll tax should not be taken advantage of by the lawmakers of our State for the purpose of degrading them in the estimation of the public in consequence of their poverty.

I know of many citizens whose names are on the insolvent list whose character and standing is as good in every respect as that of the gentlemen who have submitted the proposed amendment to the constitution of our State, and I, for one, will never give my consent to a proposition which has for its object the humiliation and degradation of those unfortunate people.

This does not include the many hundreds and thousands who by neglect or oversight fail to pay their poll tax so far in advance as the 1st of March.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina will suspend one moment, while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the regular order be laid aside temporarily, in order that the Senator from North Carolina may conclude his speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senator from North Carolina may proceed with his speech. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, the Democrats of North Carolina attempt to justify their actions in regard to the proposed amendment by asserting that they fear negro domination. According to the census of 1890 our population was 1,617,947, and of that population only 562,000 were negroes; and I am sure that if a census could be taken at this time it would disclose the fact that the white people outnumber the negro in a greater proportion than they did in 1890. According to the census of 1890 the whites outnumbered the negroes more than two to one, and no intelligent citizen can be induced to believe that two white North Carolinians are in danger of being dominated by one negro.

It is absurd to contend that there is any danger of negro domination in North Carolina. In the very nature of things it can not be. From the earliest dawn of civilization to this good hour the great white race has given to the world its history, its philosophy, its laws, its government, and its Christianity, and it will continue to do so. The colored people of my State in the main are conservative and well behaved. They have never acted offensively, nor have they shown a disposition to interfere with the white people in the management of the State's affairs. It is true that there are some exceptions, but in no instance has the conduct of the negro been of such a nature as to challenge the serious consideration of the white people. I take it that no one will seriously contend that there is or ever was the slightest danger of the State government of North Carolina being dominated or controlled by the colored people.

It has often been contended by the Democrats that there are not more than 30,000 white Republicans in North Carolina. I have made a careful poll of the white Republicans in the State, and I am prepared to show by documentary evidence that can not be contradicted that there are over 60,000 white Republican voters in that State. I do not believe that there are to-day more than 100,000 colored voters in the State, and I am sure that at the last election not more than 80,000 colored people voted for the cooperative ticket. I do not undertake to say that the remainder of the colored people voted the Democratic ticket, but I do say that hundreds of them were compelled to vote the Democratic ticket by intimidation and violence, their votes in many cases being counted for the Democrats when actually cast for the Republican candidates, and quite a number were prevented from voting at all.

The Democratic party in North Carolina is inconsistent in criticising the Republicans for having recognized the colored people by giving them office, in view of the fact that it has in many instances preferred colored people to white men when they thought that such a policy would enable them to control the election. The first coalition movement that was arranged in North Carolina was entered into between the negroes of Craven County on the one part and the Democratic party of that county on the other part.

There are 97 counties in North Carolina, of which number there are 12 counties, according to the census of 1890, wherein the colored people are in the majority, and not one of them has been dominated or controlled by the colored people.

In most of the twelve counties in North Carolina in which the negroes are in the majority the Democrats elected their legislative and county tickets at the last election. Take, for instance, the county of Halifax, wherein there is a majority of 1,420 negroes over the combined white vote; the Democratic party secured a majority in that county for the legislative and county candidates. Now, one of two things is certain—they either failed to count the votes that were cast for the Republican ticket in that county or the negroes voted the Democratic ticket. I do not care which horn of the dilemma my Democratic friends may choose to take, but I will assume that they acted honestly and will say that the majority of the negroes in that county voted the Democratic ticket. Such being the case, it does seem to me that the cry of negro domination is ludicrous in the extreme.

There are about 50,000 negroes in North Carolina who can read and write, and will be entitled to vote in the event the proposed amendment is adopted, provided they can pay their poll tax on or before the 1st day of March in each election year.

Mr. President, the old-fashioned cornfield hand belongs to the class of colored people that will be disfranchised under the proposed amendment. It was he who remained at home during the late civil war and cared for the white women and children while his master was in the army fighting to forge the chains of slavery closer about his limbs. His devotion to the white women and children of the South during that terrible ordeal is without a precedent in the history of the world.

There is not a single instance, in so far as I am informed, wherein the slave betrayed the trust that was reposed in him by his master, who had practically left him in charge of his affairs during his absence. It was the faithful old colored servant who followed his master on the bloody field of battle and who was ever ready and willing to sacrifice his life for his master's ease and comfort. It is that class of people who are now deserted by the very men who received such splendid service at their hands.

In speaking of this class of colored people the late lamented Grady, in his famous speech in Boston, said:

> What of the negro? This of him: I want no better friend than the black boy who was raised by my side and who is now trudging patiently, with downcast eyes and shambling figure, through his lonely way of life. I want no sweeter music than the crooning of my old "mammy," now dead and gone to rest, as I heard it as she held me in her loving arms, and bending her old black face above me stole the cares from my brain and led me smiling into sleep. I want no truer soul than that which moved the trusty slave, who for four years, while my father fought with the armies that barred his freedom, slept every night at my mother's chamber door, holding her and her children as safe as if her husband stood guard, and ready to lay down his humble life on her threshold. History has no parallel to the faith kept by the negro in the South during the war.
>
> Often 500 negroes to a single white man, and yet through those dusky throngs women and children walked in safety, and the unprotected homes rested in peace. Unmarshaled the black battalion marched patiently to the fields in the morning, to feed armies their idleness would have starved, and gathered anxiously at the big house to "hear the news from marster," though conscious that his victories made their chains enduring. Everywhere humble and kindly; the rough companion of the little ones; the observant friend; the silent sentry in his lowly cabin; the shrewd counselor; and when the dead came home, a mourner at the open grave. A thousand torches would have disbanded every Southern army, but not one was lighted.
>
> When the master, going to a war in which slavery was involved, said to his slave, "I leave my home and loved ones in your charge," the tenderness between man and master stood disclosed. And when the slave held that charge sacred through storm and temptation, he gave new meaning to faith and loyalty.
>
> I rejoice that when freedom came to him, after years of waiting, it was all the sweeter because the black hands from which the shackles fell were stainless of a single crime against the helpless ones confided to his care.

Mr. President, some of our Democratic friends justify their conduct by the assertion that the negro is inferior to the white man, and that therefore he is not entitled to the enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment; and in the next breath they are compelled to admit that on and after the 1st day of December, 1908, it is the purpose of the proposed amendment to place the unfortunate white man in the same category that they now propose to place the illiterate and poor colored man. In other words, on and after December, 1908, all white men who are unable to read and write are to be placed upon a level with the colored man, who, they contend, is a degraded being. The proposed amendment will not in the slightest degree affect the race question. The Democrats will always contend that there is a race question so long as any number of negroes vote against the Democratic party.

While I contend that it is the duty of every white and colored voter in the State who is in favor of a republican form of government to vote against the proposed amendment, at the same time I am of the opinion that in the event the white Republicans and the Democrats of that State will show their magnanimity and patriotism by defeating the proposed amendment, and it is highly probable it will result in a division of the colored vote, and thereby preclude the possibility of racial prejudice interfering with the fair consideration of public questions in that section. As I have already stated, the proposed amendment will not exclude all the colored race, and so long as the Democrats can have a pretense for the contention that the colored race casts a solid vote for the cause of Republicanism, so long will the demagogue take advantage of that fact in order to make political capital for his party.

In the face of the fact that many colored people have voted the Democratic ticket in the past and that thousands of their votes have been counted for that party by unscrupulous election officials, it is loudly proclaimed by Chairman Simmons that the Democratic party is a white man's party. I am informed that quite a number of colored voters are ready and willing to openly espouse the cause of Democracy, and once they adopt such a policy the mask under which the Democracy has been parading heretofore will be withdrawn, and when it is, it will disclose the fact that the Democrats are not now and have never been entitled to the distinction of being the white man's party.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama undertakes to convey the idea that the Democratic party of the South is the white man's party. In this connection I call attention to the following statement, which I take from a speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], delivered on the 12th day of February, 1895, in this body. In referring to the black counties and the election methods in Alabama, among other things, he said:

> There, Mr. President, is the seat of the fraud. It is capable of proof beyond all question and beyond all doubt that in many of these counties, where from three to five thousand, and in many instances 6,000, votes were returned in favor of the Democratic candidate, Mr. Oates, there were not registered 1,000 voters. In some instances but very few; in many instances the vote returned exceeding the vote for the county by 200 per cent or relatively so. So by this system of manipulation and fraud in what is known as the black belt, the Populists, Jeffersonian Democrats, and Republicans having carried, I think, almost two-thirds of the white counties; by controlling the election machinery in the black belt, counties where the colored people stayed away from the registration board, and where they stayed away from the polls to a very great extent, the entire result of the honest vote cast in that State in the white counties was overcome by this system of political rapine and fraud.
>
> Mr. President, what effect does this have? It overturns the republican form of government and makes it a hiss and a by word, a snare, and a delusion.

This statement was deliberately made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska after having carefully investigated the sworn testimony of leading citizens of that State, and is, I presume, a fair statement of the conditions that then existed in Alabama. I am informed that at the last Congressional election in the State of Alabama, in some of the Congressional districts the Democrats, according to the election returns, were defeated in the white counties and had to rely on the black counties in those districts for the majorities on which their certificates of election are based. As a notable instance, I call attention to the Fourth district of Alabama.

In that district it will be found from an examination of the records that, taking the white counties in the district, Mr. Aldrich, the contestant, had a clear majority of 816 votes, and that in the county of Dallas, wherein there is a negro majority over the combined white vote of 6,385, the contestee received 2,046 majority. According to the logic of the Senator from Alabama, and assuming that there were no frauds perpetrated in the county of Dallas, we are irresistibly forced to the conclusion that the Democratic party in that district is the negro party.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Will he also include in his information the fact that the man who ran for Congress on the Republican ticket gave orders that the negroes should not vote, and that they did not vote?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. PETTUS. Well, that is the fact.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I am not advised as to that particular matter, but it is a peculiar fact that in all these colored counties in Alabama and elsewhere our Democratic friends succeed in getting a majority every time. I do not know how they do it, but they work it out some how or other by some kind of rule.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow a further interruption?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Does the Senator know that in Dallas County, which he speaks of, there are 7,000 colored voters and only about 2,500 white men, and as the order was given to the colored men by the Republican candidate not to vote in that election, the man who was elected did not get 3,000 votes altogether?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I am not advised as to that matter, but I understand a number of white people there voted for Mr. Aldrich. However, I am not prepared to contest that question.

Mr. PETTUS. I should be very much obliged to the Senator if he would speak of what he knows and not of these vulgar reports.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I have been speaking from the records taken from the sworn testimony of as good citizens as live in Alabama.

If the Democratic party of the South is sincere in its professions that it only desires to perpetuate white supremacy, why is it that these unlawful and unconstitutional methods are invoked in the black belt for the purpose of overcoming the result of the vote in the white counties? Take the State of North Carolina, for instance, and in almost every instance where there are but few colored men you will find an overwhelming majority for the Republican party. In the county of Mitchell, where there are only 45 colored votes, the Republican majority is 1,300.

Take the county of Madison, in which I reside, where there are only about 62 colored voters in the entire county, and you will find a majority of over 800 for the Republican ticket—a county in which the Democrats have not been able to elect a county officer for about twenty-two years, with the exception of a few constables and justices of the peace. The cry of negro domination has not only been used against those of us who have advocated the principles of Republicanism, but it has been used with as much energy and more intensity against the Democrats who have joined what is known as the Populist party. In the campaign of 1894 the Populists of North Carolina were denounced with more bitterness by the Democratic orators than had ever been used by them in denouncing the Republicans previous to that date. They were accused of being negro lovers and a black-and-tan crowd, just as the Democrats had abused the Republicans theretofore.

Mr. President, the wave of prosperity and the general revival of business that is now pervading every nook and corner of the United States, and which is as much in evidence in our beautiful Southland as in any other section of this country, together with the fact that the Spanish war has once more reunited our country and fired the Southern heart with renewed ardor and patriotism, and prompted them with a desire to sustain President McKinley in his efforts to bring to a speedy termination the war that is now being waged in the Philippines, has alarmed the leaders of the Democracy and caused them to resort to the agitation of the race question, in order, as they think, to blind the Southern people to such an extent as to prevent them from considering the splendid results that have followed in the wake of Republican legislation.

I make this statement after mature deliberation, and I am prepared to demonstrate to the satisfaction of anyone that such is the case. There are some people in North Carolina who are honestly of the opinion that the proposed amendment will only affect the colored people, and that its adoption will settle the race question. These gentlemen are honest in their opinions, but they are sadly mistaken in believing that the Democrats will ever cease to yell "Nigger," and to ostracize those who advocate Republicanism, if by doing so they can induce one citizen to vote for the Democratic party.

Take many of the Southern States as illustrations. The negro has no voice in the control or management of the affairs of state; but in the face of that fact the South Carolina Republicans are still denounced as belonging to the "nigger party," and will be denounced as such as long as they tamely submit to the inhuman treatment which is accorded them by the leaders of the Democracy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me right there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. When in a Southern State negro postmasters are forced on the people, and at the North there are no negro postmasters, how can we separate the negro from the Republican party when the Republican Administration will not let us forget that they are doing those things?

Mr. PRITCHARD. There it is again, Mr. President. You might read the Ten Commandments to my distinguished friend from South Carolina and he would yell "negro" back at you. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. If you read the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments at me I certainly should yell "nigger" back at you, because they are chock-full of "nigger," and nothing else.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is exactly right. I am accustomed to that kind of talk. When we say that a protective tariff is the proper thing to have and undertake to show to the people that the Democratic party is opposed to it, they only answer by yelling "negro" at us. When we say we ought to hold the Philippines, they will answer by saying "negro," and when we say the people ought to rule and control their own affairs, they yell "negro" back at us; and that is the only answer we are able to get. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. We do not say "negro," but we say "nigger."

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator may adopt that pronunciation if he desires. It is purely a matter of taste. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I am merely speaking of the facts and you are drawing on your imagination.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am speaking of facts, and that is what hurts some people. They do not like to hear the facts.

It is a well-known fact that many Southern States have, by indirection, completely ignored the fifteenth amendment. The motive which has prompted this policy was a determination to perpetuate Democratic rule in the South at all hazards. Not only has there been a well-defined policy on the part of the Democratic party of the South to deprive the colored man of his vote, but the leaders of the party have been equally determined in their efforts to restore the rule of the classes, and thereby prevent the great common people from participating in the control and management of public affairs. This policy has caused that class of people to lose interest in public questions to a great extent, and as a result, the farming and laboring classes are ignored and all of the political power is being centered in the cities and towns.

There has been a gradual encroachment of the rights of Southern Republicans since the election of 1876, and while the methods that have been used in those States have not heretofore been invoked in North Carolina, I am sorry to say that we are at last called upon to face the same propositions which have been presented to the Republicans of the Southern States to which I have heretofore referred.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator excuse me if I interrupt him for a moment? I was not paying close attention and did not catch what he was reading from the proofs there. Did the Senator name the States?

Mr. PRITCHARD. No, sir; I did not, but I am going to refer to some States in a few moments in which the Senator will probably be interested.

In the beginning, in those States, the Democrats claimed that their policy was only to rid the States of negro domination, and they solemnly declared that they did not propose to disfranchise any white man; but in the light of the recent election returns we are irresistibly forced to the conclusion that the real intent and effect of the Democratic methods in those States, as well as in North Carolina, is to restore the rule of the classes and to ignore the masses.

I find by an examination of the public records that in the State of Louisiana there were in 1898 149,975 white people who were 21 years of age and upward and entitled to vote, and by an examination of the Congressional election returns of that year I find that the entire Democratic vote of that State was 27,453 and the total opposition vote was 5,429, which makes the total vote cast for that year 32,882. Admitting that none but white people voted, we are confronted with the astounding fact that there were 117,000 white voters in that State who, for some cause or other, did not exercise the right of suffrage. In South Carolina there were in 1898 about 117,000 white voters and 154,000 colored voters.

The Congressional election returns for that State in 1898, as taken from the World Almanac, show that there were 29,027 cast for the Democratic candidates and 2,804 for the opposing candidates, and assuming that all those who voted were white men, we find that over 86,000 white men, for some cause or other, were prevented from exercising the right of suffrage.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to explain that?

Mr. PRITCHARD. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will do it with a great deal of pleasure, and without a particle of doubt on your part or that of anybody else as to my explanation being true. Under our new State constitution (which is patterned after that of Massachusetts, requiring an educational qualification and enlarging the suffrage by giving the ballot to an illiterate who pays on $300, and which had the Mississippi clause in it, but which no longer has, because we limited its operation to three years) we have about 14,000 registered negro voters and about 98,000 or 100,000 white registered voters. Our fight is in the Democratic primaries for the nominations, and in those primaries we usually cast about 80 to 90 per cent of our vote. There is no opposition, no Republican party in South Carolina, except a little machine which sends delegates to the national convention of the Republican party and controls the patronage; and those delegates, when there is any struggle for the nomination between Republican candidates, live on the money which they get for their votes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am merely explaining why it is that the white vote, the regular vote, in November substantially registers the action of the Democratic primaries in July. Therefore, when he says we suppress the white vote the Senator does not know what he is talking about, or else he misstates the facts.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am quoting from the record, and the record shows that in South Carolina there were 86,000 white men who, for some cause or other, did not vote at the last election. That is what the record says about it.

In Mississippi, in the year 1898, 134,000 white men were entitled to vote at the Congressional elections, but the returns show that there were 22,365 votes cast for the Democratic candidate and 4,822 for the opposition, which makes the total vote cast in that State 27,187, and assuming that only white men voted, we find that 87,436 white voters, who were entitled to cast their ballots, for some cause or other did not vote.

And in order that you may have some idea as to whether or not our Southern people are inclined to exercise the elective franchise when afforded an opportunity to do so, I call attention to the fact that in North Carolina in the year 1898, out of a voting population of 380,000, there were 337,960 votes cast under a fair election law, which was enacted by a legislature composed of Republicans and Populists. These figures clearly indicate that the white people of the States of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Mississippi, by some means or other, were prevented from exercising the elective franchise.

This is only accounted for in one of two ways: One is that the elections were conducted in such a manner as to prevent them from voting, and the other is that they were ignored by the leaders of the Democracy in these States to such an extent as to discourage them, which always results in a spirit of indifference on the part of those ignored.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I should like to get through with my remarks.

Mr. MONEY. I am very reluctant to interrupt the Senator at that point; but if he wants to know how this happened, I will make reply in substantially the same manner as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has done, that the nomination of the primary convention settles the whole business. The opposition is so small that the votes of the parties interested in the nominating convention and in the nominating primaries are really conclusive of the contest. That is the fact, and the conclusion which the Senator draws, while he no doubt thinks it is perfectly logical, is not so by any means.

On the contrary, there has never been a contest in Mississippi in which any fraud or violence on our part has been charged by anybody. The facts show and the records of the House of Representatives show that a Democrat who was elected by what was considered a fraudulent election was unseated by a Democratic House and a colored man put in his place, and the Democrat who was unseated immediately joined the Republican party because he said the Democrats did not stand by him.

I want to say that in another contested-election case in that House, in which it was alleged that certain means were exerted to keep the colored people from the polls, a Republican committee seated the Democratic contestee, and there has not yet been a contest made that has been successful in a Congressional case, although a number of elections have been held since that constitution went into effect; and before that time there had never been any charge of fraud, intimidation, or violence.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether there was an election in Mississippi last year?

Mr. MONEY. I presume there was. There were elections in most of the States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator examine his mind and tell me whether he knows?

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes; I will say there was an election there, if you simply want information, because I am willing to give the Senator information at any time.

Mr. CHANDLER. The population of Mississippi is 1,300,000. The vote last year in Mississippi was, Democrat 42,273, Populist 6,097. Why is it that the voters of Mississippi do not take any more interest in their elections?

Mr. MONEY. The Senator was hunting up a little mischief instead of listening to what I said to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall be very glad to hear it again.

Mr. MONEY. The truth of the business is the Senator from New Hampshire knows very well he does not hear what is said by anybody. He is usually hunting up a point on somebody, and I am just as much afraid of him as I am of a monkey turned loose in a powder magazine with a box of matches. I am always expecting mischief from the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that all the explanation the Senator is going to make of the small vote in Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. I thought I had already made the explanation;

but if the Senator has not heard it I will repeat it if the Senator from North Carolina will allow me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to know why the people in Mississippi take so little interest in the elections there?

Mr. MONEY. Would the Senator rather continue questioning me, or will he allow me to answer?

Mr. CHANDLER. I was afraid, from the personal remarks the Senator was making about me, that he was not going to answer the question.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator knows very well I regard him with the greatest kindness and respect, but it is certainly not out of place if I use a simile which is recognized by the Senate; and I am just as likely to be a victim of the Senator's wit as anybody else, as I have been, I believe, once before.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am listening to the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. Very well. Last year there was an election in my State for officers from governor down to constable, except for members of the other House. There was a hot contest in the State. There were two Senators to be elected by the legislature, and a governor of the State was to be elected. In fact, elections were held for all the offices in the State, and the contest was waged at the primaries. The voters in the counties turned out at the primaries, and the nominees of the convention were chosen by a smaller vote than they received in the primaries, because the opposition was so small that nobody thought it worth while to quit fishing or plowing or anything else to go to the polls to vote. The Senator does not consider that the votes cast in the primaries practically settle the question. When the people are called upon to select delegates to the convention they express their wishes as to the selection of the nominees, and the people turned out when the real question was to be decided; that is, as to who should be the nominees. The election was simply a ratification of the action of the people held prior to the convention.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's answer, and I believe it to be a correct statement of the fact. It shows that in Mississippi and one or two other States that I will not mention——

Mr. TILLMAN. And South Carolina as well.

Mr. CHANDLER. Because, if I do, I shall have more than one Senator upon the floor talking to me at the same time—politics has been reduced to a contest in the Democratic primaries.

Mr. MONEY. Very much in the same way that it has been with the Republicans in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. CHANDLER. In the Democratic white primaries; and the black voters in those States have been absolutely excluded from any participation whatever in politics, either in the primaries or at the regular elections by the people. That is the situation; I do not deny it. [Laughter].

Mr. PRITCHARD. I believe I shall proceed, Mr. President.

In reply to my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], I desire to say that his statement of the case within itself is enough to convince anyone that there is not that fair consideration of public questions in the State of Mississippi which should be accorded to people residing in that State. If I understand the Senator correctly, those who attend primaries have the power to absolutely name the individuals who are to fill the offices. To all intents and purposes you had just as well let your primaries settle the matter, and not have the formality of an election.

If this policy is persisted in by the Democratic leaders in the South, the day is not far distant when only those who hold office and those who expect to run for office will participate in the management of the governmental affairs in that section.

I call attention to the fact that in those States wherein these unconstitutional methods have been invoked it has been rendered impossible to secure a fair discussion and consideration of the great public questions that command the attention of the American people and of the arraignment of any public abuses that naturally result from the rule of the machine at the bar of public reason.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina excuse me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I should like to proceed with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. MONEY. I want to call the Senator's attention to his use of the words "unconstitutional methods." We do not know of any such methods in Mississippi, and I beg the Senator to exclude Mississippi from the statement, for we have not resorted to unconstitutional methods there.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I have been informed that in the State of Mississippi unconstitutional methods have been invoked in order to give the Democratic party the majority which it claims in that State. I am informed also that while the constitution of Mississippi is fair on its face, it has been administered, as was said in the case of Yick Wo vs. Hopkins, "with an evil eye and an unequal hand."

Before the war it was the slave owners and the aristocratic classes who dominated the politics of the Southern States, and we are rapidly drifting to a point where only the favored few will be given political preferment. It is, indeed, a sad day for republican institutions when the majority of the people for any cause fail to vote on the great questions of the hour. It is a fact that the blight known as dry rot on the limbs of trees will eventually reach the trunks and result in their destruction; and it is equally true that in a republican form of government, where any part of the government fails to perform its functions, it is only a question of time when the citizens of that State will lose interest in public affairs, and, as a result of the corrupt influences that naturally thrive under such conditions, will culminate in the complete overthrow of its republican institutions.

We have heard a great deal of late about the Goebel election law, enacted by the legislature of the State of Kentucky, but after a careful comparison of the Goebel election law with the one which was passed by the Democratic legislature of North Carolina at its last session, I do not hesitate to say that our election law is in every respect a more unjust and discriminating measure than the Kentucky statute. Section 11 clothes the registrars of the election with a judicial discretion to be exercised in passing upon the qualifications of applicants for registration, and many of the qualifications enumerated in said section are not to be found in that section of our State constitution which contains the prescribed qualifications of an elector.

This section was drawn for the express purpose of enabling the unscrupulous election registrar to deprive the citizens of the State of the rights that are vouchsafed to them by the constitution of the State of North Carolina as well as of the Constitution of the United States.

The idea of requiring the voter to prove his age and date of birth by two creditable witnesses! There are not half a dozen members of this body, if called upon by one of those registrars to prove by two creditable witnesses that they were born on a certain day, would be able to comply with its provision. It was enacted solely with a view of depriving those who might oppose the Democratic party of the rights which are guaranteed them by the Constitution.

Mr. President, unless I am badly mistaken, the people of North Carolina will never submit to the enforcement of such an outrageous and infamous law. The people of that State are noted for their conservatism, and it affords me pleasure to state that the statute in question does not reflect the honest sentiment of a majority of the Democratic party. It was conceived and enacted by the self-constituted leaders whose chief desire was to secure their own preferment regardless of the effect that it might have on the fortunes of the good citizens of that section.

I regard the proposed amendment as an attempt to legalize the fraudulent methods and practices of the Democratic party that have obtained in the conduct and control of elections in the past.

Take the election law in connection with the proposed amendment, and you will have no difficulty in divining the true intent and purpose of the Democratic party in submitting this proposition to the people.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I wish to inquire if he is referring to a violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. PRITCHARD. In reply to my distinguished friend from Nebraska, I desire to say that I am referring to an amendment which is proposed to our State constitution, restricting the right of suffrage.

Mr. ALLEN. Would not such a restriction be in violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It certainly would be, if I am correct in the views I entertain in reference to the question.

Mr. ALLEN. It seems to me that to adopt such an amendment to a State constitution would be a violation of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. PRITCHARD. In reply to the Senator's question, I desire to say that I do not think it is the purpose of a majority of the people of the State of North Carolina so to do, but the Democratic party of that State has submitted an amendment of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. Such an amendment would be declared by the courts to be in violation of the spirit or the letter of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I have great confidence in the patriotism of the people of North Carolina, and I do not believe that they will ever permit such an unjust proposition to become a part of the constitution of our State.

The Republican party can not afford to fold its hands and permit the Democratic party to again secure political ascendency in the nation by resorting to such unrepublican and unconstitutional methods. No public question is ever properly settled until it is settled in accordance with the principles of justice, and while the Democracy of the South has apparently been having its own way since 1876, it has at last reached that point where every move which it may make in the future looking to the deprivation of the voters of the South of those rights to which they are entitled will be promptly met. Some of the Democratic newspapers in my State are attempting to construe my action in this respect to mean an attack upon the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent. The statement is false and without foundation and is made for the purpose of preventing the people from giving to this subject that careful consideration to which it is entitled.

I am indebted to the people of North Carolina for all that I am. I stand ready and willing on any and all occasions to defend her good name when assailed. If the people of North Carolina had been consulted in regard to the proposed amendment, it would not have been submitted to them for their consideration. A more loyal, devoted, and patriotic people are not to be found in any State of this Union. The resolution was introduced for the purpose of calling the attention of the country at large to the iniquitous scheme which had been proposed by the leaders of the Democracy of that State for the purpose of enabling that party to retain control of our affairs regardless of the will of the majority of our people.

North Carolinians have always done their duty in every great emergency in which they have been called upon to act, and if the people in that State are given an opportunity to express themselves freely at the ballot box at the next election, they will consign to oblivion those who now seek to do that which can only result in great injury to the welfare of our people, and which will impede the rapid strides we are now making in our industrial development.

Mr. President, I understand that a number of my Democratic friends in the Senate desire to discuss this question, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the resolution may lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not object; but I myself desire, in connection with this resolution, at some time to submit a few remarks, occasioned by the extraordinary speech of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on the 8th of January. I should go on to-day were I not informed that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] prefers to speak; and therefore I give notice that I shall make those remarks to-morrow after the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] has spoken upon the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. TURNER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 45) declaring the purpose of the United States with reference to the Philippine Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from Washington, which will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 45) declaring the purpose of the United States with reference to the Philippine Islands was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Government and people of the United States have not waged the recent war with Spain for conquest and for the acquisition of foreign territory, but solely for the purposes set forth in the resolution of Congress making the declaration of war, the acquisition of such small tracts of land or harbors as may be necessary for governmental purposes being not deemed inconsistent with the same.

SEC. 2. That in demanding and in receiving the cession of the Philippine Islands it is not the purpose of the Government of the United States to secure and maintain permanent dominion over the same as a part of the territory of the United States, or to permanently incorporate the inhabitants thereof as citizens of the United States, or to hold said inhabitants as vassals or subjects of this Government; and the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands.

SEC. 3. That the United States, having accepted the cession of the Philippine Islands from Spain, and having by force of arms overthrown all organized authority and opposition to the authority of the United States therein, the duty and obligation rest upon the United States to restore peace and maintain order throughout the same; to protect in said islands the enjoyment of life and property and the pursuit of lawful avocations; and to continue such protection until the power and duty to maintain said protection shall have been transferred and intrusted by the United States to a government of the people of said islands deemed capable and worthy to exercise said power and discharge said duty.

SEC. 4. That when armed resistance to the authority of the United States shall have ceased within said islands, and peace and order shall have been restored therein, it is the purpose and intention of the United States, so soon thereafter as the same can be practically and safely accomplished, to provide the opportunity and prescribe the method for the formation of a government by and of the people of the Philippine Islands, to be thereafter independently exercised and controlled by themselves, it being the design of the United States to accord to the people of said islands the same measure of liberty and independence which have been pledged by the Congress of the United States to the people of Cuba.

SEC. 5. That when a stable government shall, by the method aforesaid, have been duly formed and erected in said islands, competent and worthy, in the judgment of the United States, to exercise the powers of an independent government and to preserve peace and maintain order within its jurisdiction, it is the purpose and intention of the United States, reserving to themselves only such harbors and tracts of land as may be needed for coaling stations or other governmental purposes, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights and territory secured in said islands under the treaty with Spain, and to thereupon leave the dominion and control of the islands to their people.

SEC. 6. That when said government has been thus formed and set up in the Philippine Islands and approved by the United States, it is the design and intention of the United States, through such means and measures as may be deemed most efficient and appropriate, to secure the guarantee of the continued independence of the same.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, we have now had at the present session of Congress in this Chamber two deliverances on the Philippine question from an Administration standpoint—one by the President in his annual message to Congress, and one by the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] in the speech delivered by him in this Chamber on Tuesday of last week. I think it may be presumed that both deliverances were authoritative—that of the President, of course, because it was the utterance of the President; that of the Senator from Indiana because we were told by the inspired press that its delivery was determined after consultation with the President, and because the Senator himself told us substantially that its delivery at the then early period in the session was on account of the general desire of Senators and Members of the other House to have an expression of his views at the earliest practicable moment. I think it may be presumed also that a discussion of the subject from two such distinguished sources would conclude everything that could be said on that side of the question. Notwithstanding this, I must confess that for one I am still unregenerate and unconvinced. Neither the stately periods of the President's message nor the fervid oratory of the Senator's address can change the truth of history or metamorphose a proposed course of action, already partially completed, which involves a shocking breach of national faith into an act of policy defensible on grounds of justice, morality, and national duty. I call the President's policy a proposed course of action, because, while he is fully committed to it and has endeavored to carry it out so far as lay in his power, the path of honorable retreat is yet open to the American people. The President himself has consistently maintained that the ultimate disposition of these islands is for the determination of Congress. Everybody knows who knows anything that the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain was not intended to cut off or abridge either the right or the opportunity for the fullest range of discussion and decision by the American Congress. Everyone knows, likewise, that that treaty would never have been ratified if there had been an intimation in this Chamber by any person that Congress would be embarrassed in considering the matter de novo and wholly without reference to any changed aspect in the legal status of the matter by reason of the ratification of the treaty.

Approaching the question, then, as if it were still open and unconcluded, as it in fact is, the first thing that strikes my mind, and which ought to strike every rightly constituted mind, it seems to me, is the breach of faith involved in the pretensions put forth by the President and in the resolutions of the Senator from Indiana of a right to absorb and govern the Philippine Islands wholly without reference to the consent of the people of those islands. That people alone of all the Asiatic peoples has shown a remarkable aspiration for liberty and independence, and a no less remarkable resolution and courage in the effort to attain those great blessings. For three hundred years they waged against Spain an intermittent warfare for independence, for the right to govern themselves in their own way, under their own laws, and by their own rulers. One of those struggles had only lately terminated when our own war with Spain began, and it had terminated on conditions that were honorable and advantageous to the insurrectionists. I shall not stop here to discuss the charge which has been made, that the leaders of the Filipino people in that struggle had sold them out for a moneyed consideration. If true, it argues nothing against what I shall say during the progress of my remarks. The people of the Philippine Islands—and I refer now more particularly to those who are engaged in war with our own country—are a brave, resolute, liberty-loving people, and the struggles which they have made to secure liberty and independence for themselves ought to win them the respect and admiration of every member of the American Senate. When our war with Spain began it found these people restless and discontented, it is true, but still generally at peace with their rulers. We induced them to break that peace. Our diplomatic agents hunted up their leaders, then dispersed throughout the world, and induced them to return to their homes and to their people and to foment another insurrection. Our warships conveyed those leaders to their native shores and landed them there. Our functionaries, both civil and military, furnished them with money, with arms, and with munitions of war. When these leaders had been landed among their people they told them that the great North American Republic was at war with Spain; that it had invited their assistance and cooperation; that the result would be the expulsion of Spain from the Philippines, the extinction of her power in that quarter of the globe, and the realization of their own long-cherished hopes and aspirations for liberty and independence; and basing their action upon these statements, they appealed to the people of the Philippine Islands to again rise in revolt against the power of Spain. This appeal was responded to promptly and with remarkable unanimity, and thereafter the war was waged with such ardor and vigor that when our own land forces had reached the vicinity of Manila they found the interior of the island of Luzon entirely cleared of hostile Spanish forces. Such as were not then prisoners of war were beleaguered by the insurgents in the city of Manila, and their spirit and their courage were so broken by the assaults which they had been compelled to resist on the part of the Filipinos that after a sham battle they surrendered themselves and their city to the American forces. Undoubtedly if our forces had delayed their arrival at Manila only a few weeks, the insurgents themselves would have forced a surrender of the city at the point of the bayonet.

These facts are shown to be true beyond any question by documents in our possession. These documents also show that the Filipinos never had any idea from the beginning of their struggle that they were fighting for anything other or less than their own independence from all foreign domination. Yet the President of the United States in his annual message makes the unfounded assertion that the idea of independence on the part of the Filipino people was an afterthought, founded on the sinister ambitions of certain of their leaders. Here is what he says on that subject. After having spoken of the arrival of the commissioners appointed by him to visit the islands, he says:

> But before their arrival at Manila the sinister ambition of a few leaders of the Filipinos had created a situation full of embarrassment for us and most grievous in its consequences to themselves. The clear and impartial preliminary report of the commissioners, which I transmit herewith, gives so lucid and comprehensive a history of the present insurrectionary movement that the story need not be here repeated. It is enough to say that the claim of the rebel leader that he was promised independence by any officer of the United States in return for his assistance has no foundation in fact and is categorically denied by the very witnesses who were called to prove it. The most the insurgent leader hoped for when he came back to Manila was the liberation of the islands from the Spanish control, which they had been laboring for years without success to throw off.

Against this unfounded declaration I appeal to the truth of history as exhibited in the documents submitted to us by the President himself and vouched for as authentic and worthy of credit. The first of these documents to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is a proclamation issued by the Filipino junta in Hongkong before the departure of Admiral Dewey's fleet to engage the Spanish fleet in the bay of Manila. This proclamation is found in Senate Document No. 62, part 1, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, which document embraces our treaty of peace with Spain, the proceedings of our peace commissioners at Paris, and the testimony submitted to them there, and is a part of the testimony which they had under consideration at that time. Now, what does this proclamation say?

> Compatriots: Divine Providence is about to place independence within our reach, and in a way the most free and independent nation could hardly wish for.
>
> The Americans, not from mercenary motives, but for the sake of humanity and the lamentations of so many persecuted people, have considered it opportune to extend their protecting mantle to our beloved country, now that they have been obliged to sever connections with Spain, owing to the tyranny this nation is exercising in Cuba, causing enormous injury to the Americans, who have such large commercial and other interests there.
>
> At the present moment an American squadron is preparing to sail for the Philippines.
>
> We, your brothers, are very much afraid that you may be induced to fire on the Americans. No, brothers, never make this mistake. Rather blow your own brains out than fire a shot or treat as enemies those who are your liberators.
>
> Your natural enemies, your executioners, the authors of your misery and unhappiness, are the Spaniards who govern you. Against these you must raise your weapons and odium; understand well, against the Spaniards and never against the Americans.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the date of that proclamation?

Mr. TURNER. The date is not given in this publication, but it is stated in the publication that the proclamation was in advance of the sailing of the American squadron for the harbor of Manila. The proclamation is preceded by the following statement:

> The following is a translation from the Spanish of a proclamation of the rebel leaders in Hongkong, sent over to the Philippines in advance of the American squadron.

The next thing that happened was that General Aguinaldo, the leader of the insurgents, appeared in the city of Singapore about the 28th of April, 1898, and there he was sought by Mr. E. Spencer Pratt, consul of the United States in that city, and after an interview between them the following correspondence passed between Mr. Pratt and Admiral Dewey. Mr. Pratt telegraphed:

> Aguinaldo, insurgent leader, here. Will come Hongkong arrange with commodore for general cooperation insurgents Manila if desired. Telegraph.
>
> PRATT.

To which Commodore Dewey replied:

> Tell Aguinaldo come soon as possible.
>
> DEWEY.

What passed between Consul Pratt and Aguinaldo is stated in a publication in the Singapore Free Press of Wednesday, May 4, 1898, which Consul Pratt incloses in a dispatch to the Secretary of State, and he says in reference to this publication:

> I regret to have to report that the circumstances attending the departure from here of Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo to join Commodore Dewey, which I had endeavored so hard to prevent being disclosed, were in substance made public in yesterday's edition of the Singapore Free Press, from the inclosed copy of which you will note, by reference to my reports Nos. 212 and 213 of the 28th and 30th ultimo, respectively, that though the facts are in the main correctly given, the dates are not quite accurate and a certain amount of conjecture has been indulged in as regards my action in the matter and that of the Commodore.

Here is what this newspaper says passed between Aguinaldo and Consul Pratt, and which Consul Pratt says is substantially correct:

> During this conference, at which Mr. Bray acted as interpreter, General Aguinaldo explained to the American consul-general, Mr. Pratt, the incidents and objects of the late rebellion, and described the present disturbed state of the country. General Aguinaldo then proceeded to detail the nature of the cooperation he could give, in which he, in the event of the American forces from the squadron landing and taking possession of Manila, would guarantee to maintain order and discipline amongst the native troops and inhabitants in the same humane way in which he had hitherto conducted the war, and prevent them from committing outrages on defenseless Spaniards beyond the inevitable in fair and honorable warfare. He further declared his ability to establish a proper and responsible government on liberal principles, and would be willing to accept the same terms for the country as the United States intend giving to Cuba.

That is what Aguinaldo told Mr. Pratt he expected from the Government of the United States in return for the cooperation of himself and his countrymen. And this is what the same newspaper account reports Consul Pratt as saying and doing in response to Aguinaldo's declaration:

> The consul-general of the United States, coinciding with the general views expressed during the discussion, placed himself at once in telegraphic communication with Admiral Dewey at Hongkong, between whom and Mr. Pratt a frequent interchange of telegrams consequently took place.

Mr. President, a few days after this interview between Aguinaldo and Consul Pratt, and after Aguinaldo had gone to join Commodore Dewey, the Filipinos then residing at Singapore, exiles from their country, desiring to recognize the interposition of Consul Pratt in favor of their country, gave him a complimentary serenade, which is also reported in the Singapore Free Press, and which he transmits with his dispatches to the Secretary of State of the United States. This report throws further light upon the relations between this consul and this leader of the insurgents, and shows what the Filipinos had a right to expect from the Government of the United States. At this serenade an address was made to Consul Pratt by Dr. Santos, one of the Filipino refugees, and in the course of that address he said:

Mr. SPOONER. From what page is the Senator about to read?

Mr. TURNER. From page 351 of this document. He said:

> Our countrymen at home, and those of us residing here, refugees from Spanish misrule and tyranny in our beloved native land, hope that the United States, your nation, persevering in its humane policy, will efficaciously second the programme arranged between you, sir, and General Aguinaldo in this port of Singapore, and secure to us our independence under the protection of the United States. Our warmest thanks are especially due to you, sir, personally, for having been the first to cultivate relations with General Aguinaldo and arrange for the cooperation with Admiral Dewey, thus supporting our aspirations which time and subsequent actions have developed and caused to meet with the applause and approbation of your nation. Finally, we request you to convey to your illustrious President and the American people, and to Admiral Dewey, our sentiments of sincere gratitude and our most fervent wishes for their prosperity.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When was that?

Mr. TURNER. On June 8, and it is reported in the Straits Times, of Singapore, of June 9.

Consul Pratt, in his reply, does not deny that he had promoted this arrangement to secure the independence of the Filipino people under the protection of the United States. On the contrary, his reply tacitly admits it. He says:

> I am thankful to have been the means, though merely the accidental means, of bringing about the arrangement between General Aguinaldo and Admiral Dewey, which has resulted so happily. I can only hope that the eventful outcome will be all that can be desired for the happiness and welfare of the Filipinos. My parting words to General Aguinaldo were, "General, when you have proved yourself great, prove yourself magnanimous," and from the treatment accorded to the recent Spanish prisoners it would appear that he had done so.

The next document to which I wish to call attention, and all of these documents are appended to the Spanish treaty and were submitted to our commissioners at Paris, is the letter from Aguinaldo to the President, dated June 10, 1898. This letter is found on pages 360 and 361 of Senate Document No. 62:

> CAVITE, June 10, 1898.
>
> To the President of the Republic of the Great North American Nation.
>
> DEAR AND HONORED SIR: I come to greet you with the most tender effusion of my soul and to express to you my deep and sincere gratitude, in the name of the unfortunate Philippine people, for the efficient and disinterested protection which you have decided to give it, to shake off the yoke of the cruel and corrupt Spanish domination, as you are doing to the equally unfortunate Cuba, which Spain wishes to see annihilated rather than free and independent, giving her, to quiet her and to cicatrize the deep wounds made in her heart by the iniquities committed upon her children, a false autonomy, of which one bold blow of the Governor-General may deprive her immediately, as she has no colonial army to serve as a counterpoise to the almost sovereign powers of that supreme authority.

At the same time, as I am always frank and open, I must express to you the great sorrow which all of us Filipinos felt on reading in the Times, a newspaper of the greatest circulation and reputation in the whole world, in its issue of the 5th of last month, the astounding statement that you, sir, will retain these islands until the end of the war, and, if Spain fails to pay the indemnity, will sell them to a European power, preferably Great Britain.

After going on and arguing against such a course, he concludes in the last paragraph of this letter by stating:

I close by protesting once and a thousand times, in the name of this people, which knows how to fight for its honor by means of its improvised warriors and artillery men, against the statement published by the Times, mainly for the purpose of casting a blot in history upon its glorious name; a people which trusts blindly in you not to abandon it to the tyranny of Spain, but to leave it free and independent, even if you make peace with Spain, and I offer fervent prayers for the ever-increasing prosperity of your powerful nation, to which and to you I shall show unbounded gratitude, and shall repay with interest that great obligation.

The next document to which I call the attention of the Senate is a letter from Consul Wildman to Aguinaldo from Hongkong. The date is not given here, but it is contained in a dispatch to the State Department by Consul Wildman dated August 7. I see that in the body of the dispatch he says he wrote this letter to Aguinaldo on July 25, 1898.

If you stand shoulder to shoulder——

Mr. QUARLES. On what page is that found?

Mr. TURNER. It is page 339, at the bottom of the page. In this letter to Aguinaldo Consul Wildman says:

If you stand shoulder to shoulder with our forces, and do not allow any small differences of opinion and fancied slights to keep you from the one set purpose of freeing your island from the cruelties under which you claim it has been groaning for so many hundred years, your name in history will be a glorious one. There are greater prizes in the world than being the mere chief of a revolution.

Now, mark this language:

Do not forget that the United States undertook this war for the sole purpose of relieving the Cubans from the cruelties under which they were suffering, and not for the love of conquest or the hope of gain. Whatever the final disposition of the conquered territory may be, you can trust to the United States that justice and honor will control all their dealings with you. The first thing is to throw off the Spanish yoke. Do not let anything interfere with this.

Now, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing that these representations were brought to the attention of the Department, I refer the Senate to a memorandum made by Secretary J. B. Moore for the information of Secretary Day, dated June 22, 1898, and found in this publication on page 340. This memorandum says:

For the Secretary:

Here are two dispatches from Mr. Pratt, consul-general at Singapore, respectively numbered 214 and 217.

No. 214 incloses a copy of Mr. Pratt's confidential No. 212, to which you have already replied.

It also incloses a copy of his No. 213, narrating his parting interview with General Aguinaldo. Mr. Pratt states that in this interview he enjoined upon General Aguinaldo the necessity, under Commodore Dewey's direction, of assuming absolute control over his forces in the Philippines, since no excesses on their part would be tolerated by the United States, the President having declared that the present hostilities with Spain were to be carried on in strict conformity with the principles of civilized warfare. Mr. Pratt states that to this injunction General Aguinaldo gave his full assent, assuring him that he intended, and was able, when in the field, to hold his followers, the insurgents, in check and lead them on "as our commander should direct."

General Aguinaldo, as Mr. Pratt reports, "further stated that he hoped the United States would assume protection of the Philippines for at least long enough to allow the inhabitants to establish a government of their own, in the organization of which he would desire American advice and assistance." "These questions," says Mr. Pratt, "I told him I had no authority to discuss." This confirms Mr. Pratt's statement, in his recent telegram, that he confined his action to bringing General Aguinaldo and Commodore Dewey together.

The only intimation in this whole record from beginning to end that the Filipinos or anybody acting for them ever expressed a willingness to accept anything less than their independence is contained in a letter addressed by Consul Williams at Manila to Secretary Day, dated June 16, 1898, in which he states that in a conversation with Aguinaldo the latter had stated that certain of his leaders had expressed a willingness to accept annexation to the United States. Yet, Mr. President, Aguinaldo, in the letter to the President which I have already read, dated June 10, 1898, six days before this supposed conversation between himself and Consul Williams, had notified the President that when peace was finally concluded between the United States and Spain he expected that it would be done upon terms that would concede the independence of the Philippine Islands.

Moreover, Aguinaldo, in a letter to Consul Williams, dated August 1, 1898, only one month and fourteen days after this supposed conversation between himself and Consul Williams, argued strenuously and forcefully in favor of the independence of the Philippine Islands and gives no intimation whatever that in any conversation with Consul Williams he had indicated the willingness of anybody connected with the Philippine republic to accept annexation to the United States. This letter is so pathetic and affecting and breathes so high a spirit that it would move the heart of anybody not impervious to generous and magnanimous feelings. I desire to read a few of its passages to the Senate in this connection. It is found in the Senate document before read from, on pages 398 and 399. He says:

Why do not the American generals operate in conjunction with the Filipino generals and, uniting the forces, render the end more decisive?

Is it intended, indeed, to carry out annexation against the wish of these people, distorting the legal sense of that word? If the revolutionary government is the genuine representative, by right and deed, of the Filipino people, as we have proved when necessary, why is it wished to oppress instead of gaining their confidence and friendship?

It is useless for me to represent to my compatriots the favors received through Admiral Dewey, for they assert that up to the present the American forces have shown not an active, only a passive, cooperation, from which they suppose that the intention of these forces are not for the best. They assert, besides, that it is possible to suppose that I was brought from Hongkong to assure those forces by my presence that the Filipinos would not make common cause with the Spaniards, and that they have delivered to the Filipinos the arms abandoned by the former in the Cavite Arsenal, in order to save themselves much labor, fatigue, blood, and treasure that a war with Spain would cost.

But I do not believe these unworthy suspicions. I have full confidence in the generosity and philanthropy which shine in characters of gold in the history of the privileged people of the United States, and for that reason, invoking the friendship which you profess for me and the love which you have for my people, I pray you earnestly, as also the distinguished generals who represent your country in these islands, that you entreat the Government at Washington to recognize the revolutionary government of the Filipinos, and I, for my part, will labor with all my power with my people that the United States shall not repent their sentiments of humanity in coming to the aid of an oppressed people.

Say to the Government at Washington that the Filipino people abominate savagery, that in the midst of their past misfortunes they have learned to love liberty, order, justice, and civil life, and that they are not able to lay aside their own wishes when their future lot and history are under discussion. Say also that I and my leaders know what we owe to our unfortunate country, that we know how to admire and are ready to imitate the disinterestedness, the abnegation, and the patriotism of the grand men of America, among whom stands preeminent the immortal General Washington.

You and I both love the Filipinos; both see their progress, their prosperity, and their greatness. For this we should avoid any conflict which would be fatal to the interests of both peoples, who should always be brothers. In this you will acquire a name in the history of humanity and an ineradicable affection in the hearts of the Filipino people.

Mr. President, can anybody read these documents and say truthfully that the idea of independence was an afterthought with the Filipino people? On the contrary, from the very beginning, from a period anterior even to the outbreak of hostilities between our Government and Spain, they were advising us in any and every possible way that the stake for which they were fighting and for which they expected to fight was the independence of their beloved country. Nor is it strictly true, Mr. President, to say that they were never promised their independence. A fair reading of these letters of Consul Pratt and Consul Williams would induce us to say that they were promised independence by those officials, if not in express terms, at least by necessary implication. A reading of the letters from General Anderson, the commander of our forces at Cavite before the arrival of General Merritt in that country, would also carry the same intimation to that people. I want the Senate to listen to what General Anderson said to them at that time. On the 4th day of July, 1898, General Anderson indited a letter to General Aguinaldo, and said to him in that letter, among other things:

Mr. SPOONER. On what page is that found?

Mr. TURNER. That letter is found on page 390. General Anderson wrote to Aguinaldo as follows:

GENERAL: I have the honor to inform you that the United States of America, whose land forces I have the honor to command in this vicinity, being at war with the Kingdom of Spain, has entire sympathy and most friendly sentiments for the native people of the Philippine Islands.

For these reasons I desire to have the most amicable relations with you, and to have you and your people cooperate with us in military operations against the Spanish forces.

In another letter found in this document, at page 391, dated July 6, 1898, General Anderson says to Aguinaldo:

Very soon we expect a large addition to our forces, and it must be apparent to you as a military officer that we will require much more room to camp our soldiers, and also storeroom for our supplies. For this I would like to have your excellency's advice and cooperation, as you are best acquainted with the resources of this country.

It must be apparent to you that we do not intend to remain here inactive, but to move promptly against our common enemy; but for a short time we must organize and land supplies and also retain a place for storing them near our fleet and transports.

I am solicitous to avoid any conflict of authority which may result from having two sets of military officers exercising command in the same place.

I am also anxious to avoid sickness by taking sanitary precautions. Your own medical officers have been making voluntary inspections with mine and fear epidemic disease, if the vicinity is not made clean. Would it not be well to have prisoners work to this end under the advice of the surgeons?

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we had no prisoners at that time, but the only Spanish prisoners were those held by the forces of the Philippine republic.

Mr. McLAURIN. Whose letter is that?

Mr. TURNER. That is General Anderson's letter to General Aguinaldo. The last letter from General Anderson to which I shall call the attention of the Senate is dated July 23, 1898, and in it he says to Aguinaldo:

GENERAL: When I came here three weeks ago I requested your excellency to give what assistance you could to procure means of transportation for the American army, as it was to fight in the cause of your people. So far we have received no response.

As you represent your people, I now have the honor to make requisition on you for 500 horses and 50 oxen and ox carts.

If you can not secure these, I will have to pass you and make requisition directly on the people.

The cause of these letters and other letters, and acts of a similar character, with which I shall not further weary the Senate, was explained in the testimony of General Merritt, given before our peace commissioners at Paris. That testimony, or so much of it as I will read, will be found on page 367 of Senate Document No. 62. Among other things, General Merritt says to the commissioners:

Before that time, rather early after my arrival there at Manila, I had telegraphed to the War Department of the possible trouble that might arise with the insurgents, and asked for instructions as to whether I should consider them as enemies and treat them accordingly in such case. To that request I had no reply, and the consequence was I had to mix diplomacy with force in order to avoid a tilt with them. I knew if bloodshed was once had that would be the end of an amicable status there, and to that end I was careful only to enforce that which was proper and which I conceived must be executed in order to have my troops fully occupy the ground we had taken.

Mr. President, when Secretary Day heard of this interview between Aguinaldo and Consul Pratt at Singapore and of the letter addressed to Aguinaldo by Consul Wildman at Hongkong he took occasion to write a letter to each of those officials disavowing their course, but he never disavowed, nor did any other official of this Government ever disavow the course of those consuls to Aguinaldo or to anybody else, although we were then in daily communication with Aguinaldo in and about the vicinity of Manila. Why was not this done? The answer is obvious and is indicated in the testimony of General Merritt. We desired the friendly cooperation and assistance of the Filipinos in our war with Spain. We knew that if we disclosed to them our purpose to absorb their land and deny their independence, we would not only not have their friendly cooperation and assistance, but we would have their active opposition. We knew that we would be at war, not only with the Spaniards but with the Filipinos, from the very moment that we set foot upon the soil of those islands.

Mr. President, does not this whole miserable history bear out the statement with which I began, that we owe that to the Filipinos, by virtue of what has transpired, which, if we now go on with our pretensions against their liberty and their independence, will be looked on as a gross breach of faith upon the part of the American people? Whatever may be said as to actual promises of independence, it is indisputable, nobody can deny it, that we sought and accepted the assistance of the Filipinos, knowing that the stake which they fought for was independence, and when they had almost won their independence, when it required but one more effort on their part to clear their soil from the last vestige of Spanish dominion, we, their professed friend and ally, without any previous intimation of our purpose, stepped into the shoes of Spain and opposed our overwhelming power to the accomplishment of their long-cherished hopes and aspirations. Mr. President, our conduct then and there has no parallel in the history of the world from the beginning of time down to the present moment. If it be persisted in it will be worse than Punic faith. Beside it Punic faith will hereafter be considered as full observance of honorable obligations. It is indescribable. To the honest, unperverted American mind it is inconceivable. I venture the assertion that there is not one American voter in a hundred who would not have repudiated as perfidious and dishonorable the pretensions put forth by the President of the United States and by the resolutions of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], if they had been called upon with full knowledge of all the facts, to sanction them in the beginning and before the present desolating war began. The truth of the matter is that those pretensions have from the beginning and do now constitute a stain on the honor of this nation, which we may atone for if we will, but which can never be entirely wiped out. The man or men who have put us in this position before the world deserve and will receive the condemnation of the American people. That people have a conscience which stings and an honor which reprobates when they see injustice perpetrated by their servants and in their name on a helpless and deserving people. Those in high places who have stifled their own consciences at the dictation of political expediency will learn that fact to their sorrow long before this deplorable chapter in our national history is closed forever.

Mr. President, the President in his annual message to Congress predicated our right in the Philippines on the ground that we had done nothing and promised nothing to the inhabitants of those islands which precluded us in honor from acquiring them, and on the further ground that we had legally purchased those islands from Spain, their former owner, and he declared, therefore, that they are ours by every title of law and equity. I do not believe that they are ours by either title. If they were private possessions, any court of equity adjudicating between ourselves and the Filipinos, even Judge Day himself, in his capacity as a judge of the circuit court of the United States, administering equity, would be compelled to declare on the record that, instead of being trustees of those islands under God, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] thinks we are, we are in truth and in fact trustees de son tort, in fraud of the rights of the Filipinos. The suggestio falsi and the suppressio veri are both there for the purpose of constituting the equitable jurisdiction. Nor do I believe it lies in our mouth to say that we hold a legal title to those islands. Caveat emptor. How could we purchase from Spain something which Spain herself did not possess? How could the Filipinos be bound by the empty act of Spain in undertaking to sell a sovereignty which they had wrested from her by the God-given right of revolution? If it be said that while Spain had lost her sovereignty de facto it still existed de jure, I say that as to us she had lost her sovereignty both in law and in fact. We can not be permitted in any forum, either of law or conscience, to breathe both hot and cold to the Filipinos. Having assisted them to destroy the sovereignty of Spain, we can not be permitted now to turn around and say that while it is true that that sovereignty had departed as a fact, it still existed de jure, for the purpose of purchase by us. And I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if we have any rights whatever in the Philippines, it is by purchase, pure and simple, and nothing else. At the time of the signing of the protocol, which ended the war with Spain, we were not in possession of a single foot of territory in the Philippines which had not before that been wrested from Spain by the victorious armies of the Philippine republic, and by them surrendered to us as an act of comity to a friend and an ally. Judge Day himself places this matter right in a publication from him which I saw in the public prints a few weeks ago, and in which he points out that such rights as we do possess in the Philippines we acquired by purchase, and not by conquest. I am sorry that I have not the very full and satisfactory expression of Judge Day upon this subject to present to the Senate now in connection with my remarks.

It may be assumed by some that any discussion of the status of this country in the Philippine Islands from a legal standpoint is abstract and profitless since our sovereignty has been declared by treaty and is therefore fixed in all our own forums. But is it so fixed, Mr. President? Neither that instrument nor any other to which the Filipinos were not parties can fix it in the forum of conscience. That forum finds its being in the Congress of the United States primarily, with right of appeal to the people of the United States in their collective capacity as the ultimate sovereign to whom all questions of conscience must in the end be submitted and decided. That people will determine hereafter, whatever Congress may now do, whether the Philippines "are ours by every title of law and equity." Our people are broad, generous, humane, and magnanimous, and their every instinct is for right and justice. I can not doubt that, when the matter is submitted to them understandingly, they will render a just and righteous verdict. In the meantime, what a cause and what a forum for an advocate filled with holy zeal for justice and with righteous indignation against wrong perpetrated in high places! Oh, for a Burke, or a Fox, or a Pitt to demand justice for an outraged people, and to scourge with scorpion whip the cant and hypocrisy that would oppress them under the guise of extending liberty and civilization.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana did not address himself to our position in the Philippines from the standpoint of right and justice. His address was a rhapsody directed to our interests and our senses; and while it was very beautiful, he must pardon me for saying that it lacked that majestic harmony which can be evoked only when the nobler chords are struck. We now know from his address, if we did not before know, that the islands are both rich and beautiful, that their climate is salubrious, their waters healing, their soil fertile, their productions diversified, their position commanding, and that the opportunities to exploit them for our enrichment are many and manifold; but we do not know by what right Spain, after being expelled from them by their 10,000,000 inhabitants, could sell them and their inhabitants to us without the consent of the latter, nor do we know by what right the United States, after having assisted to expel Spain from those islands, could buy them and their 10,000,000 inhabitants without the consent of the latter. Nor does the Senator from Indiana tell us, unless he intends us to infer the right from the claim which he makes, that the Filipinos are a barbarous race of people and that the principles of liberty declared by our great political charter were never intended to have application to such a people. But the Senator must pardon me again if I express doubt whether his opportunities have been such as to constitute him an authority on the subject of the capabilities of the Filipino people. We all know that his ability to travel through the island of Luzon and to mix with its people was much restricted during his recent visit to the Orient, and the same may be said of all the other islands, unless possibly we except that group governed by the Sultan of Sulu. Those islands, I believe, at the time of the visit of the Senator had been won over to friendly consideration by the extraordinary means which that great Oriental statesman,

Li Hung Chang, advised us to employ in the efforts to pacify all of the islands. But there are others, whose opportunities have been greater than those of the Senator from Indiana, who tell us a different story concerning the capabilities of the Filipinos; and I prefer, as I have no doubt the country will prefer, to believe them rather than to accept the version of the Senator from Indiana.

Admiral Dewey tells us, from observation and experience with the Filipinos, that they are far more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba. He reiterated this in his views formulated for the information of our peace commissioners at Paris. In those views, which are published in Senate Document No. 62, on page 383, I find, among others, this statement from Admiral Dewey. It is very brief:

> In a telegram sent to the Department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that "these people are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races." Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. As the Senator is speaking of Admiral Dewey's testimony in connection with this matter, I should like to ask him if he has ever found in any official dispatch whether or not Admiral Dewey made a compact with Aguinaldo as to the conditions on which the war should be prosecuted?

Mr. TURNER. I have found nothing on that subject in the documents published.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether there is any evidence that there were any active insurgents in the Philippine Islands when Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet? The Senator speaks of our assisting the insurgents to take possession of the Philippine Islands. When the news of Dewey's victory went around the world, and when, as the Senator says, we began to assist the insurgents to take possession of the islands, were there any active insurgents in all the islands?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. If so, I should be very glad to be informed of it, because I had supposed there were none.

Mr. TURNER. I shall not take the time to turn to the letter now, but the Senator will find in this publication a dispatch from Consul Williams, at Manila, to Secretary Day, before the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Spain, in which Consul Williams told Judge Day that there were 5,000 armed insurgents then in and around the city of Manila.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no doubt there were plenty of armed Filipino insurgents at Hongkong, but I have yet to see any reliable evidence that the insurrection at that particular time had one particle of vitality in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TURNER. Then the Senator has not read this correspondence, which I commend to his consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, there were undoubtedly insurgents, inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, with arms which they were ready to use if they were encouraged and assisted, as the Senator says, by the United States, but that the insurrection had any vitality whatever on the day of Dewey's victory I have never believed.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Washington, I will read from page 319 of Senate Document No. 62, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, a letter from Consul Williams, dated February 22, 1898, in which he says:

> Peace was proclaimed, and since my coming festivities therefor were held; but there is no peace and has been none for about two years. Conditions here and in Cuba are practically alike. War exists, battles are of almost daily occurrence, ambulances bring in many wounded, and hospitals are full.

That was February 22, 1898, before we declared war.

> Prisoners are brought here and shot without trial, and Manila is under martial law.
>
> The Crown forces have not been able to dislodge a rebel army within 10 miles of Manila, and last Saturday, February 19, a battle was there fought and five dead left on the field. Much of such information is found in my longer dispatch, referred to, and which is at your command.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, the difficulty is for me to understand, if that be true—and I am not now prepared to say that it is not true, although I somewhat doubt it—why Aguinaldo and all the leaders of the rebellion had gone off to Hongkong to enjoy the money of the Spanish Government, which had been agreed to be paid to them as a reason for abandoning the insurrection.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator one question. I inquire if the Senator has formed his opinion on this subject in ignorance of that fact?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALIAFERRO in the chair). The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the consent of the Senator from Washington, I will read some additional testimony from Mr. Williams, under date of March 19, 1898, page 320 of the same document. He writes to the Assistant Secretary of State as follows:

> SIR: Matters are in a serious state here. I have daily communication by cable and letter with Commodore Dewey, but we pass letters by British and other shipmasters and by private parties, because cables and letters are tampered with.
>
> Insurrection is rampant; many killed, wounded, and made prisoners on both sides.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> Rebellion never more threatening to Spain. Rebels getting arms, money, and friends, and they outnumber the Spaniards, resident and soldiery, probably a hundred to one.

If Mr. Williams was a liar, he ought not to have been there as the consul of the United States.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, to proceed with the tenor of my remarks and to return to the question of the capacity of the Filipinos for government, the next document to which I call the attention of the Senate is a dispatch from Consul Williams to the Secretary of State, found on pages 327 and 328, written a very short time after the battle of Manila Bay. It is dated May 12, 1898. He says to the Secretary:

> These natives are eager to be organized and led by United States officers, and the members of their cabinet visited me and gave assurance that all would swear allegiance to and cheerfully follow our flag. They are brave, submissive, and cheaply provided for.
>
> To show their friendliness for me as our nation's only representative in this part of the world, I last week went on shore at Cavite with British consul, in his launch, to show the destruction wrought by our fleet. As soon as natives found me out, they crowded around me, hats off, shouting "Viva los Americanos," thronged about me by hundreds to shake either hand, even several at a time, men, women, and children striving to get even a finger to shake. So I moved half a mile, shaking continuously with both hands. The British consul, a smiling spectator, said he never before saw such an evidence of friendship. Two thousand escorted me to the launch amid hurrahs of good feeling for our nation, hence I must conclude—

And it is these conclusions of Consul Williams, to which I wish the particular attention of the Senate:

> First. Our squadron can force surrender in a day. Spaniards are all cooped up in Manila.

This was before our troops got there at all.

> Second. Spanish officers of native regiments away, these 6,000, together with selections from the 37,000 insurgents, can give us ample land force, and can be well armed with rifles of Spanish soldiers and from barracks and arsenals.
>
> Third. Few United States troops will be needed for conquest, and fewer still for occupancy. Expulsion of Spaniards—naval, civil, military, and clerics—will remove all discord and danger, and civil government, crude in the beginning but better than the present, will be easy and be well received, while native priests, of which there are many, can fully and with perfect acceptability meet all religious requirements so far as present established religion is concerned.

Consul Williams in this letter states to the Secretary of State that the government of these insurgents, while crude in the beginning, would be better than that which was then being administered by the Spaniards in that country. Can it be that a people who could administer better government than the Spaniards are capable of administering can be truthfully said to be barbarians?

The next evidence to which I shall call the attention of the Senate on this subject is a letter from General King, very much in line with that of Admiral Dewey. This letter is dated San Francisco, June 22, 1899. It is found published in Senate Document No. 66, and is as follows:

> SAN FRANCISCO, June 22, 1899.
>
> To the Editor of the Journal, Milwaukee, Wis.
>
> DEAR SIR: Thinking over your telegram and request of June 7, I find myself seriously embarrassed. As an officer of the Army, there are many reasons why I should not give my "views of situation in the Philippines, how long fighting is likely to continue, and thoughts as to America's part in future of islands."
>
> The capability of the Filipinos for self-government can not be doubted. Such men as Arellano, Aguinaldo, and many others whom I might name are highly educated; nine-tenths of the people read and write, all are skilled artisans in one way or another; they are industrious, frugal, temperate, and, given a fair start, could look out for themselves infinitely better than our people imagine. In my opinion, they rank far higher than the Cubans or the uneducated negroes to whom we have given the right of suffrage.
>
> Very truly, yours,
>
> CHARLES KING,
> Brigadier-General.

After the surrender of Manila two of the officers of Admiral Dewey's fleet obtained leave of absence with a view of making a tour of the island of Luzon and of reporting officially to Admiral Dewey what they had observed during that tour. Those officers were Paymaster W. B. Wilcox, of the United States Navy, and Naval Cadet Leonard R. Sargent, also of the same service. They passed all of the months of October and November in the interior of the island of Luzon, traveling about from place to place. As officers of the United States, they were received in every community which they visited with the utmost friendliness and with the very highest honors which the people were capable of offering to them. After they returned they made a report to Admiral Dewey concerning what they had observed, and here is what they had to say concerning the education and intelligence of the natives:

> 53. The Philippine officers, both military and civil, that we have met in all the provinces we have visited have, with very few exceptions, been men of intelligent appearance and conversation. The same is true of all those men who form the upper class in each town. The education of most of them is limited, but they appear to seize every opportunity to improve it. They have great respect and admiration for learning. Very many of them desire to send their children to schools in the United States or Europe. Many men of importance in different towns have told us that the first use to be made of the revenues of their government, after there is no more danger of war, will be to start good schools in every village. The poorer classes are extremely ignorant on most subjects, but a large percentage of them can read and write.

Further on in this report, concerning the popular sentiment on the subject of independence, it is stated:

57. Of the large number of officers, civil and military, and of leading towns people we have met nearly every man has expressed in our presence his sentiment on this question. It is universally the same. They all declare they will accept nothing short of independence. They desire the protection of the United States at sea, but fear any interference on land. The question of the remuneration of our Government for the expense of establishing a protectorate is never touched upon. On the subject of independence there is, again, a marked difference between the four provinces first visited and those of Ilocos Sur and Union. In the former there is more enthusiasm—the sentiment is more of the people; in the latter it is more of the higher class and of the army. In these provinces we have seen signs of actual discontent with the existing state of things.

This report from which I have read was submitted by these officers to Admiral Dewey, and received from him this indorsement:

FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA,
Cavite, P. I., December 1, 1898.

Approved and respectfully forwarded for the information of the Navy Department.

Especial attention is invited to this interesting and carefully prepared report, which, in my opinion, contains the most complete and reliable information obtainable in regard to the present state of the northern part of Luzon Island.

GEORGE DEWEY,
Rear-Admiral, U. S. N., Commanding Asiatic Station.

One of these officers afterwards wrote an article for the Outlook, embracing in a more popular form the results of his observations and those of Paymaster Wilcox while engaged in making that tour. This article is also published in Senate Document No. 66, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session. I desire to have read the parts of it which are found on pages 1 and 2 of the document down to the bottom of page 2, and I send the document to the desk for that purpose.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE BACKWOODS FILIPINO.

[By Leonard R. Sargent.]

It has been my privilege to have been intimately associated with the Filipino people for a short time at a most interesting period of their history. With the permission of Admiral Dewey, I spent the greater part of the months of October and November of 1898, in company with Paymaster W. B. Wilcox, United States Navy, in the interior of the northern part of the island of Luzon. It will be remembered that at that date the United States had not yet announced its policy with regard to the Philippines. The terms of the treaty with Spain were being negotiated by our commissioners at Paris, and the fate of the islands hung in the balance. In the meantime the native population, taking matters into their own hands, had declared their independence from all foreign jurisdiction and had set up a provisional government, with Aguinaldo at its head.

Although this government has never been recognized, and in all probability will go out of existence without recognition, yet it can not be denied that, in a region occupied by many millions of inhabitants, for nearly six months it stood alone between anarchy and order. The military forces of the United States held control only in Manila, with its environs, and in Cavite, and had no authority to proceed further, while in the vast remaining districts the representatives of the only other recognized power on the field were prisoners in the hands of their despised subjects. It was the opinion at Manila during this anomalous period in our Philippine relations, and possibly in the United States as well, that such a state of affairs must breed something akin to anarchy.

I can state unreservedly, however, that Mr. Wilcox and I found the existing conditions to be much at variance with this opinion. During our absence from Manila we traveled more than 600 miles in a very comprehensive circuit through the northern part of the island of Luzon, traversing a characteristic and important district. In this way we visited seven provinces, of which some were under the immediate control of the central government at Malolos, while others were remotely situated, separated from each other and from the seat of government by natural divisions of land, and accessible only by lengthy and arduous travel. As a tribute to the efficiency of Aguinaldo's government and to the law-abiding character of his subjects, I offer the fact that Mr. Wilcox and I pursued our journey throughout in perfect security, and returned to Manila with only the most pleasing recollections of the quiet and orderly life which we found the natives to be leading under the new régime.

Some years ago, at an exposition held at Barcelona, Spain, a man and woman were exhibited as representative types of the inhabitants of Luzon. The man wore a loin cloth and the woman a scanty skirt. It was evident that they belonged to the lowest plane of savagery. I think no deeper wound was ever inflicted upon the pride of the real Filipino population than that caused by this exhibition, the knowledge of which seems to have spread throughout the island. The man and woman, while actually natives of Luzon, were captives from a tribe of wild Igorrotes of the hills, a tribe as hostile to the Filipinos as to the Spaniards themselves, and equally alien to both. It is doubtful to what extent such islanders are responsible for the low esteem in which the Filipino is held; his achievements certainly have never been well advertised, while his shortcomings have been heralded abroad.

The actual, everyday Filipino is not as picturesque a creature as the Igorrote. The average human imagination has a remarkable affinity for the picturesque; and the commonplace citizen of Luzon is too often overlooked in the presence of the engrossing savage. If the observer's attention can be drawn to the former, however, much that is of interest will be found in his comparatively homely life.

In our journey we traveled first across the province of Nueva Iclja, by far the poorest and least interesting of all the provinces we visited. And yet even here we were greatly surprised by the intelligence and refinement of the inhabitants. While our entertainment at first was meager—for want of the wherewithal to provide a more generous one—we could nevertheless detect the same spirit of hospitality that found vent in elaborate manifestations in the richer towns which we visited later.

We were particularly struck by the dignified demeanor of our hosts and by the graceful manner in which they extended to us their welcome. We had unlimited opportunities for conversation with the citizens of the towns, and we found everywhere a class that gave evidence of considerable culture and a certain amount of education. Their education included those branches only which were taught at the schools conducted by the priesthood at the capital towns of the provinces, and was of rather an impracticable nature. The Spanish language, Spanish history (appropriately garbled), church history, and the dead languages evidently formed its leading features.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand that the Senator from Washington would prefer to continue to-morrow, in view of the extended remarks he has made this afternoon; and with the Senator retaining the floor, if there is no objection, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I should like very much to have passed a bill to which I am sure there will be no objection. It proposes to divide one of the New York judicial districts, which is very much crowded with business and about which bill both of the New York Senators have spoken to me. If the Senator will allow that to be submitted to the Senate before making his motion, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall not make the motion until the Senator from Massachusetts has had an opportunity to present the bill, if the Senator from Washington does not object.

Mr. TURNER. I have no objection, if I may be permitted to go on to-morrow at the close of the morning hour and finish my remarks. I prefer to go on this afternoon and finish my remarks unless——

Mr. HOAR. I will ask unanimous consent to call up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield the floor?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the morning business, the Senator from Washington may proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington shall be entitled to the floor after the morning business is concluded to-morrow.

Mr. SPOONER. To finish his remarks.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the routine business.

Mr. TELLER. After the routine business.

Mr. SPOONER. After the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Ross] has already given notice of his intention to speak to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Vermont will speak after the Senator from Washington has finished.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 9, at the end of line 2, page 5, to insert:

And shall perform the duties and receive the salary and compensation now incident to their respective offices.

So as to read:

All other officers who have been heretofore appointed for the northern district of New York who shall be in office at the time of the taking effect of this act shall continue in office as officers of the district of their residence until the expiration of their respective terms, and shall perform the duties and receive the salary and compensation now incident to their respective offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "act," in line 10, section 9, page 5, to insert:

Or returnable thereto.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or affect the jurisdiction of the district court of the northern district of New York in any case, civil or criminal, pending therein at the time of the passage of this act, or returnable thereto, but the same shall be proceeded in to final disposition as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE AT PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. DEPEW. I am directed by the Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 55) authorizing the President to appoint one woman commissioner to represent the United States and the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution at the unveiling of the statue of Lafayette at the exposition in Paris, France, in 1900, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was reported from the Committee on Industrial Expositions, with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "President," to strike out "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall" and insert "may;" and at the end of line 8 to insert "and at the exposition then to be held;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President may appoint one woman commissioner to represent the United States and the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution at the unveiling of the statue of Lafayette and the presentation of a tablet for said statue at Paris, France, in 1900, and at the exposition then to be held.

That said commissioner shall not be entitled to receive compensation for any services rendered in connection with this mission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it was distinctly understood by the French Government that there should be no female representation at the exposition. If I am not very much mistaken, and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will remember that question, it was understood that it was the desire of the French Government that there should be no women representatives sent there on the part of the United States, and now, in direct violation of that provision, this woman is to go there. She will go there as a representative of the Government at that exposition, the way the amendment reads. I make the suggestion whether or not it is proper, in view of the fact that the French Government does not want them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In view of the fact that this question has arisen, I renew my motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator to kindly yield to me to have a bill passed. It will take but a moment.

Mr. DEPEW. I did not, nor do I know, of any such restriction on the part of the French Government. The joint resolution was prepared by the Daughters of the American Revolution, of which the president-general is Mrs. Daniel Manning, widow of the late Secretary of the Treasury in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet, and it was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. It came before our committee, and we thought that under the circumstances surrounding the testimonial presented it was a very admirable appointment to be made. Therefore we favorably reported the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that it lie over for a day.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will lie over for a day, but I should like to have the Senator from Iowa speak in regard to the matter. It came up before him; he was present. I do not remember that there was any official representation, but the Senator recollects the circumstances very distinctly.

Mr. ALLISON. That question arose as respects commissioners to the Paris Exposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a report upon that question made by our commissioner, the commissioner who preceded the present commissioner-general, and I think it was understood that as respects the exposition itself there would be no opportunity for a representation of work of women distinctively, but that all the exhibits were to be placed in groups, and that woman's work as such could not have a distinctive place; and our arrangement was for an appropriation in accordance with that understanding. I understand this to be a different matter. This relates to the unveiling of the Lafayette statue.

Mr. DEPEW. If the Senator will excuse me, there is no appropriation asked for in the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that. I observe that there is no appropriation, but this is a proposition to have a woman representative present at the ceremony of the unveiling of the statue of General Lafayette, the principal amount of the cost of the statue having been contributed by the children of the United States. The Government, however, did contribute a portion of the amount—$25,000. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] reminds me of the fact that the Daughters of the Revolution were active in promoting the matter of the statue. I think if the Senator from New York will allow the joint resolution to lie over until to-morrow the matter can be adjusted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to a lady representative at that unveiling. I think that is very appropriate, so far as I am concerned, but the few little words put in at the end, "and at the exposition then to be held," I shall move to strike out.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not observe the last clause, which I think is rather an important one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did observe it, and that is the reason why I called attention to it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 23, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 22, 1900.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Thomas B. Hildebrand, of Albia, Iowa, to be receiver of public moneys at Rampart City, Alaska, vice John C. W. Rhode, resigned.

SUPERVISOR OF CENSUS.

Daniel H. Wheeler, of Omaha, Douglas County, to be a supervisor of the Twelfth Census for the Second supervisor's district of Nebraska.

POSTMASTER.

Frank W. Rollins, to be postmaster at Ellsworth, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine, in the place of H. H. Harden, whose commission expires February 11, 1900. The nomination of Franklin W. Rollins to the above-named office is hereby withdrawn.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

PAY DEPARTMENT.

Capt. Alfred S. Frost, Twenty-second United States Infantry, to be paymaster with the rank of major, January 20, 1900, vice Hamner, retired from active service.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

GENERAL OFFICERS.

To be brigadier-generals.

Col. George M. Randall, Eighth Infantry, United States Army, January 20, 1900.

Col. James M. Bell, Twenty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers (lieutenant-colonel Eighth Cavalry, United States Army), January 20, 1900.

FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Sergt. Charles McG. Sweitzer, Company B, Forty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers, to be second lieutenant, January 19, 1900, vice Jones, honorably discharged.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn January 22, 1900.

Second Lieut. Charles B. Drake, Fifth Cavalry, which was submitted to the Senate January 15, 1900, for promotion in the cavalry arm, United States Army, with a view to his nomination with an earlier date of rank.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 22, 1900.

SUPERVISORS OF TWELFTH CENSUS.

Daniel H. Wheeler, of Omaha, to be a supervisor of the Twelfth Census for the Second supervisor's district of Nebraska.

Andrew J. S. Thomas, of Greenville, Greenville County, to be a supervisor of the Twelfth Census for the Fourth supervisor's district of South Carolina.

George M. French, of Hot Springs, Garland County, to be a supervisor of the Twelfth Census for the Fifth supervisor's district of Arkansas.

POSTMASTERS.

Julius R. Langner, to be postmaster at Birdsboro, in the county of Berks and State of Pennsylvania.

Francis Ball, to be postmaster at Pocatello, in the county of Bannock and State of Idaho.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 22, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Leave was granted Mr. MCCALL to withdraw papers from the files of the House, without leaving copies, in the case of Martha W. Pollard, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. FITZPATRICK, indefinitely, because of serious illness in his family.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to call up the motion to reconsider the question of reference of certain portions of House Document No. 291, and, as I understand there is a chance for a good deal of time to be taken in discussion, I ask unanimous consent that all action heretofore taken on the subject in dispute be rescinded and the whole matter left to the Speaker to refer, as in his judgment, after investigation, he shall determine to be right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that all action heretofore taken in this matter be set aside and the question of reference be left to the Speaker. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all proceedings that have been had in regard to the change of reference in this matter be set aside and the question of reference be left to the Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I presume that simply means that the Speaker will take it and refer it as an original proposition?

Mr. HULL. That is right.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that there ought to be some understanding as to whether there may be an appeal, as in the usual cases, I mean; whether an exception may be taken from the action of the Speaker of the House, as exists in all cases of reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state in this connection that under clause 3 of Rule XXII, as the Chair understands it, there are three methods of referring a bill. One by unanimous consent of the House, which is usually submitted by the Chair; one on the motion of the chairman of the committee to which the bill has been referred, and one on the motion of the chairman of the committee that desires the reference. If this request be granted, the Chair would still feel compelled, under the rules, to follow the first method, namely, to submit the change of reference to the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to what he considers the course he would have to pursue.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that, but of course the point raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, under the present decision of the Chair, would not deprive the House of any of its rights. The two items that are in dispute are the Rock Island Armory, at Rock Island, and the Springfield Armory, at Springfield, for the manufacture of small arms. My only idea in making that request, Mr. Speaker, was that it could be adjudicated by the Speaker after deliberation, and then if either party were aggrieved they would have their right of appeal to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] must bear in mind that there are three methods of reaching the change of an erroneous reference of a public bill. It is a matter that rests with the House. The Chair has indicated the three methods of reaching it. The Chair feels it his duty to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to that.

Mr. HULL. I understand that, Mr. Speaker. My only idea was that it would save time, and the chances are very good that after the Speaker has investigated the matter his action will stand without any challenge from either of these committees.

The action of the Speaker heretofore was this: In the ordinary course of business he referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and then on the challenge of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. HULL. I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, that my understanding of the situation was that this document was sent to the Speaker, and in the ordinary course of affairs was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. On the challenge of the Committee on Appropriations as to whether the reference was correct, the Speaker submitted to the House a proposition to take it from the Committee on Military Affairs and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations; and while I at the time tried to get in an objection, I did not succeed, and the motion to reconsider has been entered for the purpose of bringing it before the House. Now, it will undoubtedly take considerable time to discuss the question, as a good many members are desirous of speaking upon it. In order to avoid that and in order to avoid the delay, I have asked unanimous consent that the whole action be rescinded and that the question be referred to the Speaker as an original proposition, for him to make the reference. Of course either committee feeling aggrieved can bring it before the House if they desire to, but I do not believe that after the Speaker has given it the consideration that he will give before deciding either one of us will feel like challenging his action before the House.

Mr. CANNON. In view of the statement of the gentleman, I am quite content to vacate the orders that have been made, and by unanimous consent to consider this document as on the Speaker's table, and then let the Speaker take such action as, under the rules, is his duty in his judgment, with one further amendment, because we want to have this question settled by the Speaker, after investigation. Then, if either committee or any of the members of the House are dissatisfied, we can proceed further in the ordinary way. On page 135 of the Book of Estimates there is this item:

Infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, including horse equipments for cavalry and artillery.

And the following words are added:

Including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture at the arsenals.

Under the head of "The manufacture of arms" are found the same words:

Including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture.

Now, these two items in principle are on all fours with the document to which the gentleman from Iowa refers, and I am willing to assent to his proposition for unanimous consent, with the addition of these two items.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, they are in the Book of Estimates, and have been referred to the committee, and are in the bill. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman desires to have it done, to leave that to the Speaker also.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. HULL. And of course either party, if aggrieved, can bring the matter before the House if desired.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, they are all the same in principle, and I apprehend that after the Speaker investigates probably neither committee nor any member of the House will object to his decision. I think it will save much time to have the unanimous consent given, modified as I have suggested.

The SPEAKER. Will one of the gentlemen now state the request that is to be submitted to the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let it be stated, so that we can hear it.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair asks that the House may be in order, so that all members may hear it.

Mr. HULL. It is Executive Document No. 291. I do not understand that in this proposed action the Signal Service of the Army is also involved, is it?

Mr. CANNON. No; I think not. It is conceded that the Signal Service of the Army properly belongs, without question, with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. I am glad you do not question it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well——

Mr. HULL. The Rock Island Armory, at Rock Island, Ill., and the Springfield Armory, at Springfield, Mass., together with the two items to which the gentleman has called attention, including tools and fixtures—I do not understand the gentleman to challenge the appropriation for the manufacture?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not at all. It is the two items, "including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture," under the heading "Manufacture of arms," page 136 of the regular Book of Estimates, and the same words on page 135 of the Book of Estimates, and the same words under the title "For purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisition of troops."

Now, I understand that all orders touching the four items are to be vacated, and that the four items, two in the Book of Estimates and two in the document the gentleman read from, are by unanimous consent to be placed upon the Speaker's table, for such action under the rules as he sees proper to take, and that all orders heretofore made with reference to these items be vacated.

Mr. HULL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that on page 135 the words "including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture"——

The SPEAKER. In justice to the House and to the Chair, if this matter is to be left to the Chair, it will be better to have the proposition reduced to writing.

Mr. CANNON. Then I suggest that the matter be temporarily laid aside, and the gentleman from Iowa and I can explain the proposition in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that an argument is really being submitted, instead of a proposition.

Mr. McRAE. Will the Chair be kind enough to state, so that members on this side can understand the question, what the previous action has been on this subject, and what action is proposed to be taken now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in the usual course of business Document No. 291 was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Subsequently two of the three items in the document, namely, those referring to the Rock Island Armory and the Springfield Armory, were, by a request submitted by the Chair to the House, transferred to the Committee on Appropriations. These items have reference to the manufacture of small arms. As soon as this was done, and really before the matter had been completed, it seems that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, addressed the Chair.

The Chair, not hearing him, passed to other business arising on the right, and subsequently, on the suggestion of the Chair, in order to protect the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] in his rights, a motion to reconsider the reference then made by unanimous consent was on that morning entered by the gentleman from Iowa. Subsequently the matter was called up, on Thursday or Friday last, and unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Iowa to discuss the proposition. At this stage of the proceedings the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asked that the matter go over until Monday—that is, until this morning. Now unanimous consent is asked that all proceedings heretofore had be vacated, and that the reference be left to the Speaker, coupled with two new items, referred to in the Book of Estimates, which items the Chair has not been able clearly to understand. The Chair has now asked that this request be reduced to writing for the intelligent consideration of the House and the Chair.

Mr. McRAE. If that consent is granted it leaves it with the Chair to refer the matter to either committee?

The SPEAKER. A request for unanimous consent to vacate the order is submitted. The Chair desires the request to be submitted in writing, as up to this time this morning it seems rather to be an argument than a distinct proposition that has been submitted. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Wisconsin that unless too much time is consumed about it this matter had better be disposed of, as the House does not seem to be crowded with work this morning.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to consume some time. I can yield at any time the gentlemen desire.

The SPEAKER. Very well. With that understanding the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RIGHT OF RAILROAD CORPORATIONS TO USE AND OCCUPY GOVERNMENT GROUND.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House resolution 69.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, if not incompatible with the public interests, be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives—

First. Full, specific, and definite information as to the right and title by which the Pennsylvania and other railroad corporations occupy and use the Government grounds, or what is commonly reputed to be Government property, within the District of Columbia, through what is known as the "Mall," to and including the ground upon which the Pennsylvania depot now stands.

Second. What, if any, rental is being paid for the use of said property.

Third. What, if any, rental should be paid therefor if none is being paid.

The amendments by the committee were as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "the Pennsylvania and other" and insert the word "any."

In line 6, after the word "use," strike out the word "the."

In line 8, after the word "Columbia," strike out the following words: ", through what is known as the 'Mall,' to and including the ground upon which the Pennsylvania depot now stands."

In lines 13 and 14 strike out the following words:

"Third. What, if any, rental should be paid therefor if none is being paid."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put upon the passage, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin why, when dealing with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the House should "request" them instead of "directing" them, and why the qualification is put in that is used in addressing communications to the Executive of the Government of the United States, "if not incompatible with the public interests." It is a mere matter of form, but seems to be a matter of vital form. I would like to know if the gentleman from Wisconsin or his committee had considered the form "request" or "direct."

Mr. BABCOCK. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the resolution was no doubt drawn as resolutions of this class are drawn when addressed to any one of the Departments. That matter was not called to the attention of the committee. I think it is not material.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think it is a bad precedent, but I shall not make a motion to change it.

Mr. DALZELL. Why not have it modified as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BABCOCK. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Strike out the words "if not incompatible with the public interests."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And substitute the word "directed" for "requested."

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, that is identically what I proposed to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin about.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these changes will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution as amended was then agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a moment, in order that the gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on Territories, may submit a request?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts submits the following request.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask its immediate consideration by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

OPENING OF SIXTEENTH STREET.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6777.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6777) relative to the widening and extension of Sixteenth street, in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, within thirty days after the dedication to said District of 75 per cent of the lands lying within the lines of Sixteenth street NW., as extended according to the highway plans, between the Piney Branch and the Blagden Mill road, and also between the Military road and the District of Columbia boundary line, to institute proceedings to condemn the land necessary for the extension of Sixteenth street from Morris street to the District of Columbia boundary line with a uniform width of 160 feet, under the terms and provisions of an act entitled "An act to extend S street in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes:" Provided, That of the amount found due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the extension of Sixteenth street, as in this section provided, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by said jury in said proceedings against those pieces or parcels of ground situated and lying on each side of said Sixteenth street NW. between Morris street and the Blagden subdivision, and between the Blagden Mill road and the Rock Creek or Milkhouse Ford road, and between lots 7, 4, and 11 of A. R. Shepherd's subdivision, to the depth of 250 feet, or to such greater depths as the benefits may be found by said jury to extend, measured on each side thereof from the building lines of said Sixteenth street as extended.

SEC. 2. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as an equity court, shall have authority to empower, order, and decree the committee or guardian of any person of unsound mind, and the guardian or trustee of any infant, owning or having an interest or estate in any land within the limits above described, to dedicate to the District of Columbia for and as a part of said Sixteenth street any land or part thereof owned by such person of unsound mind or by such infant, or in which they may have an interest or estate, if, upon the application of such committee, guardian, or trustee, and after the testimony of witnesses shall be taken and such other proceedings had as the court may deem proper, the court shall determine that such dedication will be to the interest and advantage of such person of unsound mind or such infant.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee as to whether this provision in reference to the condemnation of lands of persons of unsound mind or infants changes the law of the District in that respect?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] who reported the bill, and who will make an explanation of its provisions.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is nearly identical with Senate joint resolution No. 61, which was introduced by Senator MCMILLAN.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say.

The SPEAKER. The point of the gentleman from Alabama is well taken. The House is not in order. It is simple justice to the House that order be restored.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with Senate joint resolution No. 61, which was introduced by Senator MCMILLAN, of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate. It now appears in the House as a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House. This bill is designed to correct and obviate some difficulties which arose in the enforcement of the act approved March 3, 1899, providing for the extension of S street. That act provided for the extension of Sixteenth street upon the dedication of the necessary land by the owners along the route. It has since transpired that part of the owners either refuse or fail to dedicate the necessary land, and it has also been disclosed that the land, or a part of it, required for the extension of this street was in the ownership, part of it, of a lunatic, and another part of it in the ownership of infants, and that, therefore, some special power was needed to condemn that portion of the route.

For the purpose of removing these difficulties this bill is introduced. The first section of it only alters the act of 1899, approved March 3, by providing that upon dedication by 75 per cent of the owners of the land the proceeding may take place; and the second section only provides for a remedy in the cases of ownership of the land by a lunatic or an infant. These are the only changes made, and these changes were made because it was necessary that they should be made to make the act of March 3, 1899, effective and operative.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland whether there is not a general provision in relation to the condemnation of land of persons of unsound mind and of infants? Is there no general law in the District of Columbia to-day for such a purpose?

Mr. PEARRE. I fancy there is a general act covering the subject, but not with sufficient particularity as to cover this particular phase of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why is it necessary to make a particular provision with reference to the condemnation of this land if there is a general statute of the District of Columbia applying to it?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not know exactly why such provision would be necessary, but, whether it be provided for in the general act or not, there can be no possible objection to giving this power, because it gives nothing more than is necessary in such a case.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PEARRE. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. I think it will be found on examination that the act in the District of Columbia for the condemnation of public lands for highways is only the old act that applied to the condemnation of roads; that there is no general act for the condemnation of private lands for public highways for cities, such as is usually found in every city in the country. For that reason we have passed special acts for the opening of streets. I think you will find that there is no general act for the condemnation of land owned by minors or people of unsound mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the gentleman from Missouri examined this bill?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the rights of people of unsound mind and of infants are fully protected by it?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to inquire if there has been any estimate made as to the cost of opening this street; and if so, how much it is?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Colorado that this is simply amendatory of an act passed last March. This is the most extensive street-opening case in the District, and involves a large amount of money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How much?

Mr. BABCOCK. Eight hundred thousand or a million dollars. It is Sixteenth street from the White House to the line of the District. They have met with three pieces of ground; two have refused to dedicate, and the third they can not dedicate under the law, because it is owned by infant heirs and an insane person. All this bill applies to is this third piece of land.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on the District of Columbia any other bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, Mr. Speaker; not to-day.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk of the Clerk to have read my request for unanimous consent in relation to the change of reference of certain portions of House Document No. 291.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa submits a request for unanimous consent, to be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent of the House that all orders touching so much of House Document No. 291, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, as refers to the Rock Island Armory, Rock Island, Ill., and to Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., and touching so much of the estimate of $750,000 for infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipment, submitted on page 135 of the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901, as includes machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture at the arsenals, and touching so much of the estimate of $1,100,000 for the manufacture of arms, submitted on page 136 of the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901, as includes machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture, be vacated, and that the same shall be placed on the Speaker's table for reference under the rules, as though no orders had heretofore been taken by the House or the Speaker touching the reference of these items.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered; and the proceedings heretofore had are vacated.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Big Sandy River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of project for improving the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year ended June 30, 1899—to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of letters and reports relating to the petition of the Allegheny Valley Railway Company for right of way through the Allegheny Arsenal, Pa.—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James O. Earnest against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CORLISS, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 28) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 88); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5) to appoint a commission for the investigation of the pollution of water supplies where such pollution affects or threatens to affect the sanitary condition of the people of more than one State, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 89); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 54) directing a suitable shaft to be placed at the grave of John Tyler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 90); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 59) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress, directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 91); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WATSON: A bill (H. R. 7016) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Richmond, in the State of Indiana—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McCLELLAN (by request): A bill (H. R. 7017) amending the statutes relating to patents, relieving medical and dental practitioners from unjust burdens imposed by patentees holding patents covering methods and devices for treating human diseases, ailments, and disabilities—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 7018) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to enter into a contract for the collection and disposal of garbage and dead animals in said District—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BAILEY of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 7019) to locate and build a civil Federal reformatory at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HENRY of Texas: A bill (H. R. 7020) to provide a government for the Territory of Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: A bill (H. R. 7021) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to cede a portion of cob-dock, navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., to the State of New York—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A resolution (H. Res. 110) relative to the appointment of William A. Watson—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 7022) to pension Rhoda A. Patman—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN of Maine: A bill (H. R. 7023) to correct the military record of Joshua L. Sawyer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 7024) granting a pension to Sarah Herriman—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 7025) for the relief of Richard Burton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7026) for the relief of J. G. Odell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7027) for the relief of Henry Hall—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7028) for the relief of Robert P. Moore—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7029) for the relief of D. M. Simerly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 7030) for the relief of Mary J. Greene—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7031) for the relief of John Ware Page—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 7032) to increase the pension of William A. Warner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7033) for the relief of J. C. Irwin & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 7034) for the relief of the legal representatives of Reuben Opp, deceased, late of Lafayette, Ind.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7035) to correct the military record of George Yeager—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7036) granting an increase of pension to Louis Kimmel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7037) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph Rogers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7038) for the relief of William P. Marshall—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7039) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patterson Mehaffie—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7040) granting a pension to Laura Newman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7041) granting a pension to Minnie L. Gravis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7042) increasing the pension of John H. Jack—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7043) increasing the pension of Richard C. Strumphford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7044) increasing the pension of Winfield Pierce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7045) increasing the pension of Mary J. Hartman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7046) increasing the pension of John N. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 7047) to correct the military record of David W. Smythe—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GROUT: A bill (H. R. 7048) for the relief of Charles Carr, of Jamaica, Vt.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 7049) for the relief of John Barnes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GAMBLE: A bill (H. R. 7050) granting an increase of pension to William J. Remington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 7051) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet A. Fergusson—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOWELL: A bill (H. R. 7052) for the relief of Henry H. Curtis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7053) for the relief of Mrs. Addie L. Potter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JACK: A bill (H. R. 7054) to correct the military record of Thomas S. Byers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7055) granting a pension to John G. Barr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 7056) granting an increase of pension to A. G. Beer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 7057) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Easterly, deceased, late of Grundy County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7058) for the relief of the legal representatives of P. M. Craigmiles, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7059) for the relief of Samuel Edington, of Monroe County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OTEY: A bill (H. R. 7060) for relief of Dr. R. Gordon Simmons—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIXEY: A bill (H. R. 7061) for the relief of loyal citizens, therein named, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7062) for the relief of Joshua Sherwood and Elizabeth Gray, heirs of Lewis A. and Ellen Sherwood—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 7063) for the relief of Salvador Costa—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7064) for the relief of John Barfield—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7065) for the relief of Chester P. Knapp, of Escambia County, Fla.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 7066) granting a pension to Hiram C. Childress, a soldier of the United States Army in the war with Mexico—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 7067) granting a pension to Nicholas Tolmay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7068) granting an increase of pension to Abraham T. Schenck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THROPP: A bill (H. R. 7069) to correct military record of Joseph P. Swope and remove the charge of desertion therefrom—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7070) to increase the pension of Joseph Shroyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEYMOUTH: A bill (H. R. 7071) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 7072) granting a pension to Mary Barron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of H. C. Chapin and other business men of Union, Iowa, asking for the repeal of the bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of B. D. Herron and others, of Boone, Iowa, urging the passage of House bill No. 5029, to put wood pulp and printing paper on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ALLEN of Maine: Papers to accompany House bill to correct the military record of Joshua L. Sawyer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BABCOCK: Papers to accompany House bill No. 4335, granting a pension to Sarah Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKETT: Petition of post-office clerks at Lincoln, Nebr., favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351, for the reclassification of postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURTON: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Cleveland, Ohio, praying that a franchise be granted to a competing cable company for laying a cable to connect the United States with Cuba—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. CARMACK: Papers relating to the claim of John P. McGraw—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petitions of E. W. Gray, H. H. Palmer, H. B. Potter, a committee, and 66 others, of the State of Florida, favoring a bill providing for the reclassification of the Railway Mail Service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Resolutions of Branch No. 454, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Charleston, S. C., favoring the passage of the bill to equalize the salary of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Report of the committee on city affairs to the New York Board of Trade and Transportation relating to the lack of mail facilities at New York—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petition of selectmen and other town officials and citizens of Wellfleet, Mass., asking for survey of harbor with view to its further protection and improvement—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Boston and Cape Cod railway postal clerks, for the reclassification of the Railway Mail Service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of B. H. Adams, of Chelsea, Vt., protesting against the passage of House bill No. 3988—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 2682, in the matter of granting a pension to Mary J. Lawrence—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petitions of W. S. Morey and others, R. E. Reiniger and others, W. A. Gibbens and others, F. W. Roberts and others, H. Campbell and others, all in the State of Iowa, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. JENKINS: Remonstrance of P. M. Parker and 24 other citizens of Rice Lake, Wis., against a parcel-post system—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McALEER: Petition of John D. Burg and others, of Philadelphia, Pa., asking for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, report of the committee on city affairs to the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, relating to the lack of mail facilities in New York—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MERCER: Petition of employees in the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, Nebr., asking for the modification of the rules governing leaves of absence and sick leaves—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts: Petition of employees of the Haverhill, Mass., post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MOON: Petitions of Voigt & Co. and T. R. Breston, of Chattanooga, Tenn., for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OTJEN: Resolution of the Citizens' Business League of Milwaukee, Wis., in favor of a naval training station at Milwaukee—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PEARCE of Missouri: Petition of Benjamin White, of Montgomery County, Md., to refer claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of J. P. Sellman, administrator of the estate of W. O. Sellman, deceased, of Comus, Md., to refer claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Lewis W. Riddlemoser and Marion F. Riddlemoser, sole heirs of Ephraim Riddlemoser, deceased, late of Frederick County, Md., for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIXEY: Petition of Joshua Sherwood and Elizabeth Gray, heirs of Lewis A. and Ellen Sherwood, deceased, praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6926, granting a pension to Orin A. Carpenter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: Petitions of the Christian Endeavor societies of Grand Rapids; General Conference of Pastors of Grand Rapids; Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary societies and Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Lowell; Ministers' Association of Ionia County; Thomas Young and others, of Orange; N. E. Gibbs and others, of Orleans; E. A. Rood and others, of Berlin Center; Free Baptist Church of Grand Rapids; L. H. Davis and others; Methodist Episcopal Church of South Boston, and of the Mission Guild of Grand Rapids, all in the State of Michigan, against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

Also, petition of post-office clerks at Ionia, Mich., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of Lewis S. Buzzard and 3 others, of Huntington, Ind., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. THROPP: Papers to accompany House bill to increase the pension of Joseph Shroyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WRIGHT: Petition of Samuel Birdsall, M. D., and 2 other physicians of Susquehanna, Pa., asking favorable action on clause in the Agricultural appropriation bill for investigating native drug plants—to the Committee on Ways on Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 23, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

RENT OF OLD CUSTOM-HOUSE IN NEW YORK CITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting certain information relative to an appropriation of $109,847.12 to be included in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay rent for the use of property known as the old custom-house in New York City, formerly belonging to the United States, from August 28, 1899, to June 30, 1900; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6777) relative to the widening and extension of Sixteenth street in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WELLINGTON presented a petition of the clerk of the council of Annapolis, Md., together with copies of resolutions and a petition from the mayor, council, and aldermen of that city, praying that an appropriation of $142,000 be made to improve the harbor at Annapolis and the Severn River in that State, in accordance with the estimate of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, as authorized in the river and harbor act approved June 3, 1896; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Puerto Rico, relative to educational affairs in that island; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of sundry fourth-class postmasters of Berrien County, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an increase in the compensation of fourth-class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Gen. C. C. Andrews, chief fire warden of the State of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a national forest reserve in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of 33 railway mail clerks of St. Paul, Minn., and a petition of 4 railway mail clerks of Faribault, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase American shipping; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the appointment of a commission of business men to study and report upon the industrial and commercial conditions in China; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry druggists of Philadelphia and Lebanon, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Altoona, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the boarding of vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McENERY presented a petition of Branch No. 28, National Association of Post-Office Clerks of the United States, of New Orleans, La., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DEPEW presented sundry petitions of railway mail clerks of Auburn, Jamaica, Mount Vernon, New York City, Westchester, Onondaga, and Oswego, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petitions of Mrs. S. D. Masse, of Niagara Falls; R. T. Booth & Co., of Ithaca; the Morgan Drug Company, of Brooklyn; the Packer Manufacturing Company, of New York City; the Pond's Extract Company, of New York City; the National Remedy Company; the World's Dispensary Association, of Buffalo; of Emile Utard, of New York City, and of Samuel W. Fairchild, of New York City, all in the State of New York, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SIMON presented the petition of J. H. Johnston and sundry other citizens of Oregon, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Redlands, Cal., and a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of San Jose, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HANNA presented the memorials of Dr. John A. Murphy, of Cincinnati; Dr. Ralph J. Wenner, of Cleveland; B. G. Hannum and E. A. Hannum, of Cleveland, and of Dr. N. J. Esch, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Colnmbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present a memorial adopted by the fourth biennial convention of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and as it is very short I will state the substance of it by reading it, without undertaking to boil it down. It is as follows:

Whereas there is an attempt being made in this country to build up a large standing army, and as history will prove that in countries which have large standing armies the toiling masses are oppressed by taxation and are arbitrarily held in subjection: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we do not object to the raising of a sufficient volunteer force in times of war to protect our country and its honor, we view with alarm the present attempt to force upon us a large standing army in time of peace, when neither our country nor its honor are in jeopardy. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, the press, and be printed in the Trainmen's Journal.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCOMAS presented the petition of Mary Bentley Thomas, president, and Margaret Smythe Clarke, secretary, on behalf of the Woman Suffrage Association of Maryland, praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented the petition of Mariana W. Chapman, president, and Isabel Howland, secretary, on behalf of the Woman Suffrage Association of New York, praying for the omission of the word "male" from the suffrage clause of the constitution to be framed for the government of Hawaii, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of sundry druggists of Rutland, Vt., and a petition of sundry druggists of Burlington, Vt., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CARTER presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Missoula, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Fergus Falls, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CULLOM. I present the petition of Mrs. M. K. East and Mrs. E. S. Willoughby, on behalf of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the disfranchisement of citizens of the United States on account of sex. I present also with the petition a letter written by Susan B. Anthony. I should like to have the letter read. It is only four or five lines long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION,
Rochester, N. Y., January 20, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed is a woman suffrage petition, duly signed by two ladies of your State, on behalf of many other citizens, which I wish to ask you to present in the Senate at the earliest opportunity.

Since the right of petition is the only political means through which women can speak to Congress, I trust that you will present this appeal from your disfranchised constituents with the most earnest request for its careful consideration.

Hoping to hear from you favorably, I am, very sincerely yours,
SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the petition and letter be referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEITFELD presented the petition of C. L. Watrous and sundry other scientists, entomologists, nurserymen, and orchardists of the United States, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 2571, to provide rules and regulations governing the importation of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, cuttings, grafts, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of the Haller Proprietary Company of Nebraska, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 992) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Auer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 346) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Arethusa Wright, of Sheridan, Oreg., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1356) for the relief of Edwin L. Field, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2100) granting a pension to Annie E. Brumby, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2052) granting a pension to Mary Stotsenberg, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2034) providing for the repairing of and again placing in commission the U. S. frigate Constitution, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 620) for the relief of Christopher Ellis, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 408) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2223) granting an increase of pension to John M. Morse;

A bill (S. 2386) granting a pension to Joseph E. Hendrickson;

A bill (S. 1592) granting a pension to Jane E. Augur;

A bill (S. 1850) granting an increase of pension to James C. Delaney; and

A bill (S. 2314) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1469) granting an increase of pension to Philip P. Getchell;

A bill (S. 2319) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Hopkins;

A bill (S. 237) granting an increase of pension to Cutler D. Sanborn;

A bill (S. 236) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ellen Lauriat;

A bill (S. 526) granting a pension to Joseph M. Waddell; and

A bill (S. 495) granting a pension to Ambrose J. Vanarsdel.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following joint resolution and bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A joint resolution (S. R. 39) to provide for payment of salary to certain retired officers of the Marine Corps;

A bill (S. 1631) to encourage enlistment in the United States Navy;

A bill (S. 1535) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Navy, and to regulate promotion therein; and

A bill (S. 1632) to amend "An act authorizing certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths," approved January 25, 1895.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 261) granting an increase of pension to Lizzie H. Hyndman, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2447) to place Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5042) to provide for improvements in the tax departments of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1058) granting a pension to John Bailey;

A bill (S. 1059) granting a pension to Silas B. Hensley;

A bill (S. 1068) granting a pension to Jennie A. Kerr; and

A bill (S. 1047) granting an increase of pension to John McGrath.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2346) granting a pension to Alfred Bigelow, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2259) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 726) for the relief of Alice Walsh, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. TURLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a resolution in the case of Mr. Quay, setting forth that he is not entitled to a seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania. I accompany the resolution with the report of the majority of the committee, and accompanying the report of the majority is also the report of the minority of the committee. I ask that the report may be printed. I believe the regular course of the resolution is to go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reports a resolution, which will be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution is at the end of the report. I ask to have it read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution, of course, will go upon the Calendar and the two reports will be printed. I ask that an order be made that a thousand extra copies may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that a thousand extra copies of the resolution and the report of the committee, with the views of the minority, be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] is one of the minority and signed the minority report, the typewritten copy, but the one now presented has come from the Printer and has to be signed the second time, and the name of the Senator from North Carolina is not there. I should like to reserve the right for him to sign it at the desk when he comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be held at the desk, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, until the Senator from North Carolina comes in.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Superintendent of Indian schools 1,000 additional copies of the report of the "Superintendent of Indian Schools," in order to supply the demand therefor.

FORESTRY PRIMER.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing the printing of 35,000 copies of Bulletin No. 24, Department of Agriculture, entitled "A Primer of Forestry," for the use of Congress and the Department of Agriculture, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2623) for the relief of the owners or legal representatives of the canal boats Swan and Lewis and Butler; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2624) granting a pension to Mary Keen;

A bill (S. 2625) granting a pension to Minerva Sturgess; and

A bill (S. 2626) granting a pension to Maria E. Mailley.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 2627) granting equal privileges to per diem employees in the United States Navy outside of Washington, D. C., with those employed at the Executive Department in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2628) granting a pension to Kate Pearce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles; and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 2629) for the relief of John Chambers;

A bill (S. 2630) for the relief of the legal representatives of Merrick, Merrick & Cope; and

A bill (S. 2631) for the relief of G. W. Ebert.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 2632) to correct the military record of John W. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2633) for the recognition of the military service of the "First Union League Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers," or Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Militia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2634) granting arrears of pension to William H. Cummings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2635) authorizing the consolidation of the independent post-offices of Wollaston, Norfolk Downs, and Atlantic, Mass., with the post-office at Quincy, Mass., and making appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 2636) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Law; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2637) granting a pension to James Collins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2638) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to enter into a contract for the collection and disposal of garbage and dead animals in said District; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2639) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 2640) for the relief of the heirs of Gottlieb C. Grammer, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2641) for the relief of representatives of James Hooper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2642) for the relief of Robert F. Thompson for services rendered by him for compilation of the laws relating to Indian affairs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 2643) for the relief of J. J. L. Peel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2644) granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men of the Life-Saving Service, and to their widows and minor children; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Jerome M. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 2646) granting an increase of pension to Don C. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2647) granting an increase of pension to Perry Sullivan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2648) to pay to Jesse M. Blue for grain and stock taken from him by United States troops in July, 1864; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 2649) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Paul, at Franklin, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2650) granting an increase of pension to Katherine Taylor Dodge;

A bill (S. 2651) granting a pension to Henry Hill; and

A bill (S. 2652) to increase the pension of Louisa E. Baylor (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 2653) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin D. Carpenter, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2654) to correct the military record of A. W., alias Washington, Huntley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2655) to amend section 5 of an act to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion, approved August 14, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also, introduced a bill (S. 2656) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 2657) for the relief of Frederick von Baumbach, collector of internal revenue at St. Paul, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2658) for the relief of Hudson Maxim and W. H. Graham in connection with various inventions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 2659) removing the charge of desertion from the record of Robert V. Hancock; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 2660) to amend the proviso of section 3148 of the United States Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2661) to remodel the consular service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 73) for the relief of Thomas Hoyne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 74) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to complete the purchase of a site for the public building at Helena, Mont., at a cost not to exceed $19,500, and to pay for the same out of money heretofore appropriated, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1676) for the payment of certain claims; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

TREATY WITH SPAIN.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 20,000 copies of the message of the President transmitting the treaty of peace with Spain, and the accompanying documents, in one volume, of which 13,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 7,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Labor be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the effect upon labor, production, and wages of the international copyright act approved March 3, 1891, and report the results of his inquiries to the Senate, or through the Bulletin of the Department of Labor: Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized shall be carried out under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the report of the commission appointed, pursuant to an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, to investigate and determine certain facts with reference to the establishment of a free public highway into the Yosemite National Park, heretofore submitted to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to law be printed for the use of the Senate, and that the photographs accompanying the same, illustrative and as a part thereof, be photo-engraved or stereotyped to accompany the said report as a part thereof.

TREATY OR AGREEMENT WITH SULTAN OF SULU.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate a copy of the report and all accompanying papers of Brig. Gen. John C. Bates in relation to the negotiation of a treaty or agreement made by him with the Sultan of Sulu on the 20th day of August, 1899. Said treaty provides that the United States Government will pay the following monthly salaries:

	Per month.
To the Sultan	$250
To Dato Rajah Muda	75
To Dato Attik	60
To Dato Calbe	75
To Dato Joakanain	75
To Dato Puyo	60
To Dato Amir Haissin	60
To Hadji Butu	50
To Habid Mura	40
To Serif Saguin	15

Out of what fund are these salaries paid? What services do these people perform for the United States that entitles them to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States? And are these officers, or any of them, under the civil service?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

TREATY OF 1850 WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of the correspondence in relation to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed the 19th of April, 1850, which has passed between the two Governments, not heretofore communicated.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE WITH COLOMBIA, ETC.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of the correspondence with the Republic of Colombia, in relation to the Panama Canal and to the treaty between this Government and New Granada, concluded December 12, 1846, not heretofore communicated.

NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY OF FRANCE.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish the Senate, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence and communications received by him, or by the Secretary of State, from the New Panama Canal Company of France, or any of its officers or attorneys.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ temporarily an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $100 per month.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. BATE. I ask leave to withdraw from the Committee on Claims the bill (S. 2309) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition of the bill does the Senator ask?

Mr. BATE. I desire such disposition as I may make of it when it comes to the Senate. Let it lie on the table and I shall call it up. I want to amend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee simply desires that the committee shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BATE. The order may come in that form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from Tennessee will be complied with, and the bill will lie on the table for the present.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS BY HON. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Governor Boutwell, of Massachusetts, a few days ago delivered an address in this city on the question of our relation with the Philippines and its bearing on business and labor. I ask unanimous consent that that address may be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object, Mr. President. There must be a limit to the printing of political speeches here for gratuitous distribution, and I think this is a pretty good place to stop.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to have the opportunity to say, in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, that when public questions provoking general interest are discussed by men of eminence and character in the country it seems to me such addresses ought to be allowed to go to the public as the expressions of gentlemen who are on this floor. If there is no other way to get such things printed that come from men of eminence and character and force than to read them on the floor of the Senate, I suppose that method will have to be resorted to. But for one I think that this means of reaching the public with the addresses of men of character and standing ought not to be suppressed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator can adopt Governor Boutwell's ideas and principles as his own, if he sees fit, and make them a part of his own argument at any time. Then there will be some responsible author here for them, and they can properly become a part of the public records.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing, for one, to assume the responsibility for this address.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then the Senator can read it or get some one else to read it.

TRANSACTIONS WITH NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate joint resolution No. 70, favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce, for the purpose of placing it upon its passage. It will not take a minute.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the morning business ought to be concluded before anything of that kind is done. The regular order has not been exhausted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is completed.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the unfinished business coming over from yesterday morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. ALLEN, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to send to the Senate copies of all letters and the substance of any conversation or agreement he may have written or had with A. B. Hepburn, of the National City Bank of New York, in reply to a letter from Mr. Hepburn to him dated June 5, 1897, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The Secretary read in part the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask for a further reading of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 45) declaring the purpose of the United States with reference to the Philippine Islands, upon which the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I referred on yesterday to a letter written by Judge Day explaining the nature of the title which we had acquired to the Philippine Islands and expressed my regret that I did not have that letter with me at the time to refer to and from which to quote. I have the letter this morning, a letter written by Judge Day to ex-Congressman D. K. Watson, of Columbus, Ohio. It was read by the latter at a public meeting in that city. The portion of the letter to which I referred on yesterday is as follows:

> It was not claimed that the United States had a right to the Philippine Islands as a matter of conquest. The United States has never undertaken, so far as I know, to wrest from a foreign country lands or possessions simply by right of conquest. Had we been disposed to do so, it must be remembered that we were in possession only of the city, bay, and harbor of Manila under the protocol of August 12, 1898, providing that the United States should occupy and hold the same pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace, which should determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines.
>
> The capture of the city after the signing of the protocol by General Merritt and his forces, whatever its legal effect may have been, included no more territory than we were entitled to hold under the protocol. In addition to the hope of accomplishing immediate peace, which, I need hardly say, was of great importance at that time, there was a strong desire to treat Spain with a degree of magnanimity consistent with our national honor and prestige, following our national precedent in the treatment of Mexico for the cession of territory to us at the close of the Mexican war.
>
> #### CLEAR TITLE TO THE ISLANDS.
>
> By the cession, for a consideration, we obtained an indisputable title which must be respected by all other nations.

The Secretary had just completed reading an extract from the article of Mr. Sargent published in the Outlook when I gave way for an adjournment on yesterday. I am sorry that all of that article can not be put in the possession of every American voter. It is most instructive and most interesting in the side lights which it throws on the character of the Filipino people and the details it gives of their daily life. It confirms fully all of the general statements of that gentleman which I caused to be read to the Senate on yesterday. That article and the other documents which I submitted to the Senate it seems to me conclusively establish the incorrectness of the position of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] that the Filipinos are on a par with the North American Indians and are entitled to the same and no other consideration. On the contrary, Mr. President, it appears to be true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in this Chamber the other day, that this people are as fitted for self-government as were any of the peoples of this continent south of our own Republic at the time of the recognition of their independence by us. It may be possible, it is no doubt true, that their ideas of free representative government are crude, and that they are unfitted to administer government based on an Anglo-Saxon model; but it is an absurdity, if I may be pardoned the expression, to say that they are barbarians. They have a fair share of education and refinement; they appear to be peaceable and law-abiding among themselves and kindly and hospitable to strangers; they understand that the function of government is to protect life, liberty, and property, and that the duty of the citizen is to yield allegiance in return for that protection. Such a people are within the meaning of the Declaration of Independence; and no nation can undertake to enforce an unwilling government on them without making itself guilty of tyranny and, if it hold to the Declaration of Independence, without stultifying itself in the eyes of the world. I hold, with Abraham Lincoln, that "the framers of the Declaration of Independence meant to establish a standard maxim for free society which should be familiar to all and revered by all, constantly looked to, constantly labored for, and, although never perfectly attained, constantly approximated, and thereby constantly deepening its influence and augmenting the happiness and value of life to all people of all colors everywhere."

Liberty knows no clime, no color, no race, no creed. Its principles, as embodied in the immortal Declaration of Independence, comprehend all time, past, present, and future, and embrace all peoples to whom Almighty God has vouchsafed the instinct of association and the capacity, however limited, for orderly government. The North American Indians do not possess this instinct or this capacity, and the Senator from Indiana was doubtless correct in saying that they were not comprehended within the Declaration; but the same thing can not be said of the Filipinos. They are a people who desire to live in friendly association with their fellows, and who understand that they and their fellows each possess rights which can only be perfectly protected and maintained by a higher power than individual might. In other words, they are fitted for government, and are entitled to the God-given right declared by the Declaration of Independence, of determining for themselves the kind of government they want. This is the essence of all liberty. The Senator from Indiana was wrong in saying that this right is an incident of liberty and not its essence, and that any government which perfectly secures to man life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness gives him the fundamentals of liberty. The first fundamental of all liberty is the right to select your own form of government and your own rulers. The best of all governments is a tyranny if imposed on the governed without their consent.

Mr. Webster well expressed this idea when he said:

> We may talk of it as we please, but there is nothing that satisfies mankind in an enlightened age unless man is governed by his own country and the institutions of his own government. No matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power, no matter how lightly it sits upon the shoulders, if it be not imposed by the voice of his own nation and his own country, he will not, he can not, and he means not to be happy under its burdens.

The right of any people at all fitted for government to establish a bad form of government if they want to, rather than a good one, to imperfectly administer either a good or a bad form of government for themselves, rather than to have one perfectly administered for them by somebody else, is, because of the fact so eloquently expounded by Mr. Webster, as much a God-given right as was the right of the American people at the close of the Revolution to form the most perfect Government ever known to man. Mr. President, it is no impeachment of our own free institutions, nor of the governing capacity of our own people, to say that they can not govern any other people as well as the latter can govern themselves, or to say that to impose our government and our institutions on another people without their consent is to deprive them of their liberty. I assent to and concur in the panegyrics which are being delivered upon our own free institutions and upon the liberty-loving instincts of our own people by the advocates of enforced government in the Philippines; but I can not understand their application to the question in hand, and I confess that I have but little respect for the intellectual processes of the man who thinks that he can see their application. They have one useful purpose, however. They serve to furnish the people with an object lesson showing how it is possible for the greatest of minds, when taken possession of by an indefensible idea, to become involved in hopeless contradiction and in the most palpable stultification.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana indicates the kind of government he would have us give to the Filipinos. It involves an American captain-general, with power to meet daily emergencies, with an advisory council having no power except that of discussion; American lieutenant-governors for the several provinces, with like councils; an American adviser for each district in that country, with a like council; an American board of visitation to visit the archipelago semiannually, with no power other than that of visitation and report; American judges to try all but the very smallest criminal offenses; the introduction of the English language throughout the islands, the teaching of it in the schools, and employing it exclusively in the courts. He would not have us to give that people this extremely liberal government immediately—the time is not ripe for that. At present military government is advisable. Along with this government, when finally established and backed by sufficient power to maintain and execute it, he expects Congress to legislate so as to bring about various beneficial reforms in that country, among which are a Philippine civil service, the abolition of duties on exports, the establishment of import duties on a revenue basis, with discriminations in favor of American imports, so that we may compel the inhabitants to buy our calicoes; a complete reform of local taxation on a just and scientific basis, the minting of an abundance of money, the granting of franchises and concessions upon the theory of developing the resources of the archipelago, the formation of public schools everywhere, the establishment of a simple civil code and a still simpler criminal code, the gradual, slow, and careful introduction of the best Filipinos into the working machinery of the government, and with no promise whatever of the franchise until the people have been prepared for it.

Mr. President, this proposed scheme of government involves both wise legislation and honest administration. It is not surprising that the Senator from Indiana expects to secure the latter, because one who has the high opinion of the virtue and intelligence of the ordinary American ward heeler entertained by the Senator from Indiana could have no doubt of honest administration in a foreign country by any class of our American citizens. But his hope and expectation of securing wise legislation by Congress, in view of the inaction of that body in every direction, save that of furthering the interests of the dominant political party, would hardly seem to me to be well founded. Our experience in Alaska and in Hawaii does not give much of hope and promise to the great majority of the Filipinos striving, according to the President, to come under the dominion of this exceedingly liberal government devised for them by the Senator from Indiana.

The Senator from Indiana expects this government of his, when put in operation, to prove a boon to ourselves as well as to the Filipinos. When we shall have projected ourselves, as it were, on a living screen and seen ourselves in the act of administering it as others see us, he expects the example to have a very beneficial influence here in America. This strong and simple government in the Philippines is by a kind of reflex action to kick us into good government here at home. To paraphrase the biblical quotation employed by the Senator in this connection and to give it the meaning which he evidently intended it to have, "that government which we mete out to the Filipinos, it shall be meted out to us again." Truly a most wise and sapient application of Holy Writ. Who our governor-general shall be when this Filipino government has begun to have the boomerang effect predicted for it by the Senator from Indiana he does not indicate. What language other than our own shall be employed in trying us for crime he leaves to conjecture. Who shall make our civil and criminal code for us, what nation furnish us our judges, what country sell us our calico, what political system develop its ward workers into our political administrators, the Senator leaves in the dark. It is not given to one finite mind to draw great outlines and at the same time to fill in the petty details. No doubt the future Kamchatkan statesman, who comes to us as our proconsul, will be wise and just and humane and the highest example of the then Kamchatkan civilization. That is all we will have a right to expect, and no doubt we will be happy under the laws and the administrators brought with him for our government. We will have to be, indeed, if his government comes, like that of the Senator from Indiana to the Philippines, "backed with sufficient power to execute it." Salve imperator!

Mr. President, already our experience in the Philippines is beginning to have the boomerang effect predicted by the Senator from Indiana. There is a primitive people, a mere handful, living in South Africa, pious and simple, brave and heroic, but careless of the great wealth lying under their hands, indifferent to its civilizing influences, and asking only to be permitted to live their own simple lives in their own simple way.

They are the last link which binds us to one of the great heroic epochs in the world's history, because they are of the same blood and, by reason of their long isolation, they may well be said to be the same identical people who braved the power of Spain when Spain was mistress of the world in order that religious liberty might not perish from off the face of the earth, who fought for eighty years with a desperation and valor never before known in that sacred cause, who pulled down their altars and their firesides, piece by piece and stone by stone, and piled them up as breastworks against the approach of their invaders and oppressors, who gave their land up to the cruel sea, time after time, rather than give it up to the scarcely less cruel Spaniard, who through it all saw their land devastated by fire and sword and rapine, drenched in blood and maimed with slaughter, but who faltered not, and who emerged from the long struggle torn, decimated, bleeding, and impoverished, but rich in the right which they had won for themselves and the heritage which they had won for mankind—the right of each man to worship God after his own fashion.

A great nation having racial tendencies similar to our own has seen the present backward and deplorable condition of affairs existing among those people, and has determined to regenerate and improve them, as we are now regenerating and improving the brave but simple Filipinos. Unhappily, they are not succeeding so well in their self-imposed task as we are doing. The Afrikanders are proving themselves to be worthy sons of heroic sires. If they had lived in that day, they might have sat in council with William the Silent and fought in the ranks of Maurice of Nassau. But living in this day, they are making a struggle equally as heroic as their ancestors made and one which has won for them the wondering admiration of mankind throughout the entire world.

Because of that which we, in common with mankind, owe to their blood, because they are bravely fighting for their homes and their firesides, because they are fighting for the God-given right to govern themselves and their affairs in their own way, because when they go down another republic will have perished, they undoubtedly carry with them in their struggle the profound sympathy of the American people. In other days that sympathy would have been expressed through governmental channels. We have frequently interposed in such struggles with less call upon our sympathy and less justification for our interposition. But now we dare not. The ghost of Liberty, murdered in the Philippines, stands in the way.

Truly we have cast our bread upon the waters. We can not even preserve a decent neutrality between those brave people and their assailants. The latter depredates upon our commerce on the high seas, attempts to destroy it, in fact—because no combatant people will long undertake to deal with another people lacking in the spirit or disposition to protect their own noncontraband trade—and we accept an indefinite promise of some indefinite indemnity in the future as full and complete reparation for the wrongs done to us. Then we permit this same combatant to come into our ports and make them the bases for provisioning and supplying its own armies without protest or shadow of protest on the part of our officials. Mr. President, civilization must go forward and our coadjutor in the great work must not be hampered or interfered with. It is yet permitted to us, however, as individuals, to avert our eyes, and as these noble people with their institutions go down to death and oblivion to say to them, as I now do, Thou last survivors of a heroic age, hail and farewell!

Mr. President, it is not surprising that one holding the peculiar views of government entertained by the Senator from Indiana, and who, after they shall have fruited in the Philippines expects to see their seed wafted back to our own shores, should become impatient of freedom of debate in our legislative halls and attempt to crimp it down to the dimensions of his twentieth-century Filipino government. But as we are yet enjoying in this Chamber the government devised for us by our eighteenth-century ancestors, I thought it a remarkable thing when the Senator from Indiana turned to Senators who have been in public life for a period longer than he has been in existence, and who have honored themselves and their country through it all by an upright bearing, and because they had spoken here freely and honestly, as they had a right to do and as they always ought to do regardless of consequences, should say to them: "The blood of our dead and wounded boys is on your hands, and all the floods of all the years can never wash that stain away." This statement was remarkable because of the fact stated and also because of its utter baselessness. Whoever may be responsible for the precious blood shed in the Philippines, it can not be laid at the door of the men in this Chamber who sought to stay the hand of aggression in that desolated country. Everyone knows that if their advice had been taken the American people would never have been embroiled in war with their friends and allies in the Philippines. Surely, Mr. President, they had a right to give their advice. The blood of our young men is precious; nobody realizes that more than I do; but I am certain that they themselves would pour it out like water as a libation on the altar of their country rather than see freedom of debate in the legislative halls of their country abridged or denied. If the Senator from Indiana is looking for those whose hands are truly red with blood and whose minds should be haunted to the last moment of their lives by the rigid face of the dead American soldier in the Philippines, let him look elsewhere and he may possibly find them, but he will not find them here.

While we are on this subject of bloodshed and the responsibility therefor, I want to ask some man to tell this Senate and the American Republic why it is that the envoys of the insurgents were received with ignominy and contempt when they appeared at our headquarters immediately after the initial outbreak, represented that the collision between their forces and ours was accidental and not designed, and asked for the establishment of a modus vivendi, whereby peace might be maintained pending the settlement of the fate of the islands by the American Congress. Why was their reasonable request denied and they told that since the war had been started it must now be continued to the bitter end? Why do we hear the same vindictive story from the President, from General Otis, from the Senator from Indiana, from the myriad newspapers subsidized to debauch the conscience of the country, that the war once started must now be prosecuted with unrelenting vigor until the Filipino people lie broken and helpless at our feet? Did we not owe something to that people? Were they not lately our companions in arms? Would it not have been generous and humane and magnanimous and American to have listened to their reasonable request for a cessation of hostilities until their fate had been determined by the American Congress? The President has always said that the matter was one for the determination of Congress. Then why not permit Congress to approach its determination with that calmness and moderation which peace alone would have insured? Was it because there was fear that the conclusion reached by Congress might not be that which certain interests in this country desired? I shall not say so, Mr. President, but several things are certain. All the bloodshed in the Philippines since the first outbreak might have been avoided by listening to the reasonable request of the Filipinos for a cessation of hostilities. The American Congress might now be approaching the question of the fate of those islands in a spirit of justice and moderation and of thoughtful regard for the rights of the people of the islands, and there would be no cause, even if one could be found with temerity enough to try it, to attempt to put fetters upon freedom of speech in the American Congress by the parrot cry of "Blood, blood!"

Mr. President, I shall not enter upon an extended constitutional argument concerning the power of Congress to govern the Territories. That power is undoubtedly supreme, with one limitation. The laws enacted for their government must conform to those certain provisions of the Constitution intended to have general application and to embrace all Territories of the United States wherever situated and whatever the form of government enjoyed by them. Those laws must not trench upon the guaranties in favor of the individual security of the citizen contained in that instrument, nor upon those provisions designed to secure, in all the possessions of the United States, uniformity in taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, nor upon those provisions intended to fix everywhere the status of citizens of the Republic.

It was strenuously denied at the last session of Congress in this Chamber that there were any provisions of the Constitution having application to Territories other than that which gave Congress the power to make all needful rules and regulations for their government. But that contention was in the face of a long line of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States which would have staggered anybody except one of our latter-day adepts in twentieth-century government. I have read all of those cases again since the debate at the last session, and I am surprised that any lawyer who cares anything at all for his reputation should hazard it by such a contention. The very cases relied on as most strongly supporting the plenary power of Congress are cases in which the revenue laws of the nation were extended over unorganized Territories of the United States by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution requiring uniformity in taxation.

In addition to the limitation on the power to govern Territories, there is, I believe, a limitation on the power of the Government to acquire them, namely, that they shall have fitness for and be intended for ultimate statehood in the Union of States. This limitation, however, is implied and has its sole sanction in the legislative and executive conscience; and in this utilitarian age, when even the positive written provisions of the Constitution chafe and irritate, it is not to be expected that this limitation would be looked on in some quarters with respect or even with toleration. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court of the United States on more than one occasion has declared that this limitation does in fact exist.

Mr. President, if either of these limitations be admitted to exist, then it puts an end to our pretensions in the Philippines. No person on either side of the Philippine question has ever admitted or will admit, I apprehend, that we can, after any possible lapse of time, admit the Philippine Islands into the Union as one or more of the States of the United States of America. While their people undoubtedly have some capacity for government, they have none whatever for Anglo-Saxon government, and never will have. To admit 10,000,000 Filipinos now, or 20,000,000 or 40,000,000 in the indefinite future, as the case may be, to American citizenship through statehood would be the beginning of the end of the American Republic. I need not argue that proposition. If it be not true, every person in this country, at least, believes it to be true. Therefore, if we are limited in the acquisition of territory to such as may ultimately be erected into States, we must either immediately withdraw from the Philippines or, if we determine to retain them, must immediately proceed to exterminate their inhabitants. There is no middle course. I was about to say that nobody in this country could be brought to contemplate so frightful an alternative, but when I hear warfare upon the Filipinos justified upon the ground of the duty we owe to that people, I shall not hazard any opinion upon that subject.

Mr. President, we are not any better off if it be held that this limitation on the power to acquire territory to which I have referred does not in fact exist. The Constitution of the United States fortunately yet exists, although there is some demand for its partial abrogation by amendment, in order to enable us to meet this Philippine situation, and under the provisions of that instrument these people and their descendants would become citizens of the United States, although not citizens of any particular State. And under the provisions of the same instrument they would become citizens of any State the moment they entered into and became domiciled within its limits. Thus, while we might avoid Philippine statehood, we could not avoid an American Philippine citizenship, with perfect right and title to flow into any of the already organized States and to there assist in controlling their destinies, and, through them, the destinies of the American Republic. I shall not stop now to cite the provisions of the Constitution and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States expounding them under which this condition would be brought about, but I apprehend that no lawyer will deny their existence or their binding force. If any shall do so, I shall be curious to hear the ground upon which he predicates his opinion.

When we shall have finally annexed the Philippines many curious and inconvenient consequences will ensue besides that of debauching the citizenship of the nation. I shall refer now, however, to only one. The Filipino will become entitled to all the rights of citizens of the United States. He can come and go at pleasure everywhere within the confines of the nation. He can bring or send his products here as freely as Americans now interchange their products between themselves and with the same exemption from taxes and duties. This will be to debauch the labor of the country, to pit the 10,000,000 underpaid and underfed Filipinos against the mechanic, the artisan, and the laboring man of the land. If it be true, as claimed by the Senator from Indiana, that the Filipinos will not come here because the Dutch did not permit the Javanese to go to Holland, their products will come here, and that will be the same thing from the standpoint of labor. If this be a good thing to bring about, why is it that we have upon our statute books restrictions against the landing of Asiatics on our shores and against their right to apply for naturalization in our courts? It would seem that this rage for dominion is growing so fast that it is not only causing our people to be dissatisfied with their own political institutions, but is causing them to reverse their policy in almost any and every direction.

Mr. President, there is one way and only one in which we may continue to hold the Philippines and yet avoid the disastrous consequences to which I have referred. So long as we can maintain a state of war in those islands the military rule will override the civil law, the law of the Constitution included. Inter arma silent leges. Certain advocates of the President's policy have recognized this fact, and, while urging the retention of the Philippines, are seriously insisting that Congress shall never legislate so as to give civil or political recognition to the Philippine Islands. These people, however eccentric their views of free government, are honest and well informed, and that which they insist on now will be ultimately insisted on by every advocate of the President's policy. Not to insist on it is to contemplate with equanimity internal disorders and radical national changes for which all the riches of the Philippines can not compensate. And I should like to suggest to these same advocates that the establishment of government by the bayonet will also introduce radical changes in our national economy for which not all the riches and all the wealth of all the possessions in the world could compensate the American people. Mr. President, it is evident to my mind that those citizens are right who criticise the President's policy and call it a policy of imperialism. To call it expansion is a misnomer, if for no other reason than that the population of the Philippine Islands is already so dense that there is no room for expansion there. There is room for the Filipino to expand on the American continent, but there is no room for American expansion on all the continent of Asia or any of its outlying and tributary islands. We do not want imperialism or a government by the bayonet in any American possession. The American people do not want it. The craze for speculation and the rage for innovation may push us forward now when the obligations to pause are not well known and the result of proceeding is not well understood. But those things will become better known in the future, and then, if we proceed now, we will retrace our steps in sackcloth and ashes and with fervent thanksgiving to Almighty God that the way of retreat is yet left open to us. We have already now provisionally made the Filipinos citizens of the Republic. The only thing that keeps them and their products out of the country is the fact that a state of war exists in the Philippine Islands, and this enables General Otis to govern the islands as he pleases. If we now clinch our title there, the only way to keep them out of the country permanently is to continue to make war on them permanently. Mr. President, let the advocates of annexation examine this question carefully and see whether the results to which I have pointed are not those which must necessarily ensue if we proceed to carry out the President's policy in the Philippines; and if so, let them ask themselves whether they are prepared to pay the price required for the benefits of annexation. If they are not, they should immediately retrace their steps; the way is open to them. It is never too late to listen to the dictates of prudence, and it should be an easy task when honor points the way.

Mr. President, I do not understand the position of those Senators who profess respect for the fundamentals of self-government and would see them applied in the Philippines, and who yet insist that the war must be prosecuted with unrelenting vigor until the Filipinos have been whipped into submission, before making any declaration on the subject. They must know, as everybody knows, that a declaration by Congress of its purpose to confer self-government on the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands will put a stop to warfare there instantly. Then why can not everybody who is in favor of making that declaration at some time unite in making it now and thus stop further bloodshed? Human life is not so cheap, misery and suffering so insignificant, that we can afford to sacrifice the one and augment the other on a point of etiquette. I heard Senators at the last session of Congress declare, with a great deal of heat, that they would never consent to any declaration on the subject so long as the Filipinos were found with arms in their hands against our authority. Without intending to reflect on any Senator, it seems to me that we can not at this conjuncture act or forbear acting on a view so small, so repugnant to Christian charity and all the dictates of humane benevolence. We are in the position of a strong man who has been attacked by a weak and puny child. What would be thought of such a man if he were to insist on continuing the fight until his assailant had been whipped into submission on the ground that his dignity would be injured and his prestige impaired by pursuing any other course? We ought now to stop this war if we can. We can stop it. We can stop it in a manner consonant with our own honor, with our own dignity, and with the interests of our own people, and to fail to stop it when it can be done so easily is to convict ourselves of a cruel pride and vindictive resentment unworthy the American people.

My own view of the course to be pursued at this conjuncture in the matter of the Philippine Islands is that we should pass a resolution, as simple and direct as possible, declaring it to be the purpose of the American people to confer independence on the people of the Philippine Islands whenever they shall have shown themselves fitted for that great boon, on condition that they now lay down their arms and submit to the authority of the United States, and on the further condition that when we retire from the islands we have liberty to retain such parts of them for coaling, naval, and military stations as our interests in the far east may require. Such a resolution would immediately bring about peace, would be in consonance with our traditional political principles, and would leave us far stronger from a military point of view in the Eastern Hemisphere than if we continue to hold the islands. I am very far from being unmindful of our interests in that quarter of the globe. We have vast interests there which must be protected. To permit any nation or combination of nations to hem China in with a cordon of guns is to permit them to bar us out. We can not suffer that. China is our friend and neighbor and customer, and aggression on her under certain circumstances is aggression on us. Of course we are not required to act the part of Don Quixote and go to the assistance of our celestial neighbors unless our own material interests are threatened. If it be true, as stated in the public prints, that the nations appearing to have designs on that country have made pledges to us of free and unrestricted trade in territory already occupied by them or which they shall hereafter occupy, that perhaps ought to be accepted as sufficient. It is not a very brave or generous thing to do, but probably it would be approved by the resolutions of prudence. But one thing is certain. If those nations have made us these pledges, or shall do so, it will be on condition that we make reciprocal concessions in our Eastern possessions. This, every lawyer knows, we can not do without amending our great organic law. Thus we have the seeds of certain controversy in that quarter of the world which sooner or later will embroil us in war. We can avoid all this by granting independence to the Filipino, can win back his confidence in us and his gratitude to us, can make him our friend and ally forever, can secure by commercial treaties with him all the benefits of annexation without any of its burdens, and with restricted possessions in that country, sufficient, however, for our naval and military power, we will be all the better equipped to compel that respect for our flag which the interests of our people there may require. This is all absurdly easy of accomplishment. All that it requires is a little generosity and magnanimity and a loyal adherence to the fundamental principles of our own Government. Senators, do not let the rage of faction defeat a consummation so much to be desired. Let us do the right thing and do it quickly, because the right thing, if it is to be done effectively, ought to be done quickly. We will never regret it. The nation will never regret it. On the contrary, succeeding generations will rise up and call us blessed. If I were called on to formulate a watchword of American statesmanship at this juncture in our affairs, I should say that justice to the Filipino, our friend and ally, and fidelity to ourselves, is the sentiment that should inspire every true American heart.

Mr. President, one more thought and I am done. We do not need the city of Manila for the purposes of our trade and commerce. If, as has been suggested, it shall become a second and greater Liverpool through our trade, it will be at the expense of those Liverpools which should be built up on our own coast, and it will profit principally a motley population of foreigners, for whom we care nothing. Nor will the possession of that city add anything materially to our trade. These catchwords with which it has been sought to dazzle the multitude are music to the ear, but an inharmonious jangle to the sense. Manila is not the gateway of the Orient for us. It does not command the trade of the Pacific for anybody. There is no royal road to either wealth or commerce. The only way to attain either one of them is by hard, constant, and unremitting labor. If we would control a large part of the trade of the East we must manufacture cheaply, convey our goods to them in our own bottoms, and sell the goods to them there at their own doors for less money than any other nation can afford to sell to them for. In this way and only in this way can we control the trade of the Orient.

Let us go to work, then, and settle the questions of internal economy pressing on us, in order that the energies of the American people may be freed to address themselves to the task of capturing the trade of China. There are enough such questions, and they are of sufficient importance to engage our attention without dragging in the interests of a strange and an alien people. We may feel kindly toward that people; I am certain that we all do; but we owe them no duty except justice, and they ask no other boon at our hands. If we shall give them that, we will do more for their mental, moral, and political regeneration and that of their kindred races than we could do by a hundred years of political connection and association through such government as our interests would permit us to give them. We will do this by the force of example—the only way we can safely undertake to promote self-government in another hemisphere—the example of a great and a free people, risen through the excellence of their institutions to a position of such strength and vantage and strengthened by love of those institutions and the practice of their noble precepts to such virtue, that while they fear no power on earth, however powerful, no power on earth, however weak, which is deserving needs to fear them or their strength. Oh, what a noble example! It has been ours to give ever since our fathers gave to the world the glory of the American Republic. It is impossible to estimate the influence which it has exerted upon free government and the amelioration of hard political conditions during the last century. Let us pray that it may continue to be ours to give and that it may not be said of the American people now, to be repeated in future in derogation of freedom, that they who have sat so long at the feet of Liberty were the first in their blindness to plunge a dagger into the heart of her youngest and latest devotee.

IMPROVEMENT OF SIXTEENTH STREET.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair) laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6777) relative to the widening and extension of Sixteenth street, in the District of Columbia; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered. A similar bill was reported to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, within thirty days after the dedication to said District of 75 per cent of the lands lying within the lines of Sixteenth street NW., as extended according to the highway plans, between the Piney Branch and the Blagden Mill road, and also between the Military road and the District of Columbia boundary line, to institute proceedings to condemn the land necessary for the extension of Sixteenth street from Morris street to the District of Columbia boundary line with a uniform width of 160 feet, under the terms and provisions of an act entitled "An act to extend S street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes:" Provided, That of the amount found due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the extension of Sixteenth street, as in this section provided, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by said jury in said proceedings against those pieces or parcels of ground situated and lying on each side of said Sixteenth street NW. between Morris street and the Blagden subdivision, and between the Blagden Mill road and the Rock Creek or Milkhouse Ford road, and between lots 7, 4, and 11 of A. R. Shepherd's subdivision, to the depth of 250 feet, or to such greater depths as the benefits may be found by said jury to extend, measured on each side thereof from the building lines of said Sixteenth street as extended.

SEC. 2. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as an equity court, shall have authority to empower, order, and decree the committee or guardian of any person of unsound mind, and the guardian or trustee of any infant, owning or having an interest or estate in any land within the limits above described, to dedicate to the District of Columbia for and as a part of said Sixteenth street any land or part thereof owned by such person of unsound mind or by such infant, or in which they may have an interest or estate, if, upon the application of such committee, guardian, or trustee, and after the testimony of witnesses shall be taken and such other proceedings had as the court may deem proper, the court shall determine that such dedication will be to the interest and advantage of such person of unsound mind or such infant.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask whether that bill has ever been considered in the Senate? It has just come from the House, has it not?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill has just come from the House, but it is identical with the bill which was prepared at the instance of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, on which bill the committee has authorized a favorable report. The bill aims to make effective the law for the opening of Sixteenth street which was passed last year. It merely enables the Commissioners to condemn two or three small pieces of land which can not be donated, mainly because the present owners are incompetent to make a legal transfer. There is no cost to the Government, because the District pays half and the property half.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I shall address the Senate on Thursday, after the routine morning business, upon the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] relative to the right of suffrage.

OUTLYING DEPENDENCIES.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, I ask leave to call up the resolutions submitted by me on the 18th instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions submitted by Mr. ROSS on the 18th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the provisions of the Constitution do not, unaided by act of Congress, extend over Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Resolved, That by the recent treaty with Spain the United States take the sovereignty over Puerto Rico and over the Philippine Islands under the duty to use and exercise it for the general welfare and highest interest of the people of the United States and the inhabitants of the islands, unrestrained by the provisions of the Constitution; and over Cuba, under the duty to exercise it for the pacification of the island.

Resolved, That the successful discharge of this duty demands the establishment of a separate department of Government to take charge of all outlying dependencies of the United States, and the passage of a general law making appointments therein nonpolitical.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, I think it is entirely evident that all Senators do not take the same view of our relations to the Philippine Islands, Puerto Rico, and our other dependencies. I shall present my own view.

I have always thought it wiser to give attention to present conditions, and to the discharge of present duties, than to dwell upon transactions passed and closed, in an attempt to criticise or to find fault, or to point out how they might have been more wisely conducted and have brought better supposed results. Early I learned that criticism and fault-finding could be set up on very limited capital, and that the "better supposed results" are more imaginary than real. In forecasting his supposed results the critic rarely foresees, or can foresee, the new and important factors which would be brought into the problem if the changes demanded by his after-date criticism had been made. Allow me, therefore, to engage the attention of the Senate briefly in considering what I deem to be present conditions and duties.

First, then, let us inquire if the Constitution of the United States, ex proprio vigore, unaided by treaty or act of Congress, extends to and covers the inhabitants of the territories acquired by the United States.

This is an important question for consideration and determination, especially by every Congressman, whose action may help determine the laws which shall govern the inhabitants of such territories.

TREATIES.

By the recent treaty with Spain sovereignty is ceded to the United States over Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands with this provision:

> The civil and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress.

Cuba, over which Spain relinquishes sovereignty and title, the treaty leaves without any declaration in regard to the status of her inhabitants, or the rights of Congress further than to say that, upon its evacuation by Spain, the island is to be occupied by the United States, and while such occupation shall continue the United States—> will assume and discharge the obligations that may, under international law, result from the fact of its occupation, for the protection of life and property.

I do not propose in this connection to discuss what the relations of the United States to these islands are, further than to observe that the ceding power has imposed no conditions nor reserved any rights defined and secured by the Constitution to the inhabitants of those islands. This distinguishes this treaty from all others hitherto made by the United States by which she has acquired territory occupied by inhabitants. The treaty of 1803, for the cession of Louisiana, provides in Article III that—

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

The treaty of 1819, by which Florida was ceded to the United States, in Article VII has a provision of similar legal import. So have the treaties by which New Mexico, Utah, California, etc., were acquired in 1848 and 1853, contained in Articles VIII and IX of the treaty of 1848 and brought forward into the treaty of 1853 by Article V. The treaty of 1867, by which Alaska was acquired, has no provision for the incorporation of the Territory into the Union as a State or States. It divides the inhabitants into two classes. It provides that they may return to Russia within three years, and of those who do not return says:

> But if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory they, with the exception of the uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes shall be subject to such regulations as the United States may, from time to time, adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country.

It is thus manifest that in every treaty by which the United States has acquired inhabited territory prior to the late treaty with Spain the ceding power has inserted a provision that the inhabitants, except uncivilized tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and all, except that by which Alaska was acquired, contain the further provision that they shall in due time, to be determined by Congress, be admitted as a State or States into the Union.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

It will be important to keep the provisions of these treaties in mind, especially when we examine the decisions of the Supreme Court in regard to the constitutional rights of the inhabitants of these territories. In his opinion in The American and Oceanic Insurance Cos. vs. 356 Bales of Cotton, Canter, claimant, Chief Justice Marshall quotes the sixth article of the treaty ceding Florida, which reads:

> The inhabitants of the territories which His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution and admitted to the enjoyment of all the priviliges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States. It is unnecessary to inquire whether this is not their condition independent of stipulation. They do not, however, participate in political power; they do not share in government till Florida becomes a State. (1 Peters, 542.)

The Northwest Territory and other territories ceded by separate States to the United States, when under the Articles of Confederation or the Constitution, were ceded under a pledge from Congress in regard to their use and rights. Chief Justice Taney says in his opinion in the Dred Scott case:

> By resolution passed October 10, 1780, Congress pledged itself that, if the lands were ceded as recommended, they should be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, to be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union, and have the same rights of sovereignty and freedom and independence as the other States.

This pledge acted upon is of equal force as the provision of a treaty, especially under the ordinance of 1787.

These treaties and this resolution include all the territories of the United States, except that of Oregon, which came by discovery and occupation—in regard to which I know of no decision of the United States Supreme Court on the question under consideration—and, except that acquired by the annexation of Texas and Hawaii, until we come to the recent treaty with Spain.

THE SCOPE OF THE TREATY-MAKING POWER.

By Article VI of the Constitution:

> All treaties made under the authority of the United States are made the supreme law of the land.

Of the treaty-making power the Supreme Court, in Geofrey vs. Riggs (133 U. S., 258), speaking by Mr. Justice Field, says:

> The treaty power as expressed in the Constitution is in terms unlimited except by those restraints found in that instrument against the action of the Government, or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and that of the States; it would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of the States, or the cession of any portion of the latter without its consent. Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. vs. Lowe (114 U. S., 525, 541). But with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjudged touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country. Ware vs. Hylton (3 U. S., 199); Chirac vs. Chirac (15 U. S., 2 Wheaton, 259); Hauenstine vs. Sanborn (100 U. S., 483); Droit d'Aubaine (3 Ops. Atty. Gen., 417); People vs. Gerke (5 Col., 381).

It will not be claimed that the provisions of these treaties giving the inhabitants of the territories the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States lie without the scope of the treaty-making power. It is a generally admitted proposition that the ceding power may properly require such a provision in its treaty granting its sovereignty over a territory, and that the power accepting the grant becomes solemnly bound thereby.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Inasmuch as one or more of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court is in regard to the constitutional rights of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia, it is proper to remark that the territory, now included in the District, when the Constitution was adopted constituted parts of the States of Virginia and Maryland, and before being ceded, had become subject to the Constitution. By the cession the territory of the District was not taken from under the operation of the Constitution. If so, the process by which it was accomplished is unknown to me. Nor have I seen any suggestion by anyone that any change in its relation in this respect was made by its cession by the States to the United States.

HOW DECISIONS OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT SHOULD BE CONSIDERED.

These observations are necessary for the proper understanding of the language used by various judges of the United States Supreme Court in their opinions touching the constitutional rights of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia and of these Territories: for, as aptly and pertinently said by Chief Justice Marshall in Cohen vs. Virginia (6 Wheaton, 264, 399):

It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which these expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for judgment. The reason for this maxim is obvious. The question actually before the court is investigated with care and considered in its full extent. Other principles which may serve to illustrate it are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing upon all other cases is seldom completely investigated.

Keeping this caution by the eminent Chief Justice in mind, I fail to find any decision of the Supreme Court which fairly indicates that the Constitution of the United States, unaided by Congressional legislation or by treaty, ex proprio vigore extends to the territories acquired by the United States. There are expressions in several of the opinions which would indicate that such might be the view of the writer. Such expressions were unnecessary for the decision. In no case which I have been able to find is this point actually considered and decided. In every case in which the court has decided that the party was entitled to be accorded the rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution, such rights, privileges, and immunities had been conferred by the States from which the territory was ceded, as in the case of the District of Columbia, or by the treaty by which the territory was ceded to the United States; and frequently the rights thus secured had been confirmed by the act of Congress conferring territorial government. The resolutions and proceedings by which several States ceded territory to the United States, including the Northwest Territory, were in legal effect treaties and of like binding force.

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court most generally relied upon to support the view that the Constitution, unaided by act of Congress or treaty, extends ex proprio vigore to all territories may, for convenient consideration, be divided into three classes:

(1) The right of trial by jury.
(2) Revenue, or the apportionment of direct taxes.
(3) Citizenship.

THE RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY.

Of the first class are Callan vs. Wilson (127 U. S., 540); American Publishing Company vs. Fisher (166 U. S., 464); Springville vs. Thomas (166 U. S., 707); Thompson vs. Utah (170 U. S., 343), and some others noted in these decisions. Callan vs. Wilson clearly holds that a citizen of the District of Columbia has constitutional right to trial by jury when charged with a crime. Although not fully stated as a ground for the decision, the case was correctly decided if, as I think the fact is, the Constitution was extended over the District while included in the States of Maryland and Virginia, and was never subsequently withdrawn. The decision of the American Publishing Company vs. Fisher was turned upon the point taken, that the act of the Territory which authorized a verdict rendered on the concurrence of nine or more members of the jury contravened the act under which Utah was constituted a Territory. It leaves undecided whether the seventh amendment applies. Mr. Justice Brewer summarizes the decisions on this point as follows:

Whether the seventh amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "in suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved," operates, ex proprio vigore, to invalidate this statute may be a matter of dispute. In Webster vs. Reid, 2 Howard, 437, an act of the legislature of Iowa dispensing with a jury in a certain class of common-law actions was held void. While in the opinion, on page 460, the seventh amendment was quoted, it was also said: "The organic law of the Territory of Iowa, by express provision and by reference, extends the laws of the United States, including the ordinance of 1787, over the Territory, as far as they are applicable;" and the ordinance of 1787, article 2, in terms provided that "the inhabitants of said Territory shall be entitled to the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus and of trial by jury." So the validity may have been adjudged by reason of conflict with Congressional legislation. In Reynolds vs. United States (98 U. S., 145, 154), it was said, in reference to a criminal case coming from the Territory of Utah, that "by the Constitution of the United States (Amendment VI) the accused was entitled to a trial by an impartial jury." Both of these cases were quoted in Callan vs. Wilson (127 U. S., 540), as authorities to sustain the ruling that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to trial by jury are in force in the District of Columbia. On the other hand, in Mormon Church vs. United States (136 U. S., I, 44), it was said by Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court: "Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by any express and direct application of its provisions." And in McAllister vs. United States (141 U. S., 174), it is held that the constitutional provision in respect to the tenor of judicial offices did not apply to Territorial judges.

If what has been said in regard to the force of the treaties by which these territories were ceded is sound, the cases were all correctly decided, and justified, as is done in some of them, classifying the District of Columbia and Territories with States as protected by this provision of the Constitution.

There can be no doubt that the treaty with Mexico secured to the inhabitants of the territory ceded the rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution. By its terms Mexicans who should prefer to remain in the territory could retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States. If they remained without election for a year after the cession of the territory, they—should be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States, * * * shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution, and shall be protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property.

These terms of the treaty were accepted by the United States, and secured to the inhabitants of the territory the rights secured to citizens of the United States by the Constitution. Trial by common-law jury was one of these rights. The fact that such territory was secured the rights, immunities, and privileges of the Constitution, and was in preparation, under the treaty, for becoming a State, justified the remark of Mr. Justice Bradley in Mormon Church vs. United States:

Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by any express or direct application of its provisions.

These rights were secured by the treaty. Unquestionably these principles impliedly should govern the legislation of Congress regarding the inhabitants of a Territory which was being prepared to take its place among the States of the Union.

The case of Springville vs. Thomas is made to rest upon the ground stated in American Publishing Company vs. Fisher. Thompson vs. Utah was properly decided upon the ground that the act upon which the plaintiff in error was tried was passed after the crime charged was committed, and unconstitutional, as an ex post facto law, an immunity secured to him by the Constitution. None of these decisions, read in the light of the treaties or the law of the land extending over the District of Columbia and the Territories, uphold the claim that the Constitution, ex proprio vigore, prevailed over them. It is quite evident that this must be the principle which controls when In re Ross (140 U. S., 453) is considered. He was a seaman on an American vessel. He claimed to be a British subject. While the vessel was in harbor in Japan he committed thereon a murder. By an act of Congress, passed agreeably to a treaty between the United States and Japan, he could be tried by a consular court in Japan, consisting of the American consul and four associates. The court and its proceedings were regular, if the act of Congress was constitutional. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to be executed. On the trial he properly raised the points that he was entitled by the Constitution to be indicted by a grand jury and tried by a common-law jury, and that the consular court, as constituted, had no jurisdiction to try him.

If the act establishing the consular court was unconstitutional when challenged by a citizen of the United States, it was so when challenged by him, though a British subject. By shipping as a seaman on a American vessel, he became entitled to be tried by valid laws applicable to the trial of an American citizen. His sentence was commuted by the President to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary at Albany, New York. After remaining incarcerated for a time, he brought habeas corpus, claiming that his incarceration was unlawful on the grounds claimed by him on the trial. It was held that the American vessel, though on the high seas, common to all nations, was American territory, and under the treaty the consular court had jurisdication to try him, and his conviction was lawful. I can see no escape from the conclution that this decision establishes that Congress has plenary power, unrestricted by the Constitution, in legislating for outside territories.

REVENUE OR THE APPORTIONMENT OF DIRECT TAXES.

Of the second class I have found but one decision which is claimed to hold that the Constitution, of its own unaided vigor, extends itself over the District of Columbia and Territories located outside the States, and that is Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton, 317). It was decided in 1820, Chief Justice Marshall delivering the opinion. The question for decision was whether an act of Congress including the District of Columbia in an apportionment of a direct tax, according to the census of the States and District, was constitutional. It was held constitutional. It could not be otherwise held if the District was then under the Constitution. The reasoning of Chief Justice Marshall, as I understand it, is that it was immaterial whether the District was under the provisions of the Constitution. In substance he reasons that if in levying a direct tax Congress should omit a State or not apportion the tax among the States according to the census, as prescribed in the Constitution, the tax would be unlawfully levied and void; that the same effect would not result if a Territory was omitted, because the Constitution does not require direct taxes in the Territories to be so apportioned; that in the Territories Congress exercises plenary power in levying direct taxes, and in the exercise of this power could apportion the tax as required by the Constitution among the States. I think the decision and reasoning of the eminent Chief Justice, properly understood, does not support the doctrine, but the reverse.

CITIZENSHIP.

In considering citizenship I shall not discuss the Slaughterhouse cases and some others which are upheld, because the acts of the States complained of as impinging upon the rights of citizens secured by the Constitution were held to be valid within the police power of the State, although some expressions in the opinions may give the careless reader the impression that the Constitution extends over the District of Columbia and the Territories, unaided by act of Congress or by treaty, for, if any such expressions can fairly be held to have such force, they were clearly outside the points considered and decided, and are no more than dicta. In United States vs. Wang Kim Ark (169 U. S., 649) it is held that the defendant in error, born of Chinese parents in California while his parents were residing there, but were not and could not, under the laws of the United States, be naturalized, became a citizen of the United States under the fourteenth amendment. The case was decided by a divided court after very full consideration. The majority of the judges hold that the common-law doctrine in regard to birth in a country, from foreign parents residing there, entitles the child to the protection of the country, and for that reason he owes to such country allegiance, and becomes a citizen under the terms of the amendment.

There is force in the dissenting views of Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Harlan, holding that the birth must be from parents who, by the laws of the country, could have become citizens by naturalization to give the child such a status. In the discussion in the opinion representing the views of the court, some expressions are used which carry the impression that such a birth in the Territories, or wherever the United States has jurisdiction, renders the child a citizen. But no such question was before the court, nor does the opinion profess to consider such a question. The question involved may be correctly decided, and yet does not touch the doctrine that the Constitution extends to the District of Columbia and Territories of its own unaided vigor. These are the strongest representative cases claimed to indicate that the Constitution has such unaided power.

THE CONSTITUTION.

Opposed to its having such power are the nature and language of the Constitution and many decisions of the Supreme Court. The Constitution is that of a representative government of the people. It was formulated and adopted by representatives selected by and from the people of the different States to form a common government for themselves under the name of the United States. This name is used throughout the instrument to mean the States united, or their combined power. The Constitution commences with—

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, * * * and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

United States as here used evidently is a synonym for the union of the States which should adopt it. The people of the States announced in advance that, through their representatives, they form the Constitution, among other things to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity, and announced no other purpose. It is almost invariably held that the acts and laws enacted by the legal representatives of any municipality bind only the inhabitants of that municipality. Such acts and laws have, and are intended to have, no extraterritorial effect or jurisdiction. If any extraterritorial jurisdiction for such laws is intended, it must be clearly expressed, or the contrary will be presumed. The several articles of the Constitution, and the first ten amendments adopted nearly contemporarily, establish the three departments of the Government, provide for the manner of their establishment, define their respective powers, some both affirmatively and negatively; define what power the States yield to the General Government, and what they reserve, including its powers over the citizens of the several States, the relation of the States, and of the citizens of the several States, to each other, and to the General Government; how and by whom the Constitution can be amended; provide for the admission of new States; and specify the power of the Government over the Territory and other property of the United States.

Not a sentence contained in the original articles, nor the first ten amendments, adopted nearly contemporaneously, more clearly to specify the scope and limitation of the powers named in the original articles, indicates that these provisions are applied to or bind anyone except the citizens of the several States, who, through their chosen representatives, framed and adopted them and are given power to annul and amend them. Nor is there any such sentence in the eleventh and twelfth amendments. When the thirteenth amendment was framed and adopted it was therein clearly expressed that its provisions should extend, not only to the States then included in the Union, or throughout the United States, but to any place subject to their jurisdiction.

It is significant that this clause should be inserted into this amendment, and be nowhere found in the original articles, nor in the preceding nor succeeding amendments, if of their own vigor they extend wherever the United States exercises jurisdiction. Especially significant is the insertion of this provision into this amendment, and its omission from the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments following so soon thereafter and formulated by some of the same eminent constitutional lawyers. It clearly shows that the men who formulated it did not think that the other provisions of the Constitution, as then amended, extended of their own vigor into the territories. In confirmation of this view is the fact, that up to that time all treaties ceding territories to the United States contained carefully expressed provisions giving immediately its citizens the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States, or providing that such rights, privileges, and immunities should speedily be conferred and the Territories formed into States. The Commissioners who formulated those treaties, the Presidents who submitted them to the Senate, the Senators, or some of them at least, who ratified them, were eminent constitutional lawyers, and some of them engaged in formulating and discussing the original Constitution. It can hardly be conceived as possible that this line of action should have been pursued for so many years, if the Constitution, of its own unaided force, extends to every territory acquired by the United States.

TERRITORIES AND TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Such was not the view of Daniel Webster in 1828 when arguing American Insurance Company vs. Canter (1 Peters, 511). He then said:

> What is Florida? It is no part of the United States. How can it be? How is it represented? Do the laws of the United States reach Florida? Not unless by particular provisions. The territory and all within it are to be governed by the acquiring power, except where there are reservations by treaty. By the law of England, when possession is taken of territories, the King, jure coronæ, has the power of legislation until Parliament shall interfere. Congress has the jus coronæ in this case, and Florida was to be governed by Congress as she thought proper. What has Congress done? She might have done anything; she might have refused the right of trial by jury, and refused a legislature. She has given a legislature to be exercised at her will; and a government of a mixed nature, in which she has endeavored to distinguish between State and United States jurisdiction, anticipating the future erection of the territory into a State. Does the law establishing the court at Key West come within the restrictions of the Constitution of the United States? If the Constitution does not extend over this territory, the law can not be inconsistent with the national Constitution.

Such was not the view of Chief Justice Marshall, who delivered the opinion in that case and therein said:

> These courts, then, are not constitutional courts, in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the General Government can be deposited. They are incapable of receiving it. They are legislative courts, created in virtue of the general right of sovereignty which exists in the Government, or in virtue of that clause which enables Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory belonging to the United States. The jurisdiction with which they are invested is not a part of that judicial power which is defined in the Third Article of the Constitution, but is conferred by Congress in the execution of those general powers which that body possesses over the Territories of the United States. Although admiralty jurisdiction can be exercised in the States in those courts only which are established in pursuance of the Third Article of the Constitution, the same limitation does not extend to the Territories. In legislating for them Congress exercises the combined powers of the general and of the State government.

Nor was such the view of Chief Justice Chase, as shown by an extract from his opinion in Clinton vs. Englebrecht (13 Wallace, 434), as follows:

> There is no supreme court of the United States, nor is there any district court of the United States in the sense of the Constitution, in the Territory of Utah. The judges are not appointed for the same terms, nor is the jurisdiction which they exercise part of the judicial power conferred by the Constitution of the General Government. The courts are the legislative courts of the Territories, created in virtue of that clause which authorizes Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories belonging to the United States.

The same doctrine has been adhered to by the Supreme Court, as shown by the opinion in McAllister vs. United States (141 U. S., 174), where the cases on the subject are reviewed. The courts brought under consideration in this line of cases are denominated legislative courts, courts established by Congress in the exercise of its plenary power over the Territories, or the combined power of the General Government and of the States, as it is sometimes expressed; courts which do not derive their authority from the judicial power of the United States, vested in the Supreme Court and inferior courts ordained agreeably to Article III of the Constitution, but derive their power from an act of Congress, even when it embraces the identical subject-matter—maritime—over which the Supreme Court is given jurisdiction by Article III of the Constitution. These cases are distinguishable from those that hold that the citizen of the District of Columbia, and of the Territories, is entitled to be tried by a common-law jury. No person has the constitutional right to be tried by a particular court, if the court which tries him accords all the rights, privileges, and immunities secured to him by the Constitution.

CITIZENS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND OF TERRITORIES.

Of like tendency and force are the decisions of the Supreme Court holding that a citizen of the District of Columbia or of a Territory can not sue in the United States courts a citizen of a State, nor be sued in such courts by such citizen of a State, because the Constitution gives such courts jurisdiction only of suits between citizens of different States; that the District of Columbia or a Territory is not a State within the terms of the Constitution, whatever it may be internationally. (Hepburn vs. Ellezy, 2 Cranch, 445; New Orleans vs. Winter, 1 Wheaton, 91; Barney vs. Baltimore, 6 Wallace, 280.) These cases establish, if they establish anything, that the term State in the Constitution means one of the States of the Union and no other municipality. By parity of reasoning, United States, when used in that instrument, should mean the States united and nothing more, unless clearly asserted, as in the thirteenth amendment.

DRED SCOTT DECISION.

The Dred Scott decision is not opposed to these views. Chief Justice Taney, as furnishing the foundation for holding that the plaintiff in error was not entitled to sue in the United States courts, defines who are included as citizens of the United States within the terms of the Constitution. He says:

> The words "people of the United States" and "citizens" are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty and hold the power and conduct the Government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the "sovereign people," and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. The question before us is, whether the class of persons (negroes) described in the plea of abatement compose a portion of this people and are constituent members of this sovereignty. We think they are not and are not included, and were not intended to be included, under the word citizens of the United States.

This portion of the decision has not been criticised nor overruled to my knowledge. Under this definition of citizen he must have a part in the exercise of the sovereignty. Other portions of the opinion, if not overruled, have been ignored, especially that portion which holds that the clause in the Constitution in regard to the power of Congress over territories applies only to the territories belonging to the United States when the Constitution was adopted, or such as might be acquired to be developed into States. The case clearly holds that until the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment there might be persons born and residing within the United States, subject to its powers and having a right to demand its protection, who are not citizens because not entitled to participate in the sovereignty. That amendment enlarges this definition only to the extent of all persons born in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction. The term United States here must mean the territory of the States united to form the National Government. The words "and subject to its jurisdiction" are not words of enlargement, as in the Thirteenth Amendment, but words of limitation of the class born in the United States, and were inserted to exclude children born of parents who were residing in the United States as the representatives of other nations.

DECISIONS IN REGARD TO THE RIGHTS OF INDIANS.

Of like legal tendency and effect are the decisions of the Supreme Court in regard to the rights of Indians, as shown in United States vs. Rogers, 4 Howard, 567; United States vs. Kagama, 118 U. S., 375; Elk vs. Wilkins, 112 U. S., 94, and other cases relating to the relations of the United States to the Indians. In the last case named the plaintiff was an Indian, born among the tribe to which he belonged. He sued the defendant for refusing to enroll him as a voter in the city of Omaha. He alleged that he was an Indian, born within the United States; that for more than a year prior to the grievances complained of he had severed his tribal relations to the Indian tribes, and fully and completely surrendered himself to the jurisdiction of the United States; that he was a citizen of the United States by virtue of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, entitled to all the rights and privileges of the citizens of the United States, and had been a bona fide resident of the State and city for a period of time more than long enough to entitle him to vote.

These allegations were admitted by demurrer. It was held that he was not a citizen of the United States by virtue of the fourteenth amendment, because born with his tribe, and therefore owed subordinate allegiance to it. The peculiar relations of the United States to Indians were discussed, and statutes shown which allowed them to be naturalized. On this branch of the case, and respecting the allegation that he was a citizen, it was held that this allegation and the allegation that he had severed his tribal relations and completely surrendered himself to the jurisdiction of the United States and of the State, were not sufficient to enable him to recover, unless accompanied, as they were not, by the further allegation that the United States or State had accepted his surrender, had naturalized him, or recognized him as a citizen.

United States v. Kagama establishes the right of this nation to govern the Indians by acts of Congress instead of by treaties while they maintain their tribal relations on an Indian reservation within the limits of a State; that, because within the geographical limits of the United States, they are necessarily subject to the laws which Congress may enact for their protection and for the protection of people with whom they come in contact; that the States have no such power as long as they maintain their tribal relations; that they owe no allegiance to the State, and the State gives them no protection. The opinion recognizes and discusses the peculiar relations of the Government to the Indians; that Indians, while maintaining tribal relations, owe a subordinate allegiance to the tribe and a paramount allegiance to this Government.

It would seem that in regard to citizenship paramount allegiance ought to control. Sovereignty and allegiance are interdependent. Sovereignty is the paramount power which governs and protects. From protection arises subjection, or duty to obey, or allegiance. It is difficult to discover any satisfactory reason distinguishing this case from In re Wang Ark Kim, except that the latter was born within a State, and therefore within the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution, and Kagama, on an Indian reservation, over which the State within whose limits the reservation was had no jurisdiction, and therefore was outside the operation of that amendment. Both were born under the sovereignty of the United States. The protection furnished by the exercise of that sovereignty raised the duty of obedience to the laws of the United States in both, the duty of protection and duty of obedience being interdependent. The subordinate control of the tribe over him did not amount to sovereignty within its meaning in international law.

INTERNATIONAL LAW RESPECTING CEDED TERRITORIES.

Again, it is international law, everywhere admitted and recognized, that the cession of sovereignty over a country by one nation to another affects only the political relations of the inhabitants of the ceded country, and makes them subjects thereafter of the nation receiving the cession; that while the inhabitants of the ceded country change their allegiance, their relation to each other and their rights of property remain undisturbed. The cession of a country does not affect the rights of property. (Vattel, book 3, chap. 13, sec. 200; United States vs. Perchman, 7 Peters, 51; Mitchell vs. United States, 9 Peters, 711; Strather vs. Lucas, 12 Peters, 410; American and Ocean Insurance Co. vs. Conter, 1 Peters, 511.)

Laws, usages, and municipal regulations in force at the time of cession remain in force until changed by the new sovereignty. The new sovereignty may deal with the inhabitants and give them what law it pleases, unless restrained by the treaty of cession, but until alteration be made, the former law continues. (Calvin's Case, 7 Co., 17; Campbell vs. Hall, Cowper, 209; Mitchell vs. United States, 9 Peters, 711; Cross et al vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164.) Cross vs. Harrison holds that this international law prevails in this country. The Constitution, therefore, can not, of its own inherent force, extend itself over such territory. It might be widely at variance with the law of the ceded territory. Hence it follows that the Constitution, with the exception of the thirteenth amendment, does not extend, ex proprio vigore, into the newly ceded dependencies, and the contracting nations could properly except uncivilized tribes from the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens in the treaty by which Alaska was acquired. Hence the Supreme Court properly has held that Congress has plenary power in legislating for territories, unless restrained by the stipulation of the treaty, whether that power is derived impliedly from the treaty-making power—that the nation must have power to govern what it may lawfully acquire—or from section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution.

The cases hold that it is immaterial from which source the power comes. It is plenary or unlimited, from whichever source it springs. The cases following the Dred Scott decision refer to this section as an expression of this power. By it territory is treated, not as a part or portion of the United States, but as property belonging to the United States, and Congress is given plenary power to dispose of it, which it has no power to do if it constitutes a portion of the United States covered by the Constitution. If it were a part of the United States within the meaning of those words as used in the Constitution, on the fundamental principles on which the Government is founded the inhabitants of such territory should be clothed with the power of legislation under the Constitution, be represented in Congress, and have a voice in altering and amending the Constitution. In whatever light it is viewed it is manifest that the Constitution, with the exception named, unaided, does not extend to Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and that Congress, with this exception, is clothed with plenary power to legislate in regard to them; to make such rules and regulations respecting them as it regards needful, considering their situation and circumstances, untrammeled by the other provisions of the Constitution which secure particular rights, privileges, and immunities to citizens of the United States whose property these islands are.

If the Constitution, with the exception named, does not invade these islands of its own force, it is manifest that its other provisions will not become operative there without an act of Congress. The treaty did not put them in operation there. It has been claimed that Congress by some indefinable process impliedly puts them in operation as soon as it enters upon legislation for the islands, even without having passed any act to that effect. In quite a number of instances the Supreme Court has said that in legislating for the Territories Congress has plenary power, or the combined power of the National Government and of the States. Such combined power must be absolute and unlimited. the power of any nation over such territories—except in regard to allowing slavery—or, in the language of section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution:

> Power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States.

The power of the States in enacting laws is not confined within the limits prescribed for the National Government by the Constitution. It is absolute except in the particulars surrendered to the National Government. There are numberless decisions of the Supreme Court to this effect on the subject of "due process of law" or the "law of the land." In Missouri vs. Lewis (101 U. S., 22, 31) Mr. Justice Bradley says:

> We might go still further and say, with undoubted truth, that there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any State from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit for all or any part of its territory. If the State of New York, for example, should see fit to adopt the civil law and its methods of procedure for New York City and the surrounding counties, and the common law and its methods of procedure for the rest of the State, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its so doing.

And Mr. Justice Brown, in Holden vs. Hardy (169 U. S., 366), after quoting the foregoing, says:

> We have seen no reason to doubt the soundness of these views. In the future growth of the nation, as heretofore, it is not impossible that Congress may see fit to annex territories whose jurisprudence is that of the civil law. One of the considerations moving to such annexation might be the very fact that the territory so annexed should enter the Union with its traditions, laws, and systems of administration unchanged. It would be a narrow construction of the Constitution to require them to abandon these, or to substitute for a system which represented the growth of generations of inhabitants a jurisprudence with which they had no previous acquaintance or sympathy.

These decisions are forcibly to the point that Congress, in the exercise of the combined powers of the National Government and of the States, has unlimited power in legislating for these islands, with the exception of allowing slavery, and does not thereby impliedly confer upon their inhabitants the other rights, privileges, and immunities secured to the citizens of the United States by the Constitution. Doubtless the citizens of the United States, fully imbued with the principles of the Constitution, will see to it that no Congress will ever exist which will not confer upon the inhabitants of these islands all the rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution, so far as they are applicable to their condition and circumstances.

RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES TO THESE DEPENDENCIES.

While, under these views, Congress enters upon the government of these dependencies unrestrained by the provisions of the Constitution, nevertheless it will exercise this power under the obligation of a general duty, to be discharged faithfully and honestly for the highest welfare of their inhabitants, and of the inhabitants of the nation. Every function of government is a duty so to be discharged. As applied to Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands the duty is general. It is so left by the treaty.

RELATIONS TO CUBA.

In regard to Cuba the duty is particular. It is so constituted by the resolutions antedating the war and by the provisions of the treaty. The preamble of the joint resolution of Congress approved April 20, 1898, counts upon the abhorrent conditions which have existed in that island for more than three years, shocking to the moral sense of the people of the United States, a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating in the destruction of the Maine with 266 of its officers and crew, and thereupon it is solemnly resolved, (1) That the people of the island are, and of right ought to be, free and independent. (2) That it is the duty of this Government to demand, and it does demand, that Spain at once relinquish its authority and government of the island. (3) Authorizes the President to use the entire land and naval forces, and to call out the militia to enforce the demand. (4) The United States disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the island except for the pacification thereof, and then asserts its determination to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

These were followed by the act approved April 25, declaring that a state of war had existed between the United States and Spain since April 21, and directing and empowering the President to use the entire land and naval forces and to call into the service the militia of the United States in the prosecution of the war. The President exercised the power conferred, obeyed the direction, prosecuted the war to a successful termination, resulting first in the protocol and then in the treaty ratified by the Senate, by which Spain relinquishes her sovereignty over Cuba, and the United States announces to the world that she is about to occupy and, while the occupation continues, she—> will assume and discharge the obligations that may, under international law, result from the fact of its occupation for the protection of life and property.

The United States is now in the exercise of such occupation. It has been claimed that she did not take sovereignty over the island; that on the relinquishment by Spain it vanished into thin air to some place unknown, or, as one eminent writer on international law has said, was in abeyance until the inhabitants of the island should be in condition to receive and exercise it. Sovereignty is supreme or paramount control in the government of a country. The United States is now, and has been since the signing of the protocol, in the exercise of this control in the government of the island. It has not been a divided control, as sometimes happens in the conflict of arms. Her control has been unquestioned and undisputed. I think the United States, upon the surrender of sovereignty over the island by Spain, immediately following the signing of the protocol, took sovereignty over the island, not as her own, nor for her benefit, nor for the people of the United States, but for the inhabitants of the island, for the specified and particular purpose of pacification of the island. What is meant by the pacification of the island? It may be difficult to determine.

Persons and nations may differ in regard to the state of things which must exist to have this accomplished. The Cubans may say that they are pacified, in a state of peace now, and therefore it is our duty to withdraw and allow them to set up such a government as they may choose. We may say that pacification means more than absence of a state of war; that, considering the state of things that had existed for three or more years, it means until the inhabitants shall have acquired a reliable, stable government. Are the Cubans capable of establishing and maintaining a stable government? Who shall decide? If that be the meaning, what kind of a government? A monarchy, a despotism abhorrent to the fundamental principles that have ruled and inspired this nation from its origin? Who can tell? Then the announcement makes no provision for any return by such government, when established, for the expenditures and obligations incurred in prosecuting the war and administering the sovereignty. Is the United States to receive such compensation? She became a volunteer in the war, and announced herself such volunteer in taking the sovereignty until pacification is accomplished. As such the United States stands to-day before the civilized nations of the world. The inhabitants of Cuba are the beneficiaries of this voluntarily assumed duty, and when a difference arises between this Government and them, whether the duty has been performed and whether this nation is to be compensated for the expense of its administration, have a right to arraign this nation at the bar of nations and demand that it give account of the stewardship which it voluntarily assumed. The determination of the rights of this nation and of the Cubans under this assumed duty may involve many nice questions and many difficulties.

SHOULD THE UNITED STATES EXTEND THESE RELATIONS TO PUERTO RICO AND THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS?

Yet there are those who earnestly urge that Congress should make a declaration that the nation holds Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands under the same undefined, yet in a sense particular, duty. In my judgment, such a course is beset with complications and difficulties. By adopting it the nation would court these and invite the inhabitants of the islands to engender perplexing questions and entanglements. Under the treaty the nation takes the sovereignty of Puerto Rico and of the Philippine Islands, under the general duty to use it in such a manner as Congress may judge will best subserve the highest interests of their inhabitants and the inhabitants of this nation. I would announce no other duty in regard to them. Many more complications and entanglements may arise in the discharge of the particular duty to Cuba than are likely to arise in the discharge of the general duty to Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

CONGRESS SHOULD ANNOUNCE NO POLICY EXCEPT THE FLAG.

It is urged that this nation should announce the policy of its purpose in the administration of the sovereignty. The flag of the nation has been planted on those islands. That is the emblem of its policy, and ever has been, even when at half-mast, mourning the loss of her sons slain in its defense. The flag never did, and I hope never may, represent but one policy. That policy is individual manhood; the right to enjoy religious and civil liberty; the right of every man to believe in and worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; the right to stand protected equally with every other man before the law in the enjoyment of freedom, of personal rights, and of property. Let the flag, as the representative of these principles, be planted and become dominant on and over every island and every inhabitant. No other, no better, policy can be proclaimed. In no other way can this Congress and nation discharge its duty to the people of the United States and to the people of the islands. Congress should proclaim this policy by its acts and make no attempt to do what it has no power to do—to pledge or limit the action of future Congresses. What future Congresses shall do is for them to determine and proclaim. It can not be assumed that wisdom will die with the present Congress, nor that it is any part of its duty to proclaim what future Congresses shall do. Sufficient unto the day is the duty thereof.

CONSENT OF THE INHABITANTS OF ISLANDS NOT REQUIRED.

If these principles are enforced as far as applicable to the government of these islands, the inhabitants will be blessed, whether they consent thereto in advance or not. In a representative government the right to govern is not derived from the consent of the governed until they arrive at a stage of advancement which will render them capable of giving an intelligent consent. Four-fifths of the inhabitants of this country have given no consent except representatively. The consent of women, as a rule, and of minors is never required, nor allowed to be taken. Wives and children are assumed to be represented by husbands and fathers. Boys are to be educated, trained, and ripened into manhood before they are capable of giving consent. Doubtless the boys of fifteen in this country are better prepared to give an intelligent consent than are the inhabitants of those islands. This is not their fault. After having lived for more than three hundred years under a government of oppression and practical denial of all rights, it is not wonderful that they are not capable of judging how they should be governed. They are to be trained in these principles; first, by being allowed, under experienced leaders, to put them in practice in the simpler forms of government, and then be gradually advanced in their exercise, as their knowledge increases.

All accounts agree that the administration of justice in the islands through the courts has been a farce; that no native could establish his rights or gain his cause, however righteous, against the Spaniards and priests; that therein bribery and every form of favoritism and oppression prevailed. Under such training and abuse falsehood and deceit have become prevalent. These most discouraging traits of character can not be changed in a generation, and never except by pure, impartial administration of justice through the courts, regardless of who may be the parties to the controversies. In my judgment, the people of this nation obtain more and clearer knowledge of their personal and property rights through the administration of justice in the courts than from all other sources.

WHAT EXPERIENCE TEACHES.

All experience teaches that the requirements and impartial practice of the principles of civil and religious liberty cannot speedily be acquired by the inhabitants, left to their own way, under a protectorate by this nation. The experience of this nation in governing and endeavoring to civilize the Indians teaches this. For about a century this nation exercised, in fact, a protectorate over the tribes, and allowed the natives of the country to manage their tribal and other relations in their own way. The advancement in civilization was very slow and hardly perceptible. During the comparatively few years that Congress has, by direct legislation, controlled their relations to each other and to the reservations the advancement in civilization has been tenfold more rapid. This is in accord with all experience. The untaught cannot become acquainted with the difficult problems of government and of individual rights, and their due enforcement, without skillful guides.

No practical educator would think of creating a body of skilled mechanics by turning the unskilled loose in a machine shop. He would place there trained superintendents and guides to impart information to their untaught brains, and to guide their unskilled hands. It is equally true that they would never become skilled without using their brains and hands in operating the machines. So, too, if this nation would successfully bring the inhabitants of these islands into the practice of the principles of religious and civil liberty, it must both give them the opportunity to be taught in, and to practice them, first in their simpler forms and then in their higher application, but under competent and trained teachers and guides placed over them by this nation. It is equally true that the laws and customs now prevailing must neither be pushed one side nor changed too suddenly. They must be permeated gradually by the leaven of civil and religious liberty until the entire population is leavened. To accomplish this without mistake, in the interest of the people of this nation and of the inhabitants of the islands, is a most difficult task, demanding honesty, intelligence, and the greatest care and good judgment. The task is rendered much more difficult because the people of the islands have hitherto been governed by the application of the direct opposite of these principles, and are composed of great numbers of tribes, speaking different dialects and languages, and governed by different customs and laws.

SEPARATE DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT DEMANDED.

The successful solution of this problem demands accurate knowledge of the present conditions of the entire population, and of the different classes, of their respective habits, customs, and laws. As the principles of civil and religious liberty are gradually intermingled with their present customs, habits, and laws, changes will be constantly going forward. An intimate knowledge of these changes will also be necessary for their successful government. Hence, as a first step to a successful discharge of this duty, Congress should create a department of government, charged with the sole duty to become accurately acquainted with and to take charge of their affairs, and place exact knowledge of them before Congress for its guidance. They should not as now, be left in charge of departments overloaded and overworked.

APPOINTMENTS MUST BE MADE NONPOLITICAL.

The second step to be taken is to remove all civil appointments in the islands from the realm of politics. The nation will utterly fail in the discharge of its duty if the islands are made political footballs subject to change in government with every political change in the Administration. The administration of the sovereignty must be intelligent, honest, and uninterrupted. A faithful, intelligent man, with a full knowledge of the situation, must not be displaced to give place to one ignorant of the conditions, however capable otherwise. The duty rests upon the entire nation. It must be discharged for the interest of the whole nation. There are honest, capable men in every political party. These should be sought out and given place in the administration of this sovereignty, as nearly as may be in proportion to the strength of the several political parties in the nation. Then, when there is a political change in the Administration, there will be no inducement to make extensive changes in the administrative appointees of the sovereignty.

CONCLUSION.

Difficult as is the administration of this sovereignty, if honestly and intelligently undertaken such admistration, I believe, will be beneficial both to the people of this nation and to the inhabitants of the islands. Difficulties which have come as these have come—unsought—honestly and faithfully encountered, bring wisdom and strength. The struggle for nearly a century in this nation over slavery gave wonderful wisdom, strength, and clearness of insight into the great principles which the nation is now called upon to apply to these oppressed islands. Stagnation is decay and ultimate death. Honest struggle, endeavor, and discussion bring light, growth, development, and strength. The primary object to be attained by the discharge of this duty is the elevation of the inhabitants of the islands physically, mentally, and morally; to make them industrious, honest, intelligent, liberty-loving, and law-abiding. This end attained, the secondary object, commercial and material growth among them and among the surrounding millions, will surely follow. The first unattained, the second, at best, will be spasmodic and of little worth.

The intelligent, thoughtful observer sees more in nature, and in the ordering of the affairs of this world, than the unguided plans and devices of men and nations. For him the wisdom of the Eternal shapes the affairs of men and of nations, sometimes even against their selfish plans and desires. For such, His hand planted the seed of individual manhood, and for centuries watched over and cared for it in its slow growth amidst infinite sufferings, struggles, and conflicts, until, at length, planted on these shores, not entirely in its purity, but at last brought to full fruitage in the terrible struggles and conflicts which ended with the civil war. Under Him, no man, no nation, lives to itself alone. If it has received much, much must it give to the less favored. Under His guidance, I believe, the discharge of this great and difficult duty has fallen, unsought, to the lot of this nation. Then let the nation take up the duty, which the Ruler of men and nations has placed upon it; go forward in an honest, unselfish, intelligent, earnest endeavor to discharge it for the highest interest of the nation, and of the islands, in the fear and under the direction of the Supreme Ruler, who guided the fathers and founders; and the nation will not, can not, encounter failure.

During the delivery of Mr. Ross's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will suspend for a moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, so that the Senator from Vermont may proceed.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the request I was about to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the unfinished business be informally laid aside. If there be no objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from Vermont will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. Ross's speech,

HUGO O. LOEWI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, and on motion of Mr. DAVIS, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in response to the resolution of the Senate of January 11, 1900, calling upon him "to furnish the Senate with copies of all the correspondence which has been had relating to the claim of Hugo O. Loewi against Haiti since the response to the Senate's resolution of June 6, 1898."

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 23, 1900.

CUBA SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, with reference to the claim of the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company, a British corporation, for compensation of the expenses incurred in repairing the damage done to its cables and property by United States forces during the war with Spain.

I recommend that, as an act of equity and comity, provision be made by the Congress for reimbursement to the company of the actual expenses incurred by it in the repair of its lines and property.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 23, 1900.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS. There is some question about its reference. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations or the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

Mr. DAVIS. It should go to the Committee on Relations with Cuba. I move that it be so referred.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate resolution No. 68, and that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Louisiana, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That an enactment, by constitution or otherwise, by any State which confers the right to vote upon any of its citizens because of their descent from certain persons or classes of persons, and excludes other citizens because they are not descended from such persons or classes of persons, having all other qualifications prescribed by law, in the opinion of the Senate, is in violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States and of a fundamental principle of our republican form of government.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, the solution of the race question in the United States is one of the most serious problems that ever confronted a nation. It is confined to no locality. Every State is affected by it. The social, political, and industrial welfare of the South have influences on other sections of the country. We are but on the threshold. No man can predict what is beyond. So far the best intellects of the South have endeavored to find some remedy to make the South prosperous notwithstanding the presence of a vast number of ignorant blacks, to make her social position clear and defined in the separation of the races, and to place her on a political basis that will insure stability to her institutions; make the ballot box the sacred depository of the liberties of the people instead of the charnel house where under negro domination they were assassinated; to prevent them by means of the ballot and superior numbers from again getting control of the State and inaugurating the era of terrorism and corruption which prevailed under this Government from 1868 to 1877.

The recollection of that period is like a hell-born dream, and one is almost unnerved at the mention. It is the darkest and most shameful period in the history of the human race. The wonder now is that by force it was not sooner terminated by an outraged people.

Annul the legislation of Louisiana which has for its sole object the advancement of both races, the progress of the State socially, politically, and industrially, and inaugurate again negro domination in that State, the tragic period of 1876 will be reenacted. The white Republicans of Louisiana make no complaint against the provisions of the present constitution regarding suffrage. The more intelligent negroes accept it as a wise settlement of the question of suffrage. The ignorant of the negro race are indifferent about it, as they have long ceased to have any political affiliations except those which were momentarily created by the purchase of their vote.

There never has been any disposition on the part of the people of Louisiana to deprive the negro of any of his political or civil rights. There has been and will continue to be determination, fixed and unalterable, to deny him social privileges on equality with the whites, to prohibit him from aspiring to an equality in social life, which nature forbids.

Very recently the so-called National Republican party in Louisiana held a meeting of its executive committee. The chairman, H. P. Herwig, of the regular Republican party of Louisiana, was present and evidently the controlling influence in shaping the proceedings of the National Republicans. There was a combine made between the two organizations. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That all Republicans, and all other persons who are qualified as electors under the constitution and laws of this State, without distinction as to race, color, religion, nativity, or former political affiliation, who condemn the usurpation of 1896, who favor free, fair, and honest elections, who believe in the selection by the people of their registrars of voters and of all other election officers, and who desire to strip the executive of the power to dictate to and control, through his appointees, all conventions, registrations, and elections are invited to participate in the selection of delegates to the convention which is called by this committee.

The following agreement was entered into between the two organizations:

It is agreed between P. F. Herwig, chairman of the State Republican committee of the State of Louisiana, and W. E. Howell, chairman of the State Republican committee of the State of Louisiana, that there shall be a joint call issued by the committees presided over by the said Herwig and Howell for a primary election to elect delegates to a State convention to be held at a time and place to be agreed on, say, not later than the —— day of February, 1900, for the purpose of nominating a Republican State ticket and for delegates at large to the national Republican convention called to meet at Philadelphia on the 20th day of June, 1900.

All Republican qualified electors under the constitution and laws of Louisiana shall be entitled to participate in said primary.

Rules and regulations for the conduct of said primary to be agreed on by a committee of five from each party.

The said Herwig and Howell obligate themselves to appoint a committee of their respective committees to report to their respective State committees the means adopted to carry out the purposes aforesaid.

The object and purpose of this agreement is to harmonize all party differences and to present a united front to the common enemy and build up a strong Republican party in this State.

Final action on the agreement is to be had by the respective State committees.

P. F. HERWIG, Chairman.
W. E. HOWELL, Chairman.

NEW ORLEANS, January 6, 1900.

No complaint was made of the suffrage article in the constitution of Louisiana. It was, in fact, approved. One member of the committee went so far as to claim that the Republican party of Louisiana was responsible for the suffrage clause, as it had forced the Democrats to adopt it, and that the Democrats had no right to claim credit for it.

It will be observed that this was a primary election, and under the call the Republicans asked only that those who were qualified electors under the constitution of the State of Louisiana should have the right to vote.

From the day that the negro was enfranchised and negro domination prevailed in the State until 1876, when it was overthrown, there was an era of corruption, vice, and tyranny not equaled in any age. Congressional investigation and reports prove this. As an initial step to this corrupt era the Freedman's Bureau was organized. The negro was made to believe that he was under the special protection of the Government and its Army, and that the white man was his inferior, and that any personal grievance he had would at once be righted by the Bureau and the offending white man who dared to insult him would be summarily punished. This too often happened on the unsupported testimony of some negro who imagined he was offended and his new-born liberty slighted.

The Bureau agent exacted from every planter a large sum of money for the privilege of employing negroes, reaching in some instances, to my personal knowledge, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars for the year. Negroes became justices of the peace, constables, sheriffs, legislators, State officials, lieutenant-governor, generals of the militia. Even the high office of governor was awarded to him. They were ignorant, insolent, and oppressive, and corrupt beyond mention. The State debt in eight years increased from four to fifty million dollars. They were police jurors in parishes and councilmen in the towns and cities. All parochial and municipal indebtedness increased in the same proportion that the State debt had increased. The State expenses alone went to $19,000,000 a year, when the legitimate expenses ought to have been then, as now, one and a quarter million of dollars.

It is well known that laws were enacted during recess. They were promulgated after the adjournment of the legislature as having been passed, when they never were presented to that body. The journals were fraudulently manipulated in order to show that they went through the regular course of legislation. The courts as a rule were corrupt. Negro jurors were impaneled, and no white man had an opportunity in criminal cases for a fair trial.

A drunken judge on the United States bench at midnight signed an order organizing the legislature of the State, and no member was permitted to enter the statehouse without a permit signed by the United States marshal. Polling places were before dawn taken possession of by negroes, who stood in long lines, and it was with great difficulty and humiliation that a white man could vote. White men under arrest for some fancied wrong were brought to the polls under a guard of United States soldiers to encourage, edify, and amuse the negro voters. The entire State was a military camp, and United States troops were almost daily employed as political agents. Detachments were furnished sheriffs and constables to make arrests on warrants issued by courts of record and justices of the peace. The parties in many instances were turned over to the military authorities and, under the pretense of a rescue, kept under a military guard. United States marshals forged by the hundreds the names of United States commissioners to warrants and arrested with United States cavalry the most respectable citizens on fictitious charges and placed them in irons and confined them in loathsome dungeons.

The Republican Representative from the Fifth Congressional district of Louisiana had the boldness to publish in a Republican paper called the Intelligencer, in order to give him greater power over the negroes, that these troops had been furnished at his request, on the requisition of the Attorney-General of the United States, for the sole purpose of keeping the Republicans in power. People lived in terror. Every man went armed, expecting an attack at any moment from the negroes. It was the pastime of drunken negroes riding along the roads to fire into dwelling houses. Prior to an election they became more turbulent. The people could no longer stand such a condition of affairs. For some months prior to the Presidential election of 1876 they became unusually violent and unruly.

The consequence was that the indignation of the people broke into fierce energy and overthrew the negro-carpetbag domination. At its end the State was in a pitiable condition. Tax collectors had stolen the collections they had made. The State treasury had been looted and the auditor's books made way with in order to prevent prosecution. Levees which had been built for $1 per square yard, when they ought not to have cost more than 19 or 21 cents per square yard, were found to be full of barrels in order to give them bulk. State credit was at the lowest ebb; warrants on the State treasury went begging on Carondelet street at 20 cents on the dollar, State bonds at 50 cents on the dollar. Demoralization and distrust were everywhere.

Under white rule the State recovered rapidly. Levees have been rebuilt; bonds have gone above par. The State treasury is full; warrants are at once cashed. Schools are prosperous for both white and colored. Peace prevails everywhere. The whites and negroes are on cordial terms. Crime has decreased; courts speedily and impartially administer justice. Officers are competent, careful, honest, and diligent. White immigrants from the West have come to Louisiana in large numbers since the overthrow of negro domination. Except the corrupt and adventurous carpetbagger, none ventured there before that time. The people of Louisiana have been watchful that there be no return to that era of debauchery and crime which I have described. Only one serious attempt has been made to go back to it. The negroes were massed as they were in 1868–1876, but the energy of the white people prevented this attempt to go back to that period; and so they will ever prevent it. No reasonable or intelligent man can find fault with them for this determination.

It has been an absorbing question with the people of Louisiana to regulate the suffrage so as to eliminate the ignorant negro as well as the ignorant white man who has no conception of our form of government. The regulation of the suffrage in the present constitution does not alone affect the negro. It affects a large number in New Orleans who have emigrated to the State since the civil war. The controlling motive in the adoption of the constitutional provision was to eliminate an impersonal mass from the electorate—a mass that exists in all large cities as well as in the fields of Louisiana. It is a dangerous power, one which has been a potent factor in the overthrow of governments and the destruction of nations. Its elimination from electoral power is the surest means of preserving republican government. It is corrupt. It is unreasoning. It has no intelligence. It has no thought. It is a dead weight and is moved by an external force. It has no personality, no individuality. It falls under the power and dominion of one man or a faction, and is moved irresistibly in a course that a directing will orders.

The bestowal of political power upon mere numbers—the impersonal mass—can not be justified. It is not the government of a free people. It will degenerate into absolutism. The exclusion of this impersonal mass is therefore no violation of any representative law. Its inclusion in the electorate is the degradation of the whole.

> The multitude is everywhere dangerous to the State, but the bestowal of power upon it is to place the arms of her arsenals in the hands of the blind. It is the unreason of the State when it calls upon ignorance, vice, and crime to determine its career.

The writer from whom the above quotation is taken says:

> The object of every political constitution is to exclude this element—that is, the impersonal mass—from authority in the State. The reference of power to it subjects the organization of society to brutal force, while the whole effort of civilization has been to wrest it from that blind and unthinking sway.

Democratic government is a representation of a person by a person, and not an inert mass by a person. Every elector has a personality which finds representation in the government.

In the very able and interesting address recently made before the Senate by the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana he attempted to show that the Filipinos were incapable of self-government. He read many statements from intelligent men residing among them, showing that if they had the right to vote they would vote according to the will of a leader or of their employers. They have no will of their own, no individuality, no personality, and are an impersonal mass. The views entertained by the distinguished Senator are those of a majority of Republican Senators in this Chamber, and, I presume, of the Senator from North Carolina, who offered the resolution.

If a people is incapable of self-government it is not entitled to be intrusted with electoral power. This is self-evident. The description of the Filipinos is exactly that of the negro race in Louisiana. They tried the experiment of government and made a great failure. While some of the authorities quoted by the Senator from Indiana say the Filipino might be intrusted with municipal government under restrictions, the negro experiment in Louisiana showed that the negro was unsafe when in charge of the municipalities of Louisiana. Why, then, do some of the Republicans insist upon inflicting upon Louisiana and North Carolina a government that they will not tolerate in the newly acquired territories? If it is to secure the negro vote for the Republican party, they will not succeed, unless you withdraw a part of the Army from the Philippines and again make a military camp of the entire State.

Review the history of negro suffrage in Louisiana. When first exercised by the negro, he fell under the power of the carpetbagger. The entire negro vote was moved by one influence; it was one aggregation. It was kept solid by continuous, unremitting attention, by promises of land and mules, by threats of a return to slavery, by promises of social equality with the whites, by the encouragement of race prejudices. When the power of the carpetbagger was broken, the negro fell under the domination of the whites. He was as tractable as when under the power of the carpetbagger. He voted just as his immediate employer in the country dictated him to vote. He had no will of his own. In some localities it was so well known that the entire vote on the plantation would be cast according to the views of the proprietor that the presence of the negro at the polls was dispensed with. In the cities and towns, where they were not employed in large numbers by any one person, they soon learned the money value of their votes, and through a chosen leader would sell to the highest bidder.

The Republican party existed only in name, composed of a few stragglers in New Orleans who kept up a simulated organization for the purpose of sending delegates to the Republican national convention. It is only since the regulation of the suffrage that the party begins to show some vitality, by attracting to it some intelligent and respectable white citizens and negroes who have sufficient intelligence and respectability to exercise the right of suffrage. Old-time but respectable Republicans and Democrats and the more intelligent of the negroes demanded a change in our political conditions and a reformation of the suffrage. The members of the convention which adopted the constitution of 1898 were able and conscientious. They were confronted with a serious problem, and, in my opinion, they solved it. The suffrage article of the constitution provides that every male citizen 21 years of age, a bona fide resident of the State for two years, of the parish one year, and of the precinct six months, shall be entitled to vote if he can read and write, or if he owns property, real or personal, assessed to him to the amount of $300. The qualification to read and write is tested by the ability of the voter to fill out the blank application to register, which is as follows:

I am a citizen of the State of Louisiana. My name is ——— ———. I was born in the State (or county) of ———, parish (or county) of ———, on the ——— day of ———, in the year ———. I am now ——— years ——— months and ——— days of age. I have resided in this State since ———, in this parish since ———, and in precinct No. ——, of ward No. ——, of this parish, since ———, and I am not disfranchised by any provision of the constitution of this State.

This test is simple enough. The disfranchisement has reference to article 202, which enumerates the causes to be conviction of crime the punishment of which is imprisonment at hard labor; inmates of charitable institutions, except the Soldiers' Home; those actually confined in any public prison, interdicted persons, insane or idiotic persons.

With the exception of this disfranchised class, any citizen, white or colored, who has the qualification of residence can vote if he be able to read and write or possesses property assessed to him of the value of $300. No constitutional objections can be urged to these qualifications. The constitution, section 5, article 197, excepts a certain class from the qualifications above stated. It is this article against which complaint is leveled, because it is said it discriminates against the negro. A like provision is contained in a proposed amendment to the constitution of North Carolina, which is the occasion of the resolution offered by the Senator from that State. Section 5 is as follows:

No male person who was on January 1, 1867, or at any date prior thereto, entitled to vote under the constitution or statutes of any State of the United States wherein he then resided, and no son or grandson of such person not less than 21 years of age at the date of adoption of this constitution, and no male person of foreign birth who was naturalized prior to the 1st day of January, 1898, shall be denied the right to register and vote in this State by reason of his failure to possess the educational or property qualifications prescribed by this constitution: Provided, He shall have resided in this State for five years next preceding the date at which he shall apply for registration, and shall have registered in accordance with the terms of this article prior to September 1, 1898; and no person shall be entitled to register under this section after said date.

The inclusion of this class does not exclude the negro from voting. He has the right in common with the white people on the conditions alike applicable to both races, that he can read and write, or that he owns a certain amount of real or personal property. He is deprived of no right of suffrage by the conferring of it upon another class. If the suffrage amendment, because it conferred the right to vote upon certain citizens, is to be interpreted as a discrimination against the negro, then no privilege could be granted to any white citizen by a State unless a negro was granted the same. The fourteenth amendment declares that the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States shall not be abridged by any State. This amendment was intended to protect the negro, so that he could not be discriminated against in public places of amusement and on public conveyances and in the courts. Suppose a State should for some reason or other provide for the free transportation of some of its citizens on a public conveyance, then, according to the views of those who complain of the suffrage amendment in the constitution of Louisiana, the State would be bound to grant the same privilege to an equal number of negroes.

Amendment fifteen of the Constitution of the United States says:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Wherein is the denial or the abridgment of the negro's right to vote by the inclusion of one class into the electorate? The right to vote still remains to him unimpaired. No one will say that the educational or property qualification provided for both races denies or abridges his right to vote under the fifteenth amendment. The gravamen of the complaint is that the same exemption from the educational or property qualification was not accorded the negro. If this had been done, the educational and property qualification would have been useless and the suffrage would have been in the same condition as it was before the adoption of the Constitution.

The Constitution of the United States does not confer the right to vote on anyone. This is left exclusively to the States. I am not aware of any restriction upon the State as to the persons it may admit to the electorate. Its power is unlimited. The only restriction imposed by the Constitution of the United States is that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. As I have stated, the State, in the exercise of its exclusive power to confer the right to vote, does not deny or abridge or deny the right of other citizens to vote by exempting a certain class from the qualification provided for the great body of electors.

There is nothing in the text of the suffrage clause quoted to show that there is any denial or abridgment of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition. The State, being the sole judge of the qualifications of electors, can discriminate among the illiterate as to electoral capacity. This is what the State of Louisiana has done. There were certain persons living in the country parishes who served the State with fidelity who could not read or write and who did not own property. The descendants of these people had no opportunity immediately after the war to obtain an education, as the struggle for an existence was hard. They had been voters. They attended public meetings punctually and heard discussions on public affairs. They knew who was President, governor of the State, and how they were elected, and had a very good comprehension of the principles of the Government and the duties of public officers. They were incorruptible.

No money or other consideration akin to bribery could influence them. They had a personality. They did not vote en masse at the dictation of anyone. It was right, it was just, that they should be continued as voters. The exemption is not partial to the white race. It deprived a great many people in the city of New Orleans of the right to vote. Since the close of the war between the States large numbers of foreigners have come to New Orleans and many have gone into the sugar district who can not read and write and who have not the property qualification. Prior to the constitution of 1898 they were voters, even after they had filed a declaration of intention to become citizens of the United States, and were influenced and controlled by leaders and voted en masse as directed. This class has been disfranchised, and will remain so until they become qualified voters.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Louisiana pardon an interruption for a moment?

Mr. McENERY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. There is now pending in my State a proposed suffrage amendment, to be voted on next August, containing the same "grandfather clause" of the Louisiana amendment already adopted in that State. This grandfather clause, which is section 5, is, in my opinion, clearly unconstitutional, and I had understood that the Senator from Louisiana held to the same opinion; but it seems from his present remarks that he is now undertaking to defend that monstrous absurdity.

Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I should like to ask him if he was not of the opinion when this amendment was pending in his State that it was clearly unconstitutional, and if he did not so advise the convention of his State, and if he did not also advise them that the ablest constitutional lawyers of this body held to the same opinion?

Mr. McENERY. Yes, sir. When the constitutional convention was in session I was telegraphed to know what was my opinion of this section 5. I replied to that telegram that in my opinion it was unconstitutional. I then received another telegram, after its adoption, to know if, when it was attacked, I would defend it in the Senate of the United States. To that telegram I replied that I would.

I stand, Mr. President, always ready to defend the people of Louisiana when their character is attacked. I stand ready to defend them when their interests are in peril. I stand ready to defend them when their laws are assailed.

It is the same way, Mr. President, in reference to my duty to the Government of the United States in regard to the war that is now being waged in the Philippine Islands. I do not stop to inquire whether the people of the United States are right or wrong. I do not stop to inquire whether or not the first volley was fired by the Filipinos or by the troops of the United States. It is enough for me to know that the authority and power of this Government is assailed and that it is the duty of every citizen, no matter what were his convictions, to rally to the support of the Government, not only to send its ships abroad and its armies upon the field and to supply money and munitions of war, but with our great sympathy and whole will and heart to stand by the President of the United States and uphold his hand until the enemies of this Government are brought under subjection. That same motive, Mr. President, induces me to defend to the best of my ability the constitution of the State of Louisiana when it is assailed.

But, Mr. President, although that was my opinion at that time, since then I have studied the question more carefully, and I hope the reasons which I assign are a sufficient justification for that change of opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think I now understand the Senator. He said the amendment was unconstitutional; but he also said in another letter that if his people adopted it, he would do his best to defend it in the United States Senate. I do not wish to interfere with his speech; but if the Senator does not object to the interruption, I have in my hand both of his letters, to which he has referred, and an editorial from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, from which I should like, with the permission of the Senator, to read.

The Senator's first letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1898.

To the Times-Democrat:

In answer, I say that section 5 is grossly unconstitutional. I have submitted the same to some of the ablest Democrats of the Senate, who are able constitutional lawyers. They all concur in my opinion that if adopted, the effect will be to lose in our representation in Congress and in the electoral vote of the State.

S. D. McENERY.

The second, to which the Senator himself has referred, is also addressed to the New Orleans Times-Democrat and is under date of March 19, 1898. The Senator has already stated the substance of that letter. He says that after the amendment, which he opposed and denounced as "grossly unconstitutional," was adopted he would try to defend it when it was attacked.

That letter is as follows:

[Special to The Times-Democrat.]

I know of no better plan for a suffrage article in the constitution than an educational or property qualification. This was recommended for adoption as an amendment to the present constitution.

It was defeated not because of its defects, but for other reasons. There was universal regret at its defeat, and complaints made against Democratic authority for its defeat. I am opposed to the South Carolina plan. It is an expedient. In time we will have to adopt the plan herein suggested. A serious problem confronts us. It ought to be solved in a manly, courageous, and honest way. I have no apprehension of negro supremacy or undue negro influence in elections under an educational or property qualification. The poll-tax system is said to be effective in Arkansas, Mississippi, and probably in Tennessee. It may not suit conditions in some parts of Louisiana. There is diversity of opinion. It may be reconciled by referring the matter to the legislature with discretion.

Confederate veterans and voters in 1868 can be protected by provision admitting them to vote without qualifications. This is inclusion of one class and not the exclusion of another. In answer to a telegram from delegates, I say that in the Senate I would support any plan adopted when attacked. My duty to the people of Louisiana would demand this.

S. D. MCENERY.

I understand that the Senator is now simply carrying out his pledge to support whatever they adopted, even though it were "grossly unconstitutional."

In this connection I will also read a short extract from an editorial in the Times-Democrat from its issue the next day after this unconstitutional amendment was adopted, commenting upon the same:

After themselves disowning and fiercely denouncing section 5, a majority of members of the constitutional convention yesterday passed that offensive section—offensive to Democracy, to political honesty, and to Americanism. * * * And the convention, too, has passed this offensive section in face of the fact that the ablest Democrats in the United States Senate have declared it to be unconstitutional. Senators CAFFERY and MCENERY have protested against its passage, and have declared that it contravenes the Federal Constitution. In this opinion they are joined by such stalwart Democrats and uncompromising States' rights Senators as Turpie of Indiana, LINDSAY of Kentucky, VEST of Missouri, BERRY of Arkansas, Walthall of Mississippi, TURLEY of Tennessee, PETTUS of Alabama, and MCLAURIN of South Carolina, and many members of the House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. President, this same constitutional amendment, this proposition "offensive to political honesty and to Americanism," is now to be voted upon by the people of my State. My opinion about it is the same as that expressed by the Times-Democrat and by the Senator in his letter to that paper. But I am glad to hear any arguments as to its constitutionality. But the Senator is now discussing the evils of negro domination more than the constitutionality of this amendment. If the Senator had before this body a proposition to abrogate the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, then I would be ready to discuss with him the advisability of negro suffrage, to consider its evils and how to remedy or to prevent the negro domination which he has said he has had in his State, or which might exist anywhere else. There is no negro domination in my State, and never will be, for we have more than two white voters for every negro voter.

However, that is not the question now before us, as I understand it. It is a legal question that confronts us. As long as the fifteenth amendment stands I consider it the duty of every Senator and of every citizen——

Mr. MCENERY. I am going to argue that legal question. I was just going to do that, if the Senator will permit me to go on.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will let me finish this sentence, I will listen to him with a great deal of interest. I say it is the duty of every State not to violate the fifteenth amendment as long as it stands as a part of the organic law of the land. In fact, we can not violate it, for our attempts to do so will be declared void by the courts.

I shall be glad to have the Senator address himself, also, to another phase of this question in which he is interested in his State and in which the people of my State are interested, and it is this: If section 5 is unconstitutional, as the Senator advised the convention of his State that it was, even though he agreed to try to defend its unconstitutional action——

Mr. MCENERY. I will follow my own course of reasoning, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BUTLER. But it is not the Senator's reasoning, but the probable action of the Supreme Court, of which I am now going to speak. If section 5 is unconstitutional, then, Mr. President, the question is, Will the court knock that out—that section—leaving the remainder of the amendment stand? If it does, then the illiterate white citizens of the Senator's State, to whom he has just paid such a fine tribute, would be then disfranchised and be powerless to remove that provision from the constitution of his State.

The same thing faces the people of my State. There are over 60,000 illiterate white voters in my State who would be disfranchised, as large a number as there would be of negroes, if section 5 is unconstitutional; and if the courts should follow the usual construction and knock out the objectionable parts, leaving the remainder of the constitutional provision, which would, without section 5, make a constitutional scheme of limiting suffrage by an educational qualification applying to both races alike, to stand.

Mr. President, this is a danger that should appeal to everyone, even though he is willing to violate the fifteenth amendment, unless he desires to see the poor and illiterate whites also disfranchised. I hope to hear the Senator discuss this phase of the question before he concludes.

Mr. MCENERY. In the opinion in the case of United States vs. Reese et al. it said by the organ of the court:

If citizens of one race, having certain qualifications, are permitted by law to vote, those of another having the same qualifications must be.

This is the strongest language in the opinion relating to the denial or abridgment of the right of the negro to vote. This statement means that where the general law prescribes the qualifications to vote the negro who has these qualifications can not be denied the privilege. The State of Louisiana has a provision in its constitution prescribing qualifications for all voters, white and colored, and the violation of the fifteenth amendment must necessarily be in the denial of the act of voting, by a refusal to permit the negro to register or to deposit his vote on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The exception of a certain class from the qualifications provided by the Constitution in no way affects the negro's vote, nor does it affect the right to vote of white men who were not voters in Louisiana or any one of the States of the Union in 1867 or prior thereto.

It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the Constitution of the United States has not conferred the right of suffrage upon anyone, and that the United States has no voters of their own creation in the States. (21 Wall., 178; United States vs. Cruikshank et al., 92 U. S., 542.) In the latter case it was said by the court, after having quoted from United States vs. Reese et al., 92 U. S., 214:

From this it appears that the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship; but that exemption from discrimination in the exercise of that right on account of race, etc., is, but it must be expressly averred. (United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542.)

The fact is, that all negroes who can read and write, and who have the qualifications of residence, are in the electorate, and all will be when they acquire these qualifications. From this it will appear that the article was striking at ignorance among both white and colored, and not at the negro race.

The word "white," which would show a discrimination on account of color, etc., is not in the article regulating the suffrage. Affirmatively it confers the right to vote on the negro. (Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U. S., 651.)

The right to vote in the State comes from the State; but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States, but the latter has been. The provisions in the constitution of Louisiana in regulating the suffrage do not express any discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It is not enough to infer or suspect that the suffrage article in the Constitution discriminates. In McPherson vs. Blacker (110 U. S., page 1) it was said, reviewing both the fourteenth and the fifteenth amendments:

The right to vote intended to be protected refers to the right to vote as established by the laws and constitution of the State. There is no color for the contention that under the amendment every male inhabitant of the State, being a citizen of the United States, has, from the time of his majority, a right to vote for Presidential electors.

The State therefore having the exclusive power to say who shall be electors, has the right to discriminate between its citizens as to capacity for electoral rights, provided it makes no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. (Williams vs. Mississippi, 170 U. S., page 213.)

The State has the exclusive right of prescribing qualifications for the voter. It has prescribed them, and every negro in the State can vote if he has these qualifications, which in the general law are common to him and the white man.

In the State of Louisiana the negroes who can not read and write are those who were slaves. They are fast passing away, leaving a generation behind them who can read and write, and who have learned to do so in the schools established for colored people by the State of Louisiana. The election law of Louisiana is of the Australian kind, and every voter can now have his vote counted and an expression of his will enforced. There negroes can register and vote without interference.

The State of Louisiana has done a great deal for the negro. It has elevated him morally and intellectually. He pays no taxes of any amount, yet the people of that State cheerfully and generously contribute for his schools and his churches. Schools are in every neighborhood. The State has organized a prosperous university, where there is industrial training and facilities for a higher education. As the negro will not patronize a school where white teachers are provided, a normal school has been provided to educate their teachers. Besides the university established and supported by the State, there are several colleges of a high order with able faculties.

Had the negro continued in power, the State would have been one vast sea of desolation; values of all kinds would have been destroyed, fields uncultivated, improvements of all kinds delayed; schools would have been closed, and he, the tool of unscrupulous adventurers, would be now sunk in moral degradation and mental darkness.

The people of the South availed themselves of the first opportunity, after the white people gained the ascendency, to rebuild their shattered fortunes. In 1870 there were 4,352,317 bales of cotton, with an aggregate value of $326,032,066; in 1880, 6,605,750 bales, of an aggregate value of $344,555,920; in 1890, 8,652,597, worth $369,118,787.02; in 1898, 11,119,994 bales, worth $343,399,668, but because of the low price of cotton—4½ cents per pound—this enormous increase was worth $100,002,200 less than the crop of 1890. From 1870 to 1890 the population of the South increased 100 per cent. From 1880 to 1890 the South made an advance of 37 per cent in farm products as against a gain of 50 per cent for all the rest of the country. The total value of farms for the South in 1880 was $660,000,000; for the rest of the country it was $1,555,000,000. In 1890 the South had gained $107,000,000, or 16 per cent, while the rest of the country had gained only $141,000,000, or 9 per cent.

During the year just closed there were established in the South industrial enterprises to the number of 1,938, comprising agricultural, forestal, and mineral industries. In nine Southern States there are 4,773 knitting machines; in five there are are 57 woolen mills, devoted to making all wool and mixed wool. Several of the Southern States are manufacturing furniture from native woods, said to be as good as that made elsewhere. Cotton factories are being established everywhere near the fields of production, and during the past year there was consumed 1,400,026 bales. Coal and iron mines have been opened and furnaces and rolling mills established. Railroads now cross every section of the country.

"The opportunities of the South are those of the nation." Let her alone and her possibilities for the future can only be conjectured. They are limitless.

The rapid industrial progress of the South was impossible under negro domination. Restore to the negro indiscriminately the ballot and invest him with power, and there will not only be a check to the progress of the South, but the advantage gained will be lost.

There can be no admixture of the races. This is a law of nature. They must work out their destinies on parallel lines, which can not come together. The Anglo-Saxon blood and brain will always be the superior and can not be subordinated to the negro.

The negro, unfortunately for the country, is here to stay. His deportation is impossible. He has strong local attachments which will keep him in the South. He must move along in his own line of development, directed, encouraged, and assisted by the Anglo-Saxon. He will become more intelligent, more self-sustaining, and better adapted for work along all lines of industrial development. Since the supremacy of the white people has asserted itself the negro is becoming more tractable, a better laborer, a better mechanic, and in some instances has attained a respectable standing in the professions. These intelligent negroes are in the electorate and are helping to shape the destiny of the State. It would be a cruel wrong to again throw them back into race hostility and prejudice and to consign those who have the opportunities for advancement to again possess the idea that they are "wards of the nation," better than a white man, and are entitled to Government support and to live in idleness and dissipation.

We of the South are making the negro's condition better every day. He has been treated so as to destroy, to a great extent, the antagonism engendered by carpetbag government. He is regarded as a factor in the South's future development. He is not debarred from work because he is a negro. The fields, the workshops, the factories, and the professions are open to him for his development. We do not deny his political rights because he is a negro. We regulate the suffrage because he is ignorant, and at present the majority of the negro race has no electoral capacity.

The course of civilization has been in the supremacy of the white race. The physical properties of soil and climate have had less influence than intellectual superiority. In every climate, on every soil where the white man has appeared, he has asserted supremacy. The African and the Oriental fall under his dominion, and the populations are moved and controlled as he directs. It is so to-day in India, in Africa, and is rapidly crystallizing into a fact in the far east, in China, and in the islands of the Pacific. The conception of this power and strength in the white race, whose distinction is in the separation of the races, is the hope of civilization and the enlightenment of the world. Language and art and science and architecture and all modes of culture will bear the impress of the white man's supremacy. It is a universal law. It is present here and everywhere, and no act of Congress can suspend it.

The greatness of a republic consists in the representation of persons. Political power in a representative government must be in the organization of electoral action, so that there may be an expression, a realization of personality in the government.

"There is no basis for electoral rights where there is no capacity for electoral action." In the impersonal mass, where there is an absence of individuality and personality and an absence of electoral capacity, it is the duty of the State to lift the individuals composing the mass from an indifference to electoral power and to educate them for its exercise. It is the duty of the State to develop in each member of the community personal power as an elector. This is what the State of Louisiana is accomplishing. It provides for the negro and the ignorant emigrant schools where they can learn the elements of an education. It goes further and provides for higher education. The State is trying from among this class "the formation of an independent manhood, so that he who has reached his majority in years is always in his political majority." When this shall have been accomplished the voter can exclaim, "I have not gone with the multitude to do evil."

"It is thus also that Indians are excluded from voting; not because they are not taxed, but because they are subservient to the will of a chief; and absolutely controlled by it they are without freedom. They also exist in a tribal relation, the organization of a race, which isolates them from the organic and moral being of the nation; but in withdrawing from the tribal relation they come upon a national position and should be regarded as members of the nation."

The populations in the Philippines, as we learn from the junior Senator from Indiana, are wanting in personality and fall under the control of some superior mind, and are not fit to be intrusted with electoral power. And this may be truly said of the mass of the negro population in the South. Every person should have representation in the State, but this means every actual person, one who is possessed of sufficient intelligence to separate himself from the mass and who is invested with a personality, showing a capacity for electoral action.

The qualifications of an elector are defined in a general law, but they may be more exactly defined as the State progresses. In defining the qualifications of an elector under the Constitution of the United States the State has the power to exclude those who have no will of their own, and to keep them so excluded until they attain the qualifications prescribed by law. It can more exactly define the qualifications of electors by including a class which it deems of sufficient intelligence to be admitted to the right of suffrage. The fact that the admission of the class designated in section 5 of the constitution of Louisiana to the right of suffrage, and that it increases the number of electors and may give an advantage in number to the white people, is no evidence that the right of the negro to vote has been denied or abridged.

The State of Louisiana undoubtedly has the power to enact a law declaring that, for the love and reverence of the people of Louisiana for the late General Beauregard, his descendents, as a mark of distinction, shall have the right to vote and be exempt from the suffrage clause of the Constitution. This would not deny or abridge the right of the negro to vote. But under the theory of the Senator from North Carolina it would, unless a negro was given the same distinction. Some negro general of militia of the reconstruction era would have to be thus honored, or the law would be a violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

The fifteenth amendment never intended to place the negro on a perfect plane of equality with the white man, so as to deny privileges to the latter without giving the same to the former. It means only that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged because of his race, color, or previous condition.

In our democratic government the majority rules. This is not tyranny. There is no power so devoid of tyranny as the political majority. All tyranny has sprung from the minority acting beyond and outside of the law. It has been said that 300 persons inaugurated the reign of terror in France. A few carpetbaggers controlling the negroes inaugurated a reign of terror in the South. In Louisiana, after the disappearance of the carpetbag negro government, one man controlling sometimes 100 negro voters exercised a dangerous power. He overthrew the will of voters who lived in another section of the State where no such power was attainable, because of the absence of the negro from those sections. With the mass of the negroes as voters there was no political majority in Louisiana. A minority necessarily governed because of the preponderance of the negro population and the ability to absolutely control it by one or more persons. The remedy is a principle of representation involving the right of all as against the arbitrary rule of a few controlling an impersonal mass of voters.

In the constitution of 1898 for arbitrary action of an individual or class there has been substituted the well-being of the whole against the design of a few. There may be to the unthinking an apparent wrong in the inclusion of one class of voters into the electorate, but this inclusion was of a class who have freedom of will, independence, and capacity for political action. The inclusion of the negro, as I have described his capacity for the suffrage, would have been a greater wrong and a detriment to the whole electorate. The State of Louisiana was compelled to change this condition in its political affairs so as to avert grave disaster in the paralysis of power and will and to give strength and energy and power and authority to the government. It was compelled to look among its citizens for a higher personality in order to bestow electoral power upon them. It had the sole and exclusive right to do this. Its judgment can not be questioned unless you find that for arbitrary reasons the negro was excluded from the electorate simply because he was a negro.

The question raised in the resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina is a judicial one. Congress has the power, but it has not the right, to delare any law or constitutional provision of a State unconstitutional. Under the Constitution of the United States this is the exclusive prerogative of the judiciary. If the resolution should pass, it would be meaningless in the face of a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States declaring such a provision in the constitution of a State constitutional, not being in violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. Congress can pass no law coercing a State. If, under the guaranty of a republican form of government to the States, any State should organize a government not republican, but hostile to that of the United States, then the State would be virtually placing itself outside of the Union, and Congress, by the military power of the Government, if necessary, would undoubtedly have the right to rehabilitate the State and organize a government republican in form.

But because a law or an article in the constitution of a State is invalid, because of its conflict with the Constitution of the United States, gives Congress no right or authority to declare the law or the article in the constitution null and void. It would be the usurpation of judicial authority and in itself unconstitutional. Suppose the judicial department should decree that the article in the constitution of the State is null and void. The effect of the decree would be to reinstate the suffrage as it was before the constitution was adopted. Then, if a negro should be denied the right to vote—the exercise of the act of voting—because of his race, color, or previous condition, the fifteenth amendment would be violated, and the individual cr person preventing the act of voting would be liable to be prosecuted under any law of Congress enacted to carry out the provisions of said amendment.

In my opinion Congress can only enact a law to act upon the person or persons who deny or abridge the right to exercise the act of voting on account of race, color, or previous condition. It can not punish the State. It can not deprive the State of any of its constitutional rights. Its laws must be respected until they are declared unconstitutional by the judiciary department of the Government.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I have just been told that while I was absent from the Chamber the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] had a newspaper article read in which it was stated that I had given an opinion that the provision of the Louisiana constitution in question was unconstitutional. I wish to state that I never gave any such opinion. At the time the newspaper article referred to was printed I had never seen the provision in the Louisiana constitution and had not discussed it.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 602. It is a bill which is of very great importance to a great many people in the South. It was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and a favorable report submitted on it to the Senate. I shall be very much obliged if the Senate will allow the bill to be taken up and put on its passage at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from South Carolina what is the Calendar number of the bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Calendar number is 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 18. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 602) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If this bill leads to any discussion I shall certainly have to object to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I only wish to ask that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] who introduced the bill may have an opportunity to make a brief explanation. If it leads to any debate, of course we will have to submit to the will of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, about a year ago my attention was called to these claims, and I gave them and their history a very careful examination. The result of that examination was that I came to the conclusion that they were not only just, but that it was the bounden duty of Congress to provide for their settlement. I will proceed to state in a very brief way what the history of this business has been and what led me to that conclusion.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question before he goes on with his statement. I notice in reading the bill that it is provided that judgments under the bill shall be paid not as ordinarily by appropriations made by Congress, but out of the fund of captured and abandoned property. Will this bill under any circumstances or any construction cover what have been known and what have been discussed heretofore as the captured and abandoned property claims in the South, for cotton and other kinds of property?

Mr. DAVIS. I think it does.

Mr. HALE. The Senator thinks it covers them?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. That, Mr. President, amounts to ninety or a hundred million dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. But the amount of the disbursement is strictly limited to the fund in the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will let me go on now——

Mr. HALE. The Senator has answered my question. I did not suppose it covered the question of captured and abandoned cotton.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in regard to the captured and abandoned cotton, the claim is strictly limited to what the property produced. In 1863 an act of Congress was passed as to captured and abandoned property, by which it was provided that it should be sold and the proceeds, after paying the expenses of the sale and transportation, should be deposited in the Treasury as a fund, and that within two years from the ending of the rebellion parties having claims could bring their suits in the Court of Claims for the purpose of obtaining judgment against the fund; provided, however, that they should make proof of loyalty, that they had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion.

The result of it was that the net fund produced by the sale of this captured and abandoned property—and I can not impress upon Senators too strongly the fact that this bill is limited to that fund—was $20,000,000 in round numbers. Under the act of Congress to which I have referred, where loyalty had to be proved and where the limitation was two years, suits were brought whereby judgments against that fund of $20,000,000 were rendered for about $9,000,000, and which judgments were paid out of that fund.

In the meantime the two years had elapsed. The provisions in regard to the proof of loyalty were kept in force. Many people whose property unquestionably had gone into this fund were not able to make the proof requisite. They were barred by limitation, and for other reasons. They had not brought their suit, or the suit, if brought, had been thrown out, some on the ground of limitation and some on the ground that they had not furnished proof that they had not given aid and comfort to the rebellion.

So, Mr. President, that fund is in the Treasury, not Government property, not money of the United States at all, a fund impressed by a trust for the Federal Government, which is its holder, to which citizens have been declared to be entitled by a decision of the Supreme Court, to which I shall presently call the attention of the Senate. It remains there and has remained there for twenty years, the Government having the use of it since the statute of limitations barred it in 1868, I think.

Now, in regard to the nature of this property and the relations of the Government to it, whether it has been covered into the Treasury, to use the common expression, or whether it was a fund impressed by trust, there was much discussion and considerable litigation, until it finally came before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Klein vs. United States, reported in 13 Wall., 138; and it was held:

1. That it was not the intention of Congress, by the enactment of that statute, that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.
2. That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.
3. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.
4. That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.
5. That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury; and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.
6. And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

In this opinion the court used this language:

That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act; and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal, appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation.

It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States, unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombattant enemies from capture as booty of war; even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised an equivalent. "Pardon and restoration of political rights" were "in return" for the oath and its fulfillment.

The court adds the following language:

To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom.

Mr. President, bearing in mind that up to a certain time there was a limitation upon the right to sue by the necessity to prove loyalty, I ask the attention of the Senate while I give the history of the proceedings by which proof of that fact became entirely immaterial, and in fact could not be required:

Under the act of July, 1862, known as the confiscation act, the President was authorized at any time thereafter, by proclamation, to extend to persons who may have participated in rebellion in any State or part thereof pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such time and on such conditions as he should deem expedient for the public welfare.

On the 8th day of December, 1863, the President issued his proclamation, in which he referred to the act of 1863, relating to captured and abandoned property, and offered pardon and amnesty, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves and property to which third persons had acquired rights, to all persons who had participated in the rebellion who would take an oath to support the Constitution and the laws. Certain classes were excepted from the benefits of pardon and amnesty under that proclamation.

On the 29th of May, 1865, another proclamation was issued, extending pardon and amnesty, with a full restoration of all property rights, except as to slaves, etc., to all persons who had participated in the rebellion. A similar oath was required, and 14 classes of persons were excepted from the benefits of the proclamation.

On the 7th of September, 1867, another similar proclamation of pardon and amnesty was issued, which reduced the excepted classes from 14 to 7.

Finally——

And here is the important point, on the 4th day of July, 1868, after the two years' limitation provided for in the act of 1863 had closed upon the parties who otherwise would have been benefited, another similar proclamation of pardon and amnesty was issued, which reduced the excepted classes from 14 to 7.

Finally, on the 4th day of July, 1868, a proclamation was issued by the President extending pardon and amnesty to all, with some exceptions, who had participated in the rebellion, with restoration to all rights of property, except in slaves, and on the 25th day of December, 1868, without exception, unconditionally, and without reservation. No oath was required.

Now, what was the situation, Mr. President? Little by little as time went and the feelings of resentment were assuaged, and wiser views and considerations of public policy, as it was then thought, prevailed, by proclamation after proclamation the President granted amnesty until finally, on the 4th day of July, 1868, a very appropriate day, universal amnesty without restriction, without qualification, a clean and clear pardon as was ever granted by ruler to men, was issued by the President of the United States, by which no oath of allegiance, proof of loyalty, or disproof of disloyalty were required.

But in what situation did it leave these parties? Those who had remained under the restriction in the previous proclamation or in the statute of 1863, who did not bring their suits because they knew they could not prove loyalty, by the time the proclamation of 1868 was issued had become barred by the statute of limitations. So the word of promise was held forth to the ear, but broken to the hope. A right was declared and a remedy withheld. The Government is in possession of a fund in the Treasury amounting to $9,000,000 which the Supreme Court has declared is still the property of the owners, from whom it has never been divested, as to which the Supreme Court declared this Government held the relation of trustee. It there remained and has remained for twenty years undisposed of, unappropriated, undistributed, the property of private citizens throughout the United States, made perfectly free and clear to claim their rights in the property as I ever was or any other Senator on this floor.

Now I read from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Padelford Case, reported in 9 Wallace:

In the case of Garland this court held the effect of a pardon to be such "that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense;" and in the case of Armstrong's foundry we held that the general pardon granted to him relieved him from a penalty which he had incurred to the United States. It follows that at the time of the seizure of the petitioner's property he was purged of whatever offense against the laws of the United States he had committed by the acts mentioned in the findings and relieved from any penalty which he might have incurred. It follows, further, that if the property had been seized before the oath was taken the faith of the Government was pledged to its restoration upon the taking of the oath in good faith. We can not doubt that the petitioner's right to the property in question at the time of the seizure was perfect, and that it remains perfect, notwithstanding the seizure.

But it has been suggested that the property was captured in fact, if not lawfully, and that the proceeds having been paid into the Treasury of the United States, the petitioner is without remedy in the Court of Claims, unless proof is made that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. The suggestion is ingenious, but we do not think it sound. The sufficient answer to it is that after the pardon no offense connected with the rebellion can be imputed to him. If in other respects the petitioner made the proof which, under the act, entitled him to a decree for the proceeds of his property, the law makes the proof of pardon a complete substitute for proof that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. A different construction would, as it seems to us, defeat the manifest intent of the proclamation and the act of Congress which authorized it. Under the proclamation and the act the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit, and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

Mr. President, I might go on and cite other decisions cumulative in their nature, but to the same effect. This bill has received the favorable reports of committees in four successive Congresses, I think. The report made last year was made while the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was chairman of the Committee on Claims. I had some conference with him about it at the time, and he assured me this afternoon of his entire confidence and belief in its perfect justice.

To recapitulate briefly, the situation is just this: There went into the Treasury net $20,000,000, the proceeds of property the title to which had never been divested from the owners, and which has remained and still is a fund representing that property and their title just as much as if it never had been taken from their hands, the Government holding it as a trustee.

This is no mere matter of individual speculation or legislative opinion. Such are the solemn, recorded, and repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was held for a time, so that the loyal owners could recover, and they only, but while that time ran on the Supreme Court said that that which belonged to disloyal owners was held in the same undivested shape of property by the United States as trustee, for the owners who might once have been disloyal might subsequently have become loyal. That time came. Finally, on the 4th day of July, 1868, long after the two years' statute of limitations prescribed by the act of 1863 had closed upon all parties alike, the President of the United States issued a proclamation of general, unconditional, and unrestricted amnesty, which required no oath and put every property owner, loyal or disloyal, in whatever category he might be, upon an equal footing to claim restoration of his property.

But while that was done the statute of limitations had run, and the pending bill is asked for to perfect this act of justice, and no clearer act of justice was ever required of any body of men, in my judgment. When this was done the statute of limitations enacted in 1863 was set up as a bar. Consequently these parties are remediless against a trustee who possesses the power of legislation to open the gates of relief to them. Why should it not be done?

Mr. President, in regard to the apprehension or misapprehension that this bill opens the sluiceway for the letting out of indefinite amounts of money upon so-called cotton claims, it does nothing of the kind. This bill is limited to the distribution of the $9,000,000 undistributed of that net fund of $20,000,000 which was realized to the Treasury by the capture and sale. That is all there is to it. It sets no precedent whatever for any future legislation as to claims which have not taken the shape of being realized and turned into the Treasury in cash. The kind of claims that have awakened the apprehension of my friend the Senator from Maine are not included, are not contemplated, and can not be covered by this bill.

I have not a particle of interest in this matter more than the general interest and desire to see the right and proper thing done. I do not know that any constituent of mine has the least interest in the world in it. I introduced this bill, the same bill which has been introduced by others before, because upon an examination of what my fellow-citizens were entitled to and what has been denied to them so long by this Government I became thoroughly and perfectly convinced that they were right and were entitled to this measure of long-deferred relief.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I want to say upon this subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to a suggestion?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that in line 25—the Senator has the bill there—after the word "the"——

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the bill is not up yet. It takes unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought that had been given.

Mr. HALE. It has not been given.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought it was given. I ask the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent was given prior to the reading.

Mr. HALE. Only for its reading.

Mr. DAVIS. No; unanimous consent was given for its consideration.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no. That is not customary in the Senate. I never knew a bill that paid for a peddler's cart that was sought to be thrust through the House on the claim that when consent is given that the bill may be read——

Mr. DAVIS. I am not trying to thrust any bill through the House or anything of the kind.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the Senator from Minnesota is in charge of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have been in some way or other put in charge of the bill at the request of the Senator from South Carolina, who moved its consideration.

Mr. HALE. I did not understand it was the Senator's bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I will assume charge of it.

Mr. HALE. I certainly do object to its being claimed now, at this hour, in a thin Senate——

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Minnesota introduced the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I introduced the bill.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but I do object to its being claimed here now that because consent was given for the reading of a bill of this kind, which even its advocates admit takes $9,000,000 out of the Treasury, the bill shall be considered as before the Senate, when nobody has consented to its being before the Senate. The rule invariably is that the bill is read for information, and when it is read for information the question is asked, Is there objection to it? and that question has not been asked since the bill was read and since any Senator here outside of the committee knew a single thing about its provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine objects, and the bill goes over.

OLMEDO ALFARO.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg attention for a single moment. I have a little bill here to report from the Military Committee of a class that has never been objected to, and there are many precedents for it. They have been considered matters of courtesy. The President of Ecuador desires to send his young son to the West Point Academy. It can only be done by the consent of Congress. There have been many young men admitted in that way, and their own government pays their expenses.

I report back without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador. Our minister to Ecuador says he is the son of a wise man, a good President, and is himself a fine young fellow.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am done now, if the Senate would just say "aye."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator would let this matter be finished. It will not take five seconds more. It is considered a matter of courtesy always.

Mr. DAVIS. Before that is done, I wish to make a request. I ask that the bill to which objection was made may retain its place on the Calendar without prejudice.

Mr. HAWLEY and others. Agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the reading of House joint resolution No. 129.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador. The joint resolution will be read for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. The joint resolution has passed the House, and I now report it from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution which has been read?

Mr. MASON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Why do you do that? I will withdraw the report.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 24, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 23, 1900.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY—CAVALRY ARM.

Second Lieut. Charles B. Drake, Fifth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, December 13, 1899, vice Slavens, Fourth Cavalry, appointed assistant quartermaster, who resigns his line commission only.

Second Lieut. Charles McK. Saltzman, First Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, December 13, 1899, vice Williamson, Ninth Cavalry, appointed assistant quartermaster, who resigns his line commission only.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander William W. Kimball, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 8th day of December, 1899, vice Commander Charles P. Howell, deceased.

Lieut. William S. Hogg, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 8th day of December, 1899 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. Commander William W. Kimball, promoted.

Lieut. Commander William P. Day, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 12th day of December, 1899, vice Commander Edward P. Wood, deceased.

Lieut. Robert I. Reid, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 12th day of December, 1899, vice Lieut. Commander William P. Day, promoted.

Lieut. Commander John C. Wilson, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 29th day of December, 1899, vice Commander John F. Merry, promoted.

P. A. Surg. Hatton N. T. Harris, to be a surgeon in the Navy, from the 21st day of October, 1899, vice Surg. Louis W. Atlee, resigned.

Lieut. Col. Henry C. Cochrane, to be a colonel in the Marine Corps, from the 11th day of January, 1900, vice Col. Robert W. Huntington, retired.

Maj. Allan C. Kelton, to be a lieutenant-colonel in the Marine Corps, from the 11th day of January, 1900 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. Col. Henry C. Cochrane, promoted.

Capt. Lincoln Karmany, to be a major in the Marine Corps, from the 11th day of January, 1900, vice Maj. Allan C. Kelton, promoted.

Samuel A. W. Patterson, a citizen of Pennsylvania, to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, from the 11th day of January, 1900, to fill a vacancy existing in that corps.

Herbert J. Hirshinger, a citizen of North Carolina, to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, from the 11th day of January, 1900, to fill a vacancy existing in that corps.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn January 23, 1900.

Clark Grier, to be postmaster at Dublin, county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 23, 1900.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Thomas H. Callan, of the District of Columbia, to be justice of the peace in and for the District of Columbia (assigned to the city of Washington).

PROMOTIONS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Third Lieut. John Mel, of California, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States.

Third Lieut. Abert H. Buhner, of California, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States.

POSTMASTERS.

Japhet F. Lehman, to be postmaster at Berne, in the county of Adams and State of Indiana.

John A. Hall, to be postmaster at Cicero, in the county of Hamilton and State of Indiana.

John C. Twombly, to be postmaster at Denver, in the county of Arapahoe and State of Colorado.

Nicholas N. Nock, to be postmaster at Bel Air, in the county of Harford and State of Maryland.

William Hobson, to be postmaster at Campbellsville, in the county of Taylor and State of Kentucky.

Thomas J. Ochiltree, to be postmaster at Morning Sun, in the county of Louisa and State of Iowa.

Daniel Anderson, to be postmaster at Lamoni, in the county of Decatur and State of Iowa.

John P. Scott, jr., to be postmaster at Delray, in the county of Wayne and State of Michigan.

Elisha N. Clink, to be postmaster at East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix and State of Michigan.

Daniel O'Riley, to be postmaster at Leitchfield, in the county of Grayson and State of Kentucky.

Ira C. Richardson, to be postmaster at Chief River Falls, in the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota.

Warren D. Harden, to be postmaster at Le Roy, in the county of Mower and State of Minnesota.

Henry C. Whitmer, to be postmaster at Colon, in the county of St. Joseph and State of Michigan.

Henry J. Crider, to be postmaster at Maitland, in the county of Holt and State of Missouri.

William B. Strom, to be postmaster at Hector, in the county of Renville and State of Minnesota.

Samuel C. Stanchfield, to be postmaster at Camden Place, in the county of Hennepin and State of Minnesota.

John S. Hoover, to be postmaster at Blue Hill, in the county of Webster and State of Nebraska.

Jesse C. Ricker, to be postmaster at Havre, in the county of Choteau and State of Montana.

Walter Alderson, to be postmaster at Red Lodge, in the county of Carbon and State of Montana.

Sanford R. Razee, to be postmaster at Curtis, in the county of Frontier and State of Nebraska.

John M. Mills, to be postmaster at Laurel, in the county of Cedar and State of Nebraska.

James L. Lashbrook, to be postmaster at Oxford, in the county of Furnas and State of Nebraska.

Robert G. Anderson, to be postmaster at Freeport, in the county of Nassau and State of New York.

Louis O. Fullen, to be postmaster at Carlsbad (late Eddy), in the county of Eddy and Territory of New Mexico.

Richard F. Williams, to be postmaster at St. Edward, in the county of Boone and State of Nebraska.

Casper Kennedy, to be postmaster at Sisseton, in the county of Roberts and State of South Dakota.

Ezra H. Woodward, to be postmaster at Newberg, in the county of Yamhill and State of Oregon.

John R. Smith, to be postmaster at Lebanon, in the county of Linn and State of Oregon.

Clinton J. Farrell, to be postmaster at Vernon, in the county of Wilbarger and State of Texas.

Kittie L. Edwards, to be postmaster at Smithville, in the county of Bastrop and State of Texas.

Charles R. Bone, to be postmaster at Beaumont, in the county of Jefferson and State of Texas.

J. W. Shotwell, to be postmaster at Lufkin, in the county of Angelina and State of Texas.

Jeannette D. McConnell, to be postmaster at Jacksboro, in the county of Jack and State of Texas.

Frankie Houssels, to be postmaster at Childress, in the county of Childress and State of Texas.

Charles Frantz, to be postmaster at Kenosha, in the county of Kenosha and State of Wisconsin.

George A. Blakeley, to be postmaster at Albany, in the county of Green and State of Wisconsin.

Charles E. Haddox, to be postmaster at Cairo, in the county of Ritchie and State of West Virginia.

Charles Settergren, to be postmaster at Baldwin, in the county of St. Croix and State of Wisconsin.

Joseph E. Parry, to be postmaster at Florence, in the county of Florence and State of Wisconsin.

Joseph E. Parmelee, to be postmaster at West Salem, in the county of Lacrosse and State of Wisconsin.

William C. Campbell, to be postmaster at Los Gatos, in the county of Santa Clara and State of California.

John A. Watson, to be postmaster at Kaukauna, in the county of Outagamie and State of Wisconsin.

Frank Tucker, to be postmaster at Princeton, in the county of Green Lake and State of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 23, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 268. An act to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 268. An act to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

W. W. RILEY.

Mr. FOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1806) for the relief of W. W. Riley.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay to W. W. Riley, of Ackerman, Miss., $464, being the amount of United States money-order funds which was stolen from his safe October 13, 1896, when he was postmaster at Ackerman, Miss., and which amount he paid into the United States Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me a question? Has this been reported by the committee?

Mr. FOX. It has. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] to make a statement about it.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill before consent is given. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FOX. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] to make a statement about the facts in this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires that a statement be made.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FOX], I desire to say that House bill No. 1806, for the relief of W. W. Riley, who was postmaster at Ackerman, Miss., in 1896, was before the Committee on Claims to-day and favorably reported. I learn that the wife of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FOX] is dangerously sick, and for that reason he has been recognized for the consideration of the bill at this time.

There was absolutely no objection to a favorable report of the bill before the committee. The facts as shown before the committee are that W. W. Riley, while acting as postmaster at Ackerman, Miss., a town of about 700 population, received a registered package containing $458; that on the day he received it he and his clerk were both sick; that it would have been their duty to have transmitted this registered package on the next mail; that there was one mail per day through that town, and that the postmaster on account of the sickness of his clerk and of himself failed to transmit that package on the next mail. Therefore the only delay that can be imputed to the postmaster was the failure to transmit it within twenty-four hours, and he had but one opportunity to do that and was prevented by sickness.

The facts show that the package was stolen that night, together with a large sum of money which belonged to the postmaster personally.

When a post-office inspector came to the office for the purpose of investigating the matter, the postmaster paid the $458. Afterwards he submitted a claim to the Post-Office Department, and the Post-Office Department refused to pay the claim, not because it lacked equity, but because under the law it pertained to the loss of a registered package, instead of to the loss of United States funds which were in the hands of the postmaster as postmaster. However, the committee had in their possession a report from the Postmaster-General to the committee in favor of the passage of this bill, and also a favorable report from the Attorney-General of the United States, both of whom had before them the facts concerning the claim.

The bill, as I understand it, was mistakenly introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi for the sum of $464, when in fact, as the proof shows, the actual amount in the registered package was $458. Hence, the committee to-day favorably reported the bill, with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out "sixty-four" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty-eight," to make the amount agree with the amount contained in the registered package.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOX, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present on Saturday last when eulogies were delivered on the life, character, and services of the Hon. Mr. Danford, of Ohio. I desire unanimous consent to print remarks on that subject in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] asks unanimous consent to print remarks upon the life and death of the late Mr. Danford, of Ohio, his colleague. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution from the committee on the case of Brigham H. Roberts.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Special Committee on the Roberts Case.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the minority and the majority of the committee have agreed that the vote be taken on the substitute and on the resolution on Thursday next at half past 4 o'clock, and that in the meantime the discussion continue, to be under the control of myself and the gentleman who represents the minority.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible in this part of the House to understand what the gentleman from Ohio is saying.

The SPEAKER. The question will be restated. The House will be in order, and gentlemen will please resume their seats. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] restate his proposition?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The arrangement between the minority and the majority of the committee is that a vote be taken on Thursday at half past 4 o'clock on the substitute offered by the minority of the committee, and if that be lost, upon the resolution offered by the majority; that the debate continue from now until that hour, and that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the resolution and the substitute. I ask unanimous consent for the carrying out of that arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] states that an agreement has been reached between the majority and the minority of the committee in the Roberts case, whereby it is proposed to have general debate until 4.30 on Thursday next, when a vote will be taken, first upon the substitute, and if lost, then upon the original resolution, and that the previous question be considered as ordered upon both the original resolution and the substitute. Is there objection to this proposition?

Mr. LACEY. I object, unless opportunity be given to offer the following amendment——

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, objection is made. I think we will proceed, and I will move the previous question at the proper time.

Mr. LACEY. I think perhaps the gentleman will not object to this proposition——

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not consent to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects, and objection is made to his request. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Ohio object before he knows what the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa is?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If there is a desire on the part of the House that any amendments should be offered and we have opportunity to discern what they are and what they mean——

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

Mr. LACEY. Let it be read for information.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. But the gentleman from Iowa has objected.

Mr. LACEY. I have not. My objection was conditional, and my request is that a third proposition not involved in the two propositions here may be pending. Perhaps when my friend hears it he will consent to it.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I may consent to it, but I will not consent to it at this moment. It has not been proposed to the committee. No member of the committee, as far as I know, knows what it contains, and we are certainly not giving consent to a proposition about which we are not informed.

Mr. LACEY. Why not let the House know what it contains?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. There is a way in which we might have been informed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that the proposition be read for information.

The SPEAKER. The matter in order now is the reading of the resolution proposed by the majority of the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case, Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, ought not to have or hold a seat in the House of Representatives, and that the seat to which he was elected is hereby declared vacant.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I ask for the reading of the resolution offered by the minority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Brigham H. Roberts, having been duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, with the qualifications requisite for admission to the House as such, is entitled, as a constitutional right, to take the oath of office prescribed for members-elect, his status as a polygamist, unlawfully cohabiting with plural wives, affording constitutional ground for expulsion, but not for exclusion from the House.

And if the House shall hold with us and swear in Mr. Roberts as a member, we shall, as soon as recognition can be had, offer a resolution to expel him as a polygamist, unlawfully cohabiting with plural wives.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman yielded the floor for the amendment which has just been read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield for another amendment?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects, and is recognized.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I may be pardoned for a word personal to myself in this relation. Some weeks ago the duty was laid upon me to make an investigation of the law relating to the rights of the member-elect from Utah, and I undertook that work. I did so without prejudice in any respect, and I was not aware, nor am I now, that I was then moved by any so-called emotional impulse respecting what the member-elect from Utah is supposed to represent.

I started in that investigation with the opinion that the proper course for the House would be to admit the member-elect from Utah to his seat, and then, if his life or his conduct had been such as to justify it, that we should expel him. But when I progressed with my investigation, as largely judicial as any investigation ever was, I came to the conclusion that under the facts of the case as then presented to me this House would make itself ridiculous before the eyes of the world if it adopted that method.

The committee have found that Brigham H. Roberts is, and has been for many years, a polygamist, in defiant practice of the habit and condition, with full knowledge of the laws of the land, and that he is in that condition, as we believe, to-day; and as recently as last month declared that he would not give up the relations which he said he had taken before the law spoke, although he knew that the law had spoken; he claims for himself that it did not speak for him.

Mr. Chairman, the members of this committee entertain varying views, not because of any larger fund of knowledge or any different degree of mental force they possess, but rather on account of what I may call their intellectual temperament. Every member has reached an unbiased and deliberate conclusion, unaffected by any party feeling or any public clamor. Every man goes into a scientific and philosophical investigation with some certain intellectual bent, though unaffected by any kind of prejudice respecting the subject of inquiry. It is often necessary that we understand what that bent is.

The microscope is useful and often necessary, but the microscope must be laid aside when the process of synthesis and generalization begins. We must not imagine that we survey the whole area of related facts, when we shut ourselves up in the valley, or lose ourselves in the forest. I will be pardoned, therefore, if I present a few general observations from as high a point of view as I can reach, designed to clear the atmosphere and widen the scope of vision. We may then the more justly and correctly appraise the more specific observations that are to follow.

Chief Justice Waite, in the Reynolds case, in 1878, speaking of the claim that polygamy was justified as a religious practice, said:

> To permit this would be, in effect, to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government can exist only in name under such circumstances.

And Mr. Justice Matthews, in the Ramsey case, in 1884, declares in substance that—

> A free, self-governing commonwealth is founded on the idea of the family as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony, and that all political influences are to be withdrawn from those who are practically hostile to its establishment.

If we are to attach any importance to these fundamental observations, we must declare, no matter what moral question may be involved, that this case presents, in bold relief, a question of governmental life the basis of which is law.

This is a representative Government. It springs from the people, from the people who make the law, and their representatives are such because they are believers in the law and subject to the law, and as they can not stand for defiance of any law, so much the more must they stand as the respecters of and obedient to such laws as have proceeded from the people, at the people's initiative. Now and then we have a law which springs from the united voice of a united people as an expression of the civilizing force in which practically all of them believe and which is necessary to the existence of that civilizing force.

Of the more than 75,000,000 American citizens all but the merest handful believe, and believe with a mighty fervor, in the kind of commonwealth which Justice Matthews declares is founded on the marriage relation existing for life between one man and one woman. That idea has been for many years crystallized in solemn and deliberate law, whose principle and form have been approved by the highest judicial authority.

These propositions are fundamental and self-evident. They lie at the root of things. They are the bed rock upon which constitutions rest. They precede constitutions. Constitutions assume their preexistence and perpetual existence. They are institutional. If the Federal Constitution had explicitly declared that all persons should be eligible for Representative in Congress who denied that the Constitution was the supreme law of the land, that Constitution and the government which it sought to create could not have endured a single day. It follows that if such specific declaration could not have been made, it can not be implied.

Neither the presence nor the absence of certain words in the instrument can imply a certain meaning if it is impossible that such meaning could have been expressed. If the claimant to this seat is eligible, he is eligible because the Constitution so makes him, either by its express language or because it is necessarily implied. The words "necessary implication" mean—and I ask the careful attention of the House to this—the words "necessary implication" mean that if the framers of the Constitution had had in mind the particular exigency to which the words applied, they would, if the proposition was approved, have written into the Constitution the words that are necessarily implied.

For example, if we say that under the Constitution, as it now stands, there can be no property qualification for Representative in Congress, then we read into the clause respecting qualifications the words "and no person shall be rendered ineligible by any property qualification."

If the constitutional provision by implication, which for the sake of this discussion I admit, means that no educational qualification shall be required, then when we get down to the last analysis and demonstrate the correctness of that proposition, we read into the Constitution the statement that no educational qualification shall be required of any candidate for Representative in Congress.

The Constitution says:

> This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land.

If the member-elect from Utah is eligible to be a Representative in Congress, then for the purpose of his case we must read into the Constitution other words which are now said to be implied, so that it will read: "No person shall be a Representative in Congress unless he shall have attained to the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen, provided that no person shall be ineligible to a seat as such Representative, although in form and substance, in word and act, in life and practice, he defies the Constitution and the laws and denies their validity and supremacy."

It matters not whether this proviso be attached to the clause referred to or to some other, it must be written into the Constitution somewhere if the claimant is eligible.

Thus stands the case. If the minority be right, the framers of the American Constitution, if they had foreseen the Roberts incident with its defiance of the Constitution and the law, and its denial of their validity and supremacy as to him, would have said, "Brigham H. Roberts is eligible and must take his seat." There is no other rule by which to determine what the makers of the Constitution mean than to ask what would have been their disposition of such a case; and if what they would have done is absolutely free from doubt, we can understand what it is that is implied, though not expressed in words.

The majority of the committee are fixed in their conviction that in view of the status of Brigham H. Roberts, not because of any moral question that may be involved, but because of the question of governmental right involved, in view of his defiant violation of law, in view of his denial of the validity and supremacy of the law of the land, has no right to take his seat in this body, and should be excluded therefrom.

The minority, on the other hand, attaching more value to the husk than to the ear, seeming to conceive that the shadow is to be more taken care of than the substance, declare that we must let him go through the hollow form, the sacred form of taking an oath, and then expel him; to rob him of that which is substantial, but that we must not deprive him of that which is a mere shadow. They say, "You may come up and enter our front door, in order that we may kick you out of the back door, but we cheerfully declare, with the Constitution before us, that we can not kick you down the front steps."

We believe that that is absolutely untenable as a proposition of law and absolutely unsupported by precedents.

I want to make these preliminary statements respecting that. First, upon the doctrine of exclusion.

The language of the constitutional provision, the history of its framing in the Constitutional Convention, and the context clearly show, whatever else may have been true, that it did not intend to prevent this disqualification for crime or for defiance of the Constitution and the laws. The overwhelming authority of text-book writers on the Constitution and of judicial declarations on the subject harmonizes with this view. The House of Representatives, in all the years of its existence, has never denied that it had the power and the right to exclude.

In many instances it has excluded for disloyalty and for crime. In 1862 Congress passed the test-oath act, which in effect disqualified hundreds of thousands of American citizens, and thousands of Representatives in this body went to the bar of the House under a disqualification that was not removed until they took the test oath, an oath substantial in its character and superadded to the constitutional oath. And this very House in 1869 adopted a general rule of order providing that no person should be sworn in as a member against whom the objection was made that he was not entitled to take the test oath.

On the proposition of expulsion I present these general observations: That the ablest lawyers from the beginning of the Government down to this case, but of course not including it, have insisted that neither the House of Representatives nor the Senate has the right to expel a man unless the thing for which he was expelled occurred in connection with his election or while he was a member, and was inconsistent with his trust or duty as a member.

I lay that proposition down as absolutely sound and as not contradicted anywhere; and both Houses of Congress have in many instances refused to expel members where the proof of guilt was absolutely clear, because the acts complained of were unrelated to the members as such, because the acts complained of were not inconsistent with the trust and duty of the member as such.

Neither House has ever expelled a member for any other cause. So I say this here and now: To exclude is to be in harmony with principle and precedent; to expel is to do violence to principle and precedent. There is no precedent in the House against exclusion. There is no precedent in the American Congress for expulsion under such circumstances as exist here.

Three reasons are asserted why this man should not be permitted to enter the House of Representatives.

First, because of his violation of the Edmunds law and the disqualification created thereby.

Second, independent of any statutory ineligibility, independent of any joint action of the two Houses in the passage of a law, but because of the inherent power of the House, by that inherent power which in all cases of exclusion has been invoked—and the House has never excluded for any other reason except for that which it itself declared, independent of any statute law—that this man was a defiant violator of law; his declarations, words, and acts that he was above the law, that the law did not speak to him, in the very necessity of things, make him ineligible; and Third, because the State of Utah was admitted into the Union under the express understanding that polygamous practices were at an end and would not be renewed. And now it sends as its Representative the most conspicuous example, the most conspicuous practitioner of the very thing the abandonment of which was the condition precedent to its admission into the Union.

This question, then, meets us at the threshold: Does the constitutional provision naming qualifications for members of Congress preclude the imposition of any other kind of disqualification?

Must it be said that the constitutional provision, phrased as it is, really means that every person who is 25 years of age, and who has been for seven years a citizen of the United States, and was, when elected, an inhabitant of that State in which he was chosen is eligible to be a member of the House of Representatives and must be admitted thereto, even though he be insane, or disloyal, or a leper, or a criminal?

Is it conceivable that the Constitution meant that crime could not disqualify? The whole spirit of government revolts against such conception.

I want to distinguish between that qualification which is of the character of age, citizenship, and inhabitancy, such as property and education, and those disqualifications which arise out of the criminal or wrongful practices of an individual who willingly puts himself within the prohibited class.

I say this: Whatever general statements may have been made, no commentator on the Constitution, no court, and neither House of Congress has ever questioned the propriety of the distinction between disqualification arising from improper life or criminal practices and qualifications within the usual meaning of that word.

In our opinion the law is correctly stated, and as comprehensively as this case needs to state it, in Burgess in his work on Political Science and Constitutional Law, where he says:

> I think it certain that either House might reject an insane person or might exclude a grossly immoral person.

Now let us look for a moment at where the claimant himself stands. What is he? What picture does he present as he stands at the bar of the American House of Representatives?

In 1862 Congress first passed a law making the act of polygamous marriages unlawful; but it did not make the practice of polygamous living unlawful. The Mormons claimed that law was unconstitutional, because it was an infraction of their right of religious worship. The Supreme Court, in the Reynolds case, in 1878, declared that law valid in all respects, and Chief Justice Waite in a luminous opinion voiced the sense of modern civilization in his characterization of polygamy. I quote as follows:

> Polygamy has always been odious among the northern and western nations of Europe, and until the establishment of the Mormon Church was almost exclusively a feature of the life of Asiatic and of African people.
>
> By the statute of James I the offense was made punishable by death.
>
> It is a significant fact that on the 8th of December, 1788, after the passage of the act establishing religious freedom, and after the convention of Virginia had recommended as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States the declaration of the bill of rights that "all men have an equal, natural, and unalienable right to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience," the legislature of that State substantially enacted the statute of James I, death penalty included, because, as recited in the preamble, "it hath been doubted whether bigamy and polygamy be punishable by the laws of this Commonwealth." From that day to this we think it may safely be said there never has been a time in any State of the Union where polygamy has not been an offense against society, cognizable by the civil courts and punishable with more or less severity.

And, continuing the quotation:

> Marriage, while from its very nature a sacred obligation, is nevertheless, in most civilized nations, a civil contract, and usually regulated by law. Upon it society may be said to be built, and out of its fruits spring social relations and social obligations and duties, with which government is necessarily required to deal. In fact, according as monogamous or polygamous marriages are allowed, do we find the principles on which the government of the people to a greater or less extent rests. Professor Lieber says polygamy leads to the patriarchal principle, and which, when applied to large communities, fetters the people in stationary despotism, while that principle can not long exist in connection with monogamy. Chancellor Kent observes that this remark is equally striking and profound.
>
> Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances.

So also in Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S., 45). Construing the Edmunds Act, Justice Matthews says:

> Certainly no legislation can be supposed more wholesome and necessary in the founding of a free, self-governing commonwealth, fit to take rank as one of the coordinate States of the Union, than that which seeks to establish it on the basis of the idea of the family, as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony; the sure foundation of all that is stable and noble in our civilization; the best guaranty of that reverent morality which is the source of all beneficent progress in social and political improvement. And to this end no means are more directly and immediately suitable than those provided by this act, which endeavors to withdraw all political influence from those who are practically hostile to its attainment.

How cogent and prophetic are these words. How applicable to this situation, that all political influence ought to be withdrawn from those practically hostile to the establishment of a "commonwealth on the basis of the idea of the family as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony."

There was no machinery for enforcing the act of 1862 until 1882, when Congress passed what is known as the Edmunds law. This act defined and punished bigamy and polygamy in the same terms as the act of 1862, but also punished unlawful cohabitation, and declared ineligible for office any person who maintained the status of a polygamist or who cohabited with more than one woman.

Section 8 of that act is as follows:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for such Territory or place, or under the United States.

This law had not only the force of a public law, but it was the outcome of years of agitation and reflection. It crystallized the sober sense of the American people; it represented the settled views of our wisest and most conservative statesmen, and later received the stamp of approval from the Supreme Court of the United States in many well-considered cases, and was made the subject of felicitous proclamation by the President.

Prior to 1882 the claimant to this seat married his first wife. About 1885, after the passage of the Edmunds law, after the Supreme Court had declared that law valid in all of its parts, while the Territory of Utah was fairly ringing with the blows of that act, Brigham H. Roberts married a second or plural wife, one Celia Dibble by name. With her he has lived ever since. She has borne him six children, the last of whom were twins, born in 1897. This woman he married with full knowledge of the law, openly, publicly, notoriously holding her out as his wife and rearing children by her.

This second wife he married in defiance of the Edmunds law. He declared by his act that he recognized no binding rule upon him of a law of Congress; he declared by it that he recognized a higher law. The Congress of the United States was to him an object of contempt. The Supreme Court of the United States might declare the law for others, but not for him. He laughed at its futile decrees and spurned its admonitions. The Executive which had declared in solemn messages its gratification that polygamy seemed gone forever he defied and despised. Of what consequence to him were laws of Congress and declarations of the highest court and proclamations of Presidents as against his sensual interpretation of a sensual doctrine?

And all the time the Edmunds law declared not only polygamy, but cohabitation with more than one woman unlawful. Roberts not only bigamously married a second wife, but he persisted in violating and defiantly trampling under foot every other provision of the act.

But he had not sufficiently shown his contempt, his utter and absolute contempt for the American people and for this body. He defied it by word and by act, and in order to show how utterly he defied and despised the national authority and the American Congress, a little while later he married a third wife. We do not know whether he married her before 1897 or not. He held her out as his wife in 1897, and not before. And if that be about the time when he married her, he married her after Utah became a State and after the constitutional prohibition of polygamous marriages.

The claim is made, not by any sworn testimony, that he married her prior to the manifesto of 1890, which prohibited further plural marriages in the church.

If that be true, he managed to marry a third wife within a year after he got out of the penitentiary for marrying a second wife. This is the gentleman whose rights under the American Constitution are so sacred that he must be invited before the Speaker of the House and asked to hold his hand up before high Heaven and swear to obey the Constitution and laws which in his life and practice he declares that he defies and whose supremacy he denies.

The amnesty proclamations of 1893 and 1894 never embraced him. There was never a moment when its provisions were complied with by him. There has never been a moment since he married Celia Dibble down to the present moment when he has not been a persistent, notorious, defiant, demoralizing, audacious violator of every provision of the State and Federal law relating to polygamy and its attendant crimes. And this is the man who seeks admission to this body.

It was declared in the Kentucky cases, and in the Thomas case in the Senate, and in the test-oath act of 1862, that disloyalty created ineligibility; that fidelity to the Constitution was a necessary qualification to membership in this body. What is loyalty? It is faithfulness to the sovereign or the lawful government. A mere violator of the law may not necessarily be disloyal. One may violate the law and still recognize the sovereign and the lawfulness of the government. His only concern may be that he shall not be found out and punished. But that man is surely disloyal, and in the fullest sense disloyal, when by his words, his acts, and his persistent practices he declares unequivocally in this wise:

"You have solemnly enacted certain laws; you have crystallized into statute the will of the sovereign people. I bid defiance to your law. I will not recognize it. I here and now before your very eyes do the things you say I shall not do. I recognize a higher law than your man-made law—no law of yours can relieve me from the obligations which I thus take in defiance of your enactments. The only thing I promise not to do is to take a fourth wife."

The case of a bribe taker, or of a burglar, or of a murderer is trivial, is a mere ripple on the surface of things, compared with this far-reaching, deep-rooted, audacious lawlessness.

What was the case of Whittemore, who was excluded, as hereafter set out? He had not been convicted of any crime, but a committee had found that he had sold a cadetship. He did not pretend that he was wiser or greater than the people, or that he had the right to sell cadetships and was above the law. The acts of Roberts are essentially disloyal. They deny the sovereign; they repudiate the lawful government. Look at them from whatever point you will, they are subversive of government. They do not merely breed anarchy, they are anarchy.

Now, what are the duty and the power of the House? The Constitution has a provision which I have heretofore read in the hearing of the House, declaring the qualifications for Representatives in Congress. I assert that that is not exclusive in so far as it prevents the House from asserting any ground of disqualification which goes to the vitality of this body as such, or which in the common judgment of mankind ought always to exclude from the legislative body a person who is thus charged.

I have not the time to go fully over the reasons that have brought conviction to my mind and to the minds of my colleagues of the majority, but I shall refer to them to such an extent as I think will convince this House.

Three methods present themselves by which to test the soundness of this view:

First. On principle, and this involves—

(1) The nature of the legislative assembly, and the power necessarily arising therefrom.

(2) The express language of the constitutional provision.

(3) The reasons for that language.

(4) Its context and its relation to other parts of the instrument.

(5) The obvious construction of other portions of the same instrument necessarily subject to the same rule of construction.

Second. The text-books and the judicial authorities.

Third. Congressional precedents. These are of two classes—

(1) Action respecting the rights of individual members.

(2) Acts of Congress and general resolutions of either House.

As to the first proposition, what is the argument on principle? I think it will be undoubted that every legislative body has unlimited control over its own methods of organization and the qualifications or disqualifications of its members, except as specifically limited by the organic law. I do not think that this proposition needs amplifying; it is axiomatic. It is apparent that every deliberative and legislative body must have supreme control over its own membership except in so far as it may be specifically limited by a higher law. There is a distinction to be drawn between the legislative power of a legislative body and its organizing power, or those things which relate to its membership and its control over the methods of performing its allotted work. That is to be distinguished from the legislative power to be expressed in its final results.

When our Constitution was framed there was practically no limit to the right and power, in these respects, of the English Parliament. Such power is necessary to the preservation of the body itself and to the dignity of its character. In England it was at one time admissible to permit the admission into the House of Commons of minors, of aliens, and of persons not inhabitants of the political subdivision in which they were elected. To this day it is well known that an inhabitant of London may be elected by a Scotch constituency, and a member has been elected by more than one constituency to the same Parliament.

The framers of the Constitution, familiar with these facts, proposed to prevent their happening in this country. They knew also that a similar latitude of choice had been exercised in the original colonies and in the States of the Federation, and it was proposed to put a stop to it so far as Congress was concerned. A very luminous argument was made on this subject by John Randolph in the House of Representatives in 1807.

I quote as follows from his remarks:

> If the Constitution had meant (as was contended) to have settled the qualifications of members, its words would have naturally run thus: "Every person who has attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives." But so far from fixing the qualifications of members of that House, the Constitution merely enumerated a few disqualifications within which the States were left to act.
>
> It is said to the States: You have been in the habit of electing young men barely of age; you shall send us none but such as are five and twenty. Some of you have elected persons just naturalized; you shall not elect any to this House who have not been some seven years citizens of the United States. Sometimes mere sojourners and transient persons have been clothed with legislative authority. You shall elect none whom your laws do not consider as inhabitants.

In pursuance of the idea 'n the mind of the framers of the Constitution we have the peculiar words, "No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained," etc. How happy, indeed, are these words if we give them precisely the force and meaning for which we contend. How unhappy and how misleading, how impossible, in fact, to the masters of the English language who wrote them if they were intended to exclude all other possible requirements or disqualifications. We might admit such construction if suitable language was difficult to find or frame; but note how easily such a purpose could have been served in fewer words and with unmistakable meaning—thus: "Any person," or "a person," or "every person may be a Representative who shall have attained the age of 25 years," etc.

The provision seems to be worded designedly in the negative, so as to prevent the suspicion that it was intended to be exclusive, and so as to prevent the application of the rule, "the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another." The immediately preceding clause is affirmative, and says: "The electors in each State shall have the qualifications," etc. With some show of propriety it can be claimed that this provision is exclusive. It at least does not have the negative form to condemn such construction.

Story says (Constitution, section 448):

> The truth is that in order to ascertain how far an affirmative or negative proposition excludes or implies others we must look to the nature of the provision, the subject-matter, the objects, and the scope of the instrument. These, and these only, can properly determine the rule of construction. There can be no doubt that an affirmative grant of powers in many cases will imply an exclusion of all others.

It is a notable fact that in the first draft of this constitutional provision which provides for qualifications of Representatives in Congress the language was affirmative and positive, and that when it was finally presented for adoption it appeared in the form in which we now find it.

The slight contemporaneous discussion in the Constitutional Convention was upon the provision in the affirmative form. Why was it changed to the negative? Surely not for the sake of euphony. And certainly not to make it more explicitly exclusive.

In the report of the committee of detail, submitting the first draft of the Constitution, this section read in the affirmative and as follows:

> Every member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years at least; shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.

In the discussion Mr. Dickinson opposed the section altogether, expressly because it would be held exclusive, saying he—> was against any recitals of qualifications in the Constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the Legislature from supplying omissions.

Mr. Wilson took the same view, saying:

> Besides, a partial enumeration of cases will disable the Legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters.

The next day after this discussion, and when the clause respecting age, etc., had, in its general sense, been informally approved, a proposed section respecting a property qualification was discussed. Mr. Wilson said (Madison Papers, volume 5, page 404) that he thought "it would be best, on the whole, to let the section go out; this particular power would constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications." What did Mr. Wilson mean if the result of the discussion in which he participated on the preceding day was to "constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications?"

In view of the objections urged by Dickinson and Wilson and their opinions as to the construction that would result and the consequences thereof, the conclusion seems reasonable, if not absolutely irresistible, that the change from the affirmative to the negative form was intentionally made, and with the very purpose of obviating such objections, and hence that in being negatively stated it was considered by the Convention that the particular qualifications mentioned would not be exclusive and would not render impossible the "disqualifying odious and dangerous characters" and would not prevent "supplying omissions."

This section was finally reported and adopted in the negative form in which it now appears. The report of the committee seems to have been elaborately discussed.

Where do we find ourselves in such a case as this? Suppose that Brigham H. Roberts, instead of being charged with polygamy, was charged with treason, not constructive treason, but actual treason, and suppose that a witness appeared before the committee—a credible witness, whose testimony was undisputed—who testified that he had seen Brigham H. Roberts wage war against the United States in the Spanish war, giving aid and comfort to Spain, not constructively, but actively; and suppose that Roberts appeared himself before the committee and said, "All that this man says is true; I did wage war against the United States; I did give aid and comfort to its enemies in time of war against a foreign foe, and I glory in it."

Now, in that state of facts the law could not lay its hand upon him for the crime of treason, for the Constitution provides that no person shall be convicted of treason except upon the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or by confession in open court. So that under the state of facts thus presented he could not be convicted of treason.

Suppose he was here with a certificate of election from a great State and demanded admission.

There, then, we have a spectacle, the spectacle of a man not amenable to the punishment for treason, glorying in his treason as between this country and a foreign foe, but having the constitutional qualifications for Representative in Congress; and our friends of the minority will tell you on the floor of this House, if they are asked, that Mr. Roberts, thus spitted before the committee and the House, must be sworn in, in order that the House may thereafter expel him. I say that the House would thus find itself powerless to protect itself and its own dignity and be made ridiculous before the eyes of the whole world.

Another illustration. Suppose that on the 1st day of January, 1899, two months after his election and two months before his term as a Representative should commence, he had been convicted of the crime of bigamy or of adultery, either one of which is a felony under the statutes of Utah, for an offense, we will presume, committed prior to his election, so that it can not be charged that after his election he voluntarily put himself in that position, and he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of two years; and it so occurs that his term of imprisonment should expire on the 3d day of March, 1901, the day before his term as Representative in Congress expires. Suppose he presented himself on the 3d day of March, 1901, no action having been previously taken in his case, would the House have to admit him, or would not the proper proceeding be, while he was still in the penitentiary for such an offense, for the House to declare his seat vacant; that he ought not to have or retain a seat in the American House of Representatives?

Suppose another case: That in the midst of the organization, and before being sworn in, a member-elect should so indecently and outrageously conduct himself before the eyes of the House and the assembled multitude as to demand and justify expulsion if he had so conducted himself after he had been sworn in. What would the House do? In the midst of his outrageous misconduct must the House, with tender persuasiveness, beg him to honor it by being sworn in so that he may be turned out, or would it refuse to swear him in and proceed to declare his seat vacant? Could the strictest constructionist of the Constitution deny that the Constitution was substantially complied with if he was excluded by a two-thirds vote, even if he did not assent to our view in all respects?

Suppose that the claimant to this seat, while enjoying through the courtesy of the House the privilege of the floor, should declare his contempt for this body and for the Government; that he respected none of its decrees or the laws of the land as having any binding force upon him; that if he became a member of the House he should become so merely for the purpose of obstructing its business and to tear down the Government. What would the House do? Swear him in that it might have the ineffable privilege of turning him out? Or would it declare him unfit to have a seat in that body and declare his seat vacant?

As Judge Shaw says in Hiss vs. Bartlett (3 Gray, 473), "It is necessary to put extreme cases to test a principle."

So much for illustrations upon that question. Look, now, at the last paragraph of Article VI of the Constitution:

> The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

Here is an affirmative declaration that a certain oath shall be administered to certain officials. If the theory of exclusion is applied to the qualification clause as to Representatives, it must be applied to this clause, and therefore Congress has no power to demand any other oath or superadd to this oath any other provisions.

And yet the very oath we took as members of this House has additional provisions. Congress passed also the test-oath act in 1862, making vital additions to the constitutional oath, and, indeed, adding a new ground of disqualification for members of Congress. This act was passed by a large majority, and compelled members of Congress to submit to that oath for many years. Chief Justice Marshall, the great expounder of the Constitution, in the case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, declared that "He would be charged with insanity who should contend that the Legislature might not superadd to the oath directed by the Constitution such other oath or oaths as its wisdom might suggest," and the whole opinion in that case is addressed in principle to the very doctrine that is here advocated.

If Congress could add to the constitutional oath, the same theory of construction must permit it to add reasonable qualifications to the requirements for members of the legislative body, at least to the extent of declaring disqualifications which in their nature ought to bar a man from entrance into a great legislative body.

The same clause to which I have just referred has this provision:

> But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

If the Constitution had laid down all the qualifications which Congress or any other power had the right to impose it was unnecessary to go on and declare that no religious test should be required. That great instrument is inconsistent in its parts and contradictory of itself if it be true that it meant that no disqualifications should be provided except those named. Nor was it necessary, if the proviso means an oath merely, that such exception should be made, for the preceding words of the paragraph set out the required oath.

The effort to make the negative declaration of minimum qualifications exclusive of all others, whatever the necessities of the House may be, falls to the ground if we admit that the paragraph representing oaths is in the same instrument as that which defines the qualifications of members of Congress.

Let me now proceed with what I have called the text-book and judicial authority.

There is a statement in Story's work on the Constitution to the effect that the clause in the Constitution describing the qualifications for Representatives in Congress would seem to imply that other qualifications could not be added.

Now, whether or not that be sound, these two observations are to be made upon it:

First. That is dismissed in a very few words. Justice Story himself disclaims explicitly in his work that he gives his own opinion as to what the Constitution means, but asserts that he undertakes merely to give the statements of others.

Second. This statement of Judge Story does not at all interfere with the proposition we have laid down—that the power of the House to exclude from its membership a person who is, for instance, disloyal, a criminal, insane, or infected with a contagious disease, is not superadding any qualification within the meaning of Story, such as a property qualification or an educational qualification.

We find, however, that Story's expression, if it means all that is claimed for it by the minority, does not accord with the opinion of other commentators, with the courts, or with the Congressional precedents. We have already quoted, and will not now repeat, what is said by Prof. John W. Burgess, professor of history, political science, and international law, and dean of the university of political science in Columbia College, New York. This ambitious work, published in 1896, must be considered an authority on the subject of constitutional law.

In Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, third edition, page 138, is the following:

> The power given to the Senate and to the House of Representatives each to pass upon the validity of the elections of its own members, and upon their personal qualifications, seems to be unbounded. But I am very strongly of the opinion that the two Houses together, as one House, can not pass any statute containing a general rule by which the qualifications of members as described in the Constitution are either added to or lessened.
>
> Such a statute would not seem to be a judgment of each House upon the qualifications of its own members, but a judgment upon the qualifications of the members of the other branch. The power is sufficiently broad as it stands. Indeed, there is absolutely no restraint upon its exercise except the responsibility of the Representatives to their constituents. Under it the House inquires into the validity of the elections, going behind the certificates of the election officers, examining the witnesses, and deciding whether the sitting member or the contestant received a majority of legal votes. The House has also applied the test of personal loyalty to those claiming to be duly elected Representatives, deeming this one of the qualifications of which it might judge.

Pomeroy is discussing the power of the House, not stating what somebody may have said.

Throop on Public Offices, section 73, says:

> The general rule is that the legislature has full power to prescribe qualifications for holding office in addition to those prescribed by the Constitution, if any, provided that they are reasonable and not opposed to the constitutional provisions or to the spirit of the Constitution.

Who shall say that the exclusion of Roberts on the ground of polygamy is "opposed to the spirit of the Constitution?"

Cushing (Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 195, section 477) says:

> To the disqualifications of this kind may be added those which may result from the commission of some crime which would render the member ineligible.

What have the courts said on similar propositions? We first have the case of Barker vs. The People (3 Cowen) [New York]. In that case it was held that every person not specifically disqualified by the Constitution was eligible to election or appointment to office. In so far as that particular statement goes, it is a denial of the broad right to superadd to the constitutional provision as to qualifications. But that statement, as applied to this case, loses all of its applicability, for two reasons:

(1) Because it was not the question that it had to decide.

(2) Because the judge distinctly and positively declares—and that was the point involved in the case—that notwithstanding that want of power in the Legislature to add to the Constitution qualifications it did have the right to disqualify for crime. He proceeds to say that it might disqualify for crime upon conviction thereof. We apprehend that that is unimportant here, for if the House of Representatives has a right to disqualify for crime it has the power and the right to determine for itself whether the crime was committed, and not to depend upon a judicial conviction. The necessity for a judicial conviction is the more apparent where the person who seeks to take office undertakes to assume an executive office to which he has been elected or appointed, for there may not be any other than the ordinarily constituted court in which to try the question of his guilt of the offense that created his ineligibility.

But it is not the settled doctrine of the law that disqualification for crime must be first adjudicated in the courts. The authorities are, the most of them, against that proposition, and for the sake of convenience we shall refer to them here.

I quote from Royall vs. Thomas (28 Gratton (Va.), 130). The syllabus is as follows:

Under the constitution and statute of Virginia a party who has aided and assisted in a duel fought with deadly weapons may be removed from office by proceeding of quo warranto, or if that writ be not in use, by information in the nature of a quo warranto, though he has not been convicted of the offense in any criminal prosecution against him.

The court in this case say that the principal authority relied on in support of the contrary position to that stated in the syllabus is the Kentucky case of Commonwealth vs. Jones.

It was held in that case that the clause of the Kentucky constitution imposing the disqualification for office of the offense of dueling is not self-executing, except so far as it prevents those who can not or will not take the requisite oath from entering upon office. It was there held that a citizen willing to take such oath could not be proceeded against for usurpation of such office until he had been first indicted, tried, and convicted of the disqualifying offense.

It was found, however [said the Virginia court in the Gratton case], on examination, that much of the reasoning of the court in the Jones case turns upon the peculiar phraseology of the Kentucky constitution, in which it is declared that the offender shall be deprived of the right to hold any office, post, or trust under the authority of the State.

The court agreed that if, instead of the words "shall be deprived," the phrase "shall not be eligible" had been used, some of the difficulties attending the argument to show that the provision is self-executing would have been obviated.

In the case of Cochran vs. Jones, involving the same question, the board for the determination of contested elections arrived at a very different conclusion upon the same clause of the Kentucky constitution. It will thus be seen that even in Kentucky there is such conflict of opinion in respect to the true interpretation of the constitutional provisions in question as deprives the decision relied on by the defendants of the weight of being considered even persuasive authority.

The provision in the Virginia constitution is as follows: "No person who, while a citizen of this State, has, since the adoption of this constitution, fought a duel with a deadly weapon, sent or accepted a challegne to fight a duel with a deadly weapon, shall be allowed to vote or hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under this constitution."

The court goes on to explicitly hold that previous conviction was unnecessary, arguing it with great force.

The same doctrine is held in Mason vs. The State (58th Ohio State), where Mason, who had been elected probate judge of a county in Ohio, had expended more money to bring about his election than the corrupt practices act allowed, and as this act disqualified such person from holding the position to which he was elected, the supreme court held that he could be thus disqualified and kept out of office without conviction.

To the same effect is the case of Commonwealth vs. Walter (83 Pennsylvania State, 105).

Proceeding with the enumeration of authorities as to the exclusive effect of the constitutional provision defining or declaring qualifications for office, the next case to which I call attention is Rogers vs. Buffalo (123 New York). I quote from page 184:

The case of Barker vs. The People (3 Cowan, 686) has been cited by counsel. That case holds the act to suppress dueling, which provided as a punishment for sending a challenge that the person so sending should, on conviction, be disqualified from holding any public office, was constitutional.

The chancellor, in the course of his opinion, said he thought it entirely clear that the legislature could not establish arbitrary exclusions from office, or any general regulation requiring qualifications which the Constitution had not required. What he meant by such expression is rendered clear by the example he gives. Legislation would be an infringement upon the Constitution, he thought, which should enact that all physicians, or all persons of a particular religious sect, should be ineligible to hold office, or that all persons not possessing a certain amount of property should be excluded, or that a member of assembly must be a freeholder, or any such regulation.

But, in our judgment, legislation which creates a board of commissioners consisting of two or more persons and which provides that not more than a certain proportion of the whole number of commissioners shall be taken from one party does not amount to an arbitrary exclusion from office, nor to a general regulation requiring qualifications not mentioned in the Constitution. The "qualifications" which were in the mind of the learned chancellor were obviously those which were, as he said, arbitrary, such as to exclude certain persons from eligibility under any circumstances. Thus a regulation excluding all physicians would be arbitrary. But would a regulation which created a board of health and provided that not more than one physician from any particular school, or none but a physician, should be appointed thereon be arbitrary or unconstitutional as an illegal exclusion from office? I think not.

The purpose of the statute must be looked at, and the practical results flowing from its enforcement. If it be obvious that its purpose is not to arbitrarily exclude any citizen of the State, but to provide that there shall be more than one party or interest represented, and if its provisions are apt for such purposes it would be difficult to say what constitutional provision is violated, or wherein its spirit is set at naught.

And again, on page 188:

It is said that the legislature had no right to enact that a person who shall be appointed to a public office shall have the qualifications necessary to enable him to discharge the duties of such office, nor to provide that the fact that he does possess such qualifications shall be ascertained by a fair, open, and proper examination.

Nothing but the bare oath mentioned in the Constitution can be asked of any applicant for an appointive office is the claim of the appellant. We do not think that the provision above cited was ever intended to have any such broad construction. Looking at it as a matter of common sense, we are quite sure that the framers of our organic law never intended to impose a constitutional barrier to the right of the people through their legislature to enact laws which should have for their sole object the possession of fit and proper qualifications for the performance of the duties of a public office on the part of him who desired to be appointed to such office. So long as the means to accomplish such end are appropriate therefor they must be within the legislative power.

The idea can not be entertained for one moment that any intelligent people would ever consent to so bind themselves with constitutional restrictions on the power of their own Representatives as to prevent the adoption of any means by which to secure, if possible, honest and intelligent service in office. No law involving any test other than fitness and ability to discharge the duties of the office could be legally enacted under cover of a purpose to ascertain or prescribe such fitness. Statutes looking only to the purpose of ascertaining whether candidates for an appointive office are possessed of those qualifications which are necessary for a fit and intelligent discharge of the duties pertaining to such office are not dangerous in their nature, and in their execution they are not liable to abuse in any manner involving the liberties of the people.

And, again, on page 190:

In this case we simply hold that the imposing of a test by means of which to secure the qualifications of a candidate for an appointive office, of a nature to enable him to properly and intelligently perform the duties of such office, violates no provision of our Constitution.

This opinion was delivered by Justice Peckham, now a member of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Another instructive case is that of Ohio ex rel. Attorney-General vs. Covington (29 Ohio State, page 102). The opinion is by Judge McIlvaine, one of the ablest and most careful judges that ever sat in the supreme court of Ohio. He says:

The last objection made to the validity of this act is based on section 4 of article 15 of the constitution, which declares: "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this State unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

The question arises under the fourth section of the act (which the court is construing), which provides: "Each member and officer of the police force shall be a citizen of the United States, and a resident citizen for three years of the city in which he shall be appointed, and able to read and write the English language."

There is no claim made that the qualifications prescribed in the act, in view of the nature of the duties to be performed, are unreasonable, or even unnecessary, to the discharge of the duties. The point made is that disqualifications are imposed by the statute which are not imposed by the constitution.

It is apparent that this statute is not in conflict with the terms of this constitutional provision. It does not authorize the appointment of a person who is not an elector. The express provision of the constitution is that a person not an elector shall not be elected or appointed to any office in this State. Now, unless the clear implication is that every person who has the qualifications of an elector shall be eligible to any office in this State, there is no conflict between the statute and the constitution. I do not believe that such implication arises.

There are many offices the duties of which absolutely require the ability of reading and writing the English language. There are many electors who, from habit of life or otherwise, are wholly unfit to discharge the duties of many offices within this State. If the framers of the constitution had intended to take away from the legislature the power to name disqualifications for office other than the one named in the constitution, it would not have been left to the very doubtful implication on which is claimed from the provision under consideration. The power under the general grant being ample and certain, a statute should not be declared void because in conflict with an alleged implication, unless such implication be clear and indubitable.

We find the same doctrine in the case of Darrow vs. The People (8 Colorado, page 417). The syllabus relating to this question is as follows:

The statute designating the payment of taxes as a necessary qualification of membership in the board of aldermen is not in conflict with section 6, article 7, of the constitution.

The provision of that section is as follows:

No person except a qualified elector shall be elected or appointed to any civil or military office in the State.

The court says, on page 420, that it is argued that this provision—by implication inhibits the legislature from adding the property qualification under consideration. There is nothing in the constitution which expressly designates the qualifications of councilmen in a city or town, and this section contains the only language that can possibly be construed as applicable thereto. But it will be observed that the language used is negative in form—that it simply prohibits the election or appointment to office of one not a qualified elector. There is no conflict between it and the statute. By providing that a supervisor or an alderman shall be a taxpayer the legislature does not declare that he need not be an elector. Nor is the provision at all unreasonable. On the contrary, it is a safeguard of the highest importance to property owners within the corporation.

The right to vote and the right to hold office must not be confused. Citizenship and the requisite sex, age, and residence constitute the individual a legal voter; but other qualifications are absolutely essential to the efficient performance of the duties connected with almost every office. And certainly no doubtful implication should be favored for the purpose of denying the right to demand such additional qualifications as the nature of the particular office may reasonably require. We do not believe that the framers of the Constitution, by this provision, intended to say that the right to vote should be the sole and exclusive test of eligibility to all civil offices, except as otherwise provided in the instrument itself; that no additional qualifications should ever be demanded, and no other qualifications should be imposed.

LEGISLATIVE PRECEDENTS.

I proceed now to the legislative precedents upon this matter of exclusion, without admitting the person objected to to be sworn in.

JEREMIAH LARNED.

One Jeremiah Larned, as long ago as 1785, was elected to the legislature of Massachusetts, but it turned out that he had violated a law that that legislature had passed. And what was it? On election day he headed a riot for the purpose of preventing the collection of taxes. What did the fathers of that day do? They were not men who were regardless of human rights; they held that inasmuch as Larned had violated the law he was unworthy to take a seat upon that floor, and they kept him out.

JOHN M. NILES.

In the first session of the Twenty-eighth Congress, on the 30th of April, 1844, the credentials of John M. Niles as a Senator from Connecticut were presented to the Senate and objection was made to the oath being administered. Mr. Jarnagin submitted a resolution referring the credentials of Mr. Niles to a select committee, which was instructed—

To inquire into the election, return, and qualifications of the said John M. Niles, and into his capacity at this time to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Jarnagin himself made a speech at that time, in which he took the view that it was a question of eligibility that was raised, and that a man who was insane was ineligible, and of course incapable of taking the oath. There was some discussion about it, and some doubt raised, and Mr. Niles's colleague said he had no objection to the matter going to the committee.

On May 16 following, the committee reported in favor of permitting Mr. Niles to take the oath, which was then administered. It appears from the report that Mr. Niles had been suffering from severe bodily afflictions which impaired his mind to such an extent that he was removed to the insane asylum at Utica, N. Y., where he remained until April 1, 1844, after which he was discharged as improved, but not completely restored to health. The committee reported that while Mr. Niles was laboring under mental and physical disability, he was not of unsound mind in the technical sense of that phrase.

If this case establishes anything, it establishes the right of the Senate to protect itself against a person of infirm or unsound mind; that it recognized that it had the right to exclude a person possessed of every qualification which the Constitution required if he was not of sound mind.

PHILIP F. THOMAS.

Another case in the Senate was that of Philip F. Thomas, of Maryland, in the Fortieth Congress. His credentials were presented on March 18, 1867, and the following day were referred to the Judiciary Committee. There was a very elaborate debate.

The charge against him was that he had been disloyal, and that he was therefore incapable of taking the test oath which was provided for in the act of July, 1862.

The resolution which was then adopted, and under the provisions of which Thomas was excluded from the United States Senate, was as follows:

Resolved, That Philip F. Thomas having voluntarily given aid, countenance, and encouragement to persons engaged in hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Senator of the United States from the State of Maryland, or to hold a seat in this body as such Senator, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate inform the governor of the State of Maryland of the action of the Senate in the premises.

The vote for exclusion was 27 to 20. Among those voting in the negative was Lyman Trumbull. He did so because he thought the proof of disloyalty was unsatisfactory.

His position on the question involved had, however, been clearly and unmistakably defined in the case of who was appointed a Senator from Oregon early in 1862.

BENJAMIN STARK,

There were ex parte affidavits as to Stark's disloyalty. He was not permitted at first to take the oath, and his case went to a committee, which reported in favor of letting Stark be sworn in, but without passing at all on the facts. The discussion of the case, however, showed that it would be impossible to take proof before the legislature of Oregon elected his successor. The state of the proof was so unsatisfactory also that on the resolution to expel Stark not even a majority voted in the affirmative. On the preliminary question Mr. Trumbull, February 7, 1862, made an able and conclusive report. He said:

That an avowed traitor, a convicted felon, or a person known to be disloyal to the Government has a constitutional right to be admitted into the body would imply that the Senate had no power of protecting itself—a power which, from the nature of things, must be inherent in every legislative body. Suppose a member sent to the Senate, before being sworn, were to disturb the body and by violence interrupt its proceedings, would the Senate be compelled to allow such a person to be sworn as a member of the body before it could cast him out? Surely not, unless the Senate is unable to protect itself and preserve its own order. The Constitution declares "that each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

The connection of the sentence in which the power of expulsion is given would indicate that it was intended to be exercised for some act done as a member, and not for some cause existing before the member was elected or took his seat. For any crime or infamous act done before that time the appropriate remedy would seem to be to refuse to allow him to qualify, which, in the judgment of the undersigned, the Senate may properly do, not by way of adding to the qualifications imposed by the Constitution, but as a punishment due to his crimes for the infamy of his character.

There is absolutely no doubt whatever that if the case of disloyalty had been stronger Stark would have been excluded. The weakness of the case in that respect is manifest when we remember that less than a majority voted to expel him.

KENTUCKY CASES.

On the 3d of July, 1867, the members-elect from the State of Kentucky presented their credentials to the House. They were not then permitted to be sworn in, on the ground that they had been disloyal or had expressed disloyal sentiments.

If there is any criticism to be lodged against the action of the House at that time, it is not that the theoretical ground upon which they based their action was untenable, but that they undertook to exercise the power to exclude a man for disloyalty years after he had been disloyal, as alleged, and after the time in which alone he could have been disloyal.

The Committee on Elections, which took jurisdiction of the case under the order of the House, made several reports, all of which were of the same general character and all of which were sustained by the House. The reports were carefully prepared and were most elaborately argued.

From the report filed by Mr. Dawes, as chairman, I quote as follows:

The committee are of the opinion that no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion, ought to be permitted to be sworn as a member of this House, and that any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming a seat as a member of this House ought to be investigated and reported upon before such person is permitted to take the seat.

A second report was filed, in which it is said:

The committee adhere to the views expressed in the former report, that no man who has been engaged in an attempt to overthrow the Government and subvert the Constitution by force of arms, or who has voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons so engaged, ought to be admitted to a seat in this House to make laws for the nation he has traitorously sought to destroy; and it is apparent that there must be power in this House to prevent this, the House being the judge of the qualifications of its members, of which fidelity to the Constitution is one, and that this end can only be certainly accomplished by the investigating of any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming his seat as a member of this House before such person is permitted to take the seat.

The House concurred in this view of the committee by adopting the resolution under which the committee is now acting. The principle upon which this preliminary investigation was ordered was adopted by Congress when the oath of office to be taken by members of this House was prescribed by law, and the preliminary investigation of specific and apparently well-founded charges against a person claiming a seat in this House is only an additional mode of attaining the same result sought to be secured by requiring the oath to be taken by all persons who become members of the House.

From time to time after the objection was made to the swearing in of other members-elect, the House assumed jurisdiction, tried the cases in advance of administering the oath, and where, as sometimes had been the case, it appeared that the claimant had not been disloyal he was of course sworn in; in other cases he was excluded.

As showing that the House in acting in the Kentucky and other cases in the Fortieth Congress was not precipitate and wanting in deliberation, I call attention to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 22d of March, 1869. This was four years after the war and nearly two years after the Kentucky cases arose, when it may fairly be said that a deliberate judgment had been reached respecting the right of Congress in a proper case to exclude a member-elect.

On the 22d of March, 1869, the following was adopted as the permanent rule of the House:

Resolved, That in all contested-election cases in which it shall be charged by a party to the case, or a member of the House, that either claimant unable under the act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act to prescribe the oath of office, and for other purposes," it shall be the duty of the committee to ascertain whether such disability exist, and if such disability shall be found to exist the committee shall so report to the House and shall not further consider the subject without the further order of the House, and no compensation will be allowed by the House to any claimant who shall not have been entitled at the time of the election, and whose disloyalty shall not have been removed by act of Congress.

This rule, it will be observed, is independent of the mere disqualification for disloyalty, but is intended to exhibit the matured determination of the House of Representatives to insist not only upon the oath required by the act of July 2, 1862, but also that the person claiming the right to take the oath should show his right to do so.

The test-oath act only required that he take the oath, but the House held that it had a right to inquire whether he had the capacity to take the oath, which was an exercise of an original power, not based upon any statute.

WHITTEMORE CASE.

Again, in the Forty-first Congress the House of Representatives asserted its right to exclude from membership a Representative-elect with a perfect certificate and possessing all of the so-called constitutional qualifications. This is the case of Whittemore, from South Carolina. It must be remembered that Whittemore was a Republican and that he brought his certificate to a Republican House of Representatives. Previously, on the 24th day of February, 1870, he had resigned in order to avoid a vote on a resolution of expulsion which had been reported to the House.

It was charged against him that he had sold a cadetship, and that therefore he was unworthy to continue to be a member of the House. His resignation, however, prevented action upon the resolution of expulsion, and the House contented itself with the adoption of a resolution of censure. Whittemore returned to his constituency, a special election was ordered, and he was reelected and returned to the same session of Congress, with his certificate of election under the broad seal of the State of South Carolina. Objection was made by General Logan, and after some discussion the matter was postponed until June 21. General Logan made a powerful speech, in which he asserted the right to exclude a man guilty of an offense such as Whittemore had committed. In this debate he said, among other things:

It is said that the constituency had the right to elect such a member as they may think proper. I say no. We can not say that he shall be of a certain politics, or of a certain religion, or anything of that kind; but, sir, we have the right to say that he shall not be a man of infamous character. He is not merely a representative of the constituents who elect him, but his vote in the House is a vote for the whole nation. It is a vote for the people of the whole country, and every district in the United States has the same interest in his vote that his own district has.

Hence, if Congress shall not have the power or authority or shall not have the right to exclude a man of that kind, then the rights of the people of the whole country may be destroyed by a district sending a Representative who may be obtained to vote in a manner which may be destructive of the rights of the people. Are we to be told that Congress has no right to prevent anything of this kind because of the right of any constituency to send whomsoever they please?

* * * * * * * *

It is not that the people shall not be represented. Not at all. It is this: That the people of the country have no right to destroy their own liberties by filling Congress with men who, from their conduct, show themselves capable of the destruction of their Government.

* * * * * * * *

Congress, being the representatives of the whole people, are entitled to say that the rights of the whole country shall not be destroyed by one or more districts throwing in here a man, or set of men, capable of their destruction; and that, having knowledge of the facts, and the power to prevent the mischief by exercising the right of exclusion, they have a right to exercise that power, and thereby protect the interests of the country, and to preserve instead of destroy the right of representation.

* * * * * * * *

For crime, sir, we have a right to proscribe a man. That is the ground I put it on. That is the ground on which I put it first, and that is the ground on which I put it now. We have a right, I say, to protect the interests of the country by excluding men from these halls on the ground of crime. It is not a crime to be a Democrat or a Republican, to be a Presbyterian or a Methodist, or a member of any other denomination; but, sir, it is a crime for a man to do what this man has done. And why? Because the laws of our country denominate it a crime. It is made a crime by law. Hence my theory is based on the law, and is this, that in pursuance of the law and in carrying out its principles we must protect the country by protecting ourselves against crime and against criminals in this body. That is the ground I took and the theory I stated.

The principal ground of objection was to immediate action, and the claim was made that the case ought to be sent to a committee to determine Whittemore's right to be sworn in. Logan replied that the House was in possession of all the facts. He withdrew the demand for the previous question and the debate proceeded. Later on he said he supposed if there were not more than seventeen or eighteen who wanted to speak, of course it would not take much time, and that the House could vote down the previous question if it wanted more discussion. He said he did not care whether the House sustained the demand for the previous question or not. But the House seemed to be much more insistent than Logan, for the previous question was ordered and the vote on the main question was 130 to 24. No doubt some of those who voted in the negative were opposed to exclusion.

But the most of them must have felt as did Mr. Farnsworth, who said:

I do not know but that when this matter is properly investigated I shall also vote for excluding Mr. Whittemore from a seat, but I think it ought to be first investigated by a committee.

The resolution in this case provided for the return of his credentials to Whittemore and his exclusion from the House.

Now, what do our friends say about that case? Well, that is not authority either, they say. They whistle down the wind the Whittemore case as they whistle down the wind everything else that does not accord with their views. The Whittemore case is absolutely sound. The speech of General Logan expresses the principle with clearness and cogency upon which, with propriety, that man was excluded, and the most eminent men in the House of Representatives voted for it, among them Garfield and Randall and S. S. Cox and Judge McCrary and many others.

GEORGE Q. CANNON.

The case of George Q. Cannon, who was excluded from the Forty-seventh Congress as a Delegate on the ground that he was a polygamist, on principle clearly sustains the proposition of exclusion of a member.

It is true that when excluded Cannon was merely a Delegate-elect from the Territory of Utah, and not a person elected to an office created by the Constitution.

Nevertheless, we assert that on principle that case can not be differentiated from the case at bar.

Allen G. Campbell was a candidate for Delegate from the Territory of Utah against George Q. Cannon in 1881. Campbell received about 10 per cent of the votes cast, and the governor issued a certificate to him on the theory that Cannon was ineligible to be a Delegate in Congress. Campbell's seat was contested by Cannon. The committee, in January, 1882, made a very elaborate report. All but one united in declaring that Campbell, not having received a majority of the votes, was not entitled to a seat, and the dissenting member finally agreed with the majority, that whatever Cannon's rights might be, Campbell ought not to be seated.

A considerable majority of the committee further found that as Cannon was a polygamist, he was ineligible and disqualified to be Delegate in Congress. At this time the Edmunds law had not been passed, and there was no statutory ground of ineligibility.

Some members of the committee undertook to differentiate between the right of the House to exclude a Member and its right to exclude a Delegate, while other members insisted that, while there was a sharp distinction to be drawn between a Member and a Delegate, yet that in so far as the matter of ineligibility on the ground of polygamy was concerned, the same principle would apply to both.

This, then, was the condition of the Cannon case before the Edmunds law was passed. The committee was unanimously of the opinion that Cannon was duly elected a Delegate from the Territory of Utah, and therefore that he was entitled to hold the certificate of election; that he stood in the attitude of a man appearing before the bar of the House with the proper certificate of the governor of the Territory of Utah and with no infirmity except that which went to his disqualification, namely, the fact of polygamy.

Before the case was taken up in the House for discussion and action the Edmunds law was passed. Mr. Cannon in his speech says that there were some members of the House who had told him that while they would not have excluded him under the report of the committee, they would then vote to exclude him because of the provisions of section 8 of the Edmunds Act; and Mr. Ranney, of Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Elections, who had dissented from the majority report, declared that he felt compelled to vote in favor of the exclusion of Cannon because of the passage of that law.

Nevertheless, the fact appears, and I believe it to be the just inference from what occurred from the report of the committee and the debate on the floor of the House, that Cannon would have been excluded if the Edmunds law had never been passed. The vote in favor of allowing him his seat was 79, and against it 123.

When we look at the arguments made on both sides of this House, it will be discovered that he would have been excluded if the House had come to pass upon it before the passage of the Edmunds law.

STATUTORY PRECEDENTS.

I come now to the statutory declarations where disqualifications have been imposed.

Section 21 of the act of April 30, 1790, is as follows:

That if any person shall, directly or indirectly, give any sum or sums of money, or any other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, or security, for the payment or delivery of any money, present, or reward, or any other thing, to obtain or procure the opinion, judgment, or decree of any judge or judges of the United States, in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause depending before him or them, and shall be thereof convicted, and so forth, shall be confined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, and shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Section 5499, which was passed in 1791, provides:

That every judge of the United States who in any wise accepts or receives any sum of money or other bribe, etc., shall be fined and imprisoned, and shall be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

IS A MEMBER OF CONGRESS AN OFFICER?

Before citing other acts of Congress, it is proper to discuss the question as to whether a member of Congress is an officer within the meaning of the statute.

If a member of Congress is not an officer, if the qualifications of a member of Congress are only those named in the Constitution, then, of course, the makers of the Constitution meant that nobody could be made ineligible for Congress, either by law or by the act of either body, even though laws passed immediately after the adoption of the Constitution made him ineligible for all other positions under the Government.

Now, upon that proposition I make these observations, as to the meaning of the word "office."

First. Undoubtedly under the Constitution, in one or two instances, the word "office" does not include Representative in Congress, as, for example, the last paragraph of section 6, Article I:

No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

In that case the words "holding any office" means an office other than a member, but the context is absolutely unmistakable, and no person is in danger of assuming, even if a member of Congress hold an office, that it meant to say that no member of Congress shall be eligible to be a member of Congress.

In the second place, the provision in the last paragraph of section 3 of Article II, relating to the duties of the President, that he shall commission all the officers of the United States, does not mean that he is to commission members of Congress; but he is himself an officer, and he does not commission himself, nor does he commission the Vice-President, who is also an officer under the United States.

So also paragraph 2, section 1, Article II:

> But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

There the distinction is made, "No Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust."

But under the Constitution the word "office" must include in certain of its provisions a Representative in Congress.

It is inconceivable that in the Constitution the word "office" never includes a member of Congress. Look at the last paragraph of section 3, Article I:

> Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Is it conceivable that the framers of the Constitution meant that a man might be adjudged guilty in case of impeachment and that that judgment of guilty could carry with it a judgment disqualifying him from holding any office save only to be a Representative or Senator in Congress?

Paragraph 8, section 9, Article I, is as follows:

> No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

Did the Constitution mean that Representatives and Senators in Congress could receive emoluments, presents, office, or title from some king, prince, or foreign state, but no other person holding an office could without the consent of Congress?

But in the next place, as to statutes. Whatever may be held to be the meaning of the word "office" in the Constitution, it does not follow that the same meaning must be given to it in the statutes. We find a varying meaning in the Constitution, and we find a varying meaning in the statutes. The act of 1790 has always been assumed to cover members of Congress.

Section 5500 of the Revised Statutes, originally passed in 1853, and now in substantially the form in which it was when originally passed, provides:

> Any member of either House of Congress who asks, accepts, or receives any money, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, * * * either before or after he has been qualified or has taken his seat as such member, with intent to have his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding * * * pending in either House, * * * shall be punished by a fine, etc.

Section 5502 is as follows:

> Every member, officer, or person convicted under the provisions of the two preceding sections who holds any place of profit or trust shall forfeit his office or place, and shall thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor or trust or profit under the United States.

This section applies explicitly to a member of Congress, and brings forfeiture of the office or place held by him. If "office" in this section does not include a member of Congress, the word "place" must include him.

Now, the word "office" in that concluding part of this section must refer to member. First, because the word "office" is used in the preceding line as necessarily including a place that is held by a member. It can not fail to include that, for it refers to a "member" and what shall happen to him. In the next place, because it is not conceivable that the legislative body intended that the violation of that law by a member should forfeit the position that the member had and then not intended to disqualify him from being elected again as a member of the House when it disqualifies him from holding all other offices or places under the United States.

But that is not the only statutory construction of the word "office." It is still more explicitly declared in the test-oath act of July 2, 1862:

> That hereafter every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the United States, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:
>
> "I, A B, solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto.
>
> "And I do further swear (or affirm) that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God."
>
> Which said oath, so taken and signed, shall be preserved among the files of the court, House of Congress, or Department to which the said office may appertain.
>
> Any person who shall falsely take the said oath shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction, in addition to the penalties now prescribed for that offense, shall be deprived of his office and rendered incapable forever thereafter of holding any office of trust under the United States.

It will be noticed that the only person required to take that oath is an officer, a person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit, but it does not include in this phraseology a member.

By reference to the concluding portion of the act it will appear that the word "office" does include a member of Congress:

> Which said oath so taken and signed shall be preserved among the files of the court, House of Congress, or Department to which the said office may appertain.

We not only have the use of the word "Congress" as indicating to what the word "office" appertains, but also the universal, unquestioned construction by the acts of the Senate and of the House in compelling the test oath to be taken year after year until it was repealed. Each House of Congress recognized that that oath was an oath to be taken by a Representative in Congress, notwithstanding the fact that the act passed made it apply only to a person elected or appointed to an office of honor or trust in the United States.

I quote this section here as well for the purpose of showing the Congressional precedents imposing a substantial qualification or disqualification upon the members of Congress really substantial in its character, as the facts of history show, as to exhibit what is meant in the statutes by the word "office."

There are many other statutory provisions, passed from time to time since 1790, disqualifying for office of trust or profit under the United States persons guilty of the several crimes defined in those statutes. I do not refer to them specifically, but they are illustrated by the statutes already quoted.

It ought also to be said that section 8 of the Edmunds Act, whatever meaning may be given to it, evidences the legislative will to disqualify polygamists for office. It indicated the legislative purpose so aptly described by Justice Matthews, in the Ramsey case, when he said that no more cogent or salutary method could be taken than was taken by the Edmunds Act, which undertook to withdraw from all political influence those persons who showed a practical hostility to the development of a commonwealth based upon the idea of the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony.

The statutory declaration, if I may use that form of expression as applicable to the joint action of the House, coupled with the President's approval, is only a more solemn declaration by both Houses of the principle that it has the right to exclude under certain conditions; that either House may do it. That very point was made in the discussion on the test oath in the Senate—that of course that law could not with certainty bind any succeeding Senate or any succeeding House, but that it was apparent that so long as there existed any necessity for such an oath, and in the very nature of things the time would come in a few years when it would not be necessary, either House would respect its requirements and compel a submission to it; and that was the action of the Senate and House for nearly twenty years.

THE INELIGIBILITY CREATED BY THE EDMUNDS ACT.

Having in mind that portion of this report in which I have heretofore set out the status and condition of Brigham H. Roberts, I would inquire where the specific provisions of the Edmunds Act place him.

Two facts appear as pertinent to this inquiry.

First. That he was convicted in 1889 of unlawful cohabitation under that act and served a term in the penitentiary therefor.

Second. That he has been ever since 1885, and is now, a polygamist, as that word is used in section 8 of the Edmunds Act and defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S., 15) and Cannon vs. The United States (116 U. S., 55). Section 8 is as follows:

> No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Reading that act as applicable to this case, eliminating the irrelevant portions, it appears as follows:

> No polygamist shall be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument under the United States.

In the Ramsey case, above referred to, a specific distinction is made between a polygamist and a person cohabiting with more than one woman. A polygamist is a person having a certain status respecting more than one woman.

The condition, therefore, of a polygamist may be merely passive and requiring no affirmative act. To cohabit with more than one woman is, however, to do an affirmative thing. The result is that one who has two or more wives that he holds out to the world as such is a polygamist, wherever he may be, while one who cohabits with more than one woman is not cohabiting except in the place in which, of necessity, cohabitation must occur.

In the Ramsey case the court illustrated its definition of a polygamist as being a status or condition like any other qualification for elector, or for office, and declared that it was as if Congress had undertaken to make a married man ineligible. It would be the status in that event of being a married man which would create and continue the ineligibility.

It therefore appears that the fact that a man is a polygamist is a fact that inheres in him and stays with him, and persists in remaining with him wherever he may go, so long as he is the possessor of more than one wife; and just as one who is a married man in the State of Maryland continues to be a married man if he leaves his wife at home and comes to the District of Columbia, so Mr. Roberts, being in the condition or status of a polygamist in the State of Utah, does not leave that status behind, nor does he dissociate himself from that status or cast off the garb of a polygamist by leaving his wives at home and traveling from that State into the District of Columbia.

In the very nature of things the House of Representatives, wherever it is as a House of Representatives, is in a place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; therefore when Roberts comes into the District of Columbia, in the status of a polygamist, he is ineligible under the Edmunds Act to hold any office or place under the United States, and therefore ineligible to hold the position of member of the House of Representatives.

THE COMPACT OF STATEHOOD.

I come now to the third main proposition, that his election involves a breach of the compact and understanding by which Utah was admitted to the Union.

Utah was admitted to the Union with the distinct understanding upon both sides that polygamous practices were under the ban of the church, prohibited and practically eradicated, both as a practice and a belief, and that they would not be renewed.

The effort is made to alarm people upon this proposition that some similar objection might be made to representation from States in which the claim might be made that the right to vote was denied to some citizens. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that if such ground of complaint exists the Constitution specifically tells us what our remedy is; and declares precisely, in the fourteenth amendment, what we may do in any event when the right of suffrage is improperly denied. There is no possible escape from that position, even assuming that there was anything in the bogy man.

But as to Utah, she was admitted on the express statement that the practice of polygamous living was interdicted by the church, was practically abandoned by the people, and eradicated as a belief. Of course, that sporadic instances of the violation of the law against cohabitation might occur no one doubted.

The manifesto forbidding plural marriages and enjoining obedience to the laws relating thereto was issued by Wilford Woodruff, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, September 25, 1890.

Some doubt having arisen as to whether that manifesto prohibited association in the plural marriage relation as well as the contracting of plural marriages as a ceremony, President Woodruff himself testified under oath as follows:

Q. Did you intend to confine this declaration and advice to the church solely to the question of forming new marriages, without reference to those that were existing—plural marriages?

A. The intention of the proclamation was to obey the law myself—all the laws of the land on that subject—and expecting that the church would do the same.

Q. You mean to include, then, in your general statement, the laws forbidding association in plural marriages as well as the forming of new marriages?

A. Whatever there is in the law with regard to that—the law of the land.

Q. Let me read the language, and you will understand me, perhaps, better. "Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, * * * I hereby declare," etc. Did you intend by that general statement of intention to make the application to existing conditions where the plural marriages already existed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to living in the state of plural marriage?

A. Yes, sir; that is, to the obeying of the law.

Q. In the concluding portion of your statement you say, "I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the laws of the land." Do you understand that that language was to be expanded to include the further statement of living or associating in plural marriage by those already in the status?

A. Yes, sir; I intended the proclamation to cover the ground—to keep the laws, to obey the law myself—and expected the people to obey the law.

The significance of this statement by the spiritual head of the church is the more apparent when we remember that it was made but a short time before the question of the admission of Utah was debated in the House of Representatives.

Is it to be an occasion for wonder, therefore, that the proclamation of amnesty issued by President Harrison, January 4, 1893, should contain these words:

Whereas it is represented that since the date of said declaration the members and adherents of said church have generally obeyed said laws and abstained from plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation; and

Whereas by a petition dated December the 19th, 1891, the officials of said church, pledging the membership thereof to the faithful obeyance of the laws against plural marriages and unlawful cohabitation, applied to me to grant amnesty for past offenses against said laws.

Is it strange that the House Committee on Territories in 1893 should report that "polygamy is dead?" And if that is not fully convincing, let the unprejudiced mind consider the following extracts from the debate in the House of Representatives on the admission of Utah, December 12, 1893:

Mr. RAWLINS, the Delegate from the Territory, seems to have hypnotized the House by his eloquence. I quote a sentence or two:

Mr. MORSE. The twin relic of barbarism—polygamy—still lives; and while it does live and is in the ascendency I can never vote to admit Utah as a State of the Union.

Mr. RAWLINS. It was found in 1882 there were 2,225 adult male polygamists in the Territory of Utah. This report proceeds to say:

"It is not denied by the advocates of admission that polygamy is practiced in that Territory, but they claim it is not obligatory upon the members of the Mormon Church, but that it is gradually dying out until now there are comparatively few who are living in polygamous relations, and that this few are generally past the meridian of life. They claim that polygamous marriages have ceased to be solemnized, that in the near future polygamy will have ceased altogether, and is even now practically dead, and that it is unjust to deprive the many of political rights because the comparatively few are violating the law in this regard."

The majority report of the committee in 1888 found that the practice of polygamy had been decreasing. It was claimed then by representatives of the Mormon people that polygamy had been forbidden by the Mormon Church, and they asserted that it was no longer in existence and would not revive.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question right there?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. Is it not a fact that prior to the election of the gentleman the Territory of Utah sent here as their representative Mr. Cannon, who had six wives?

Mr. RAWLINS. No, sir.

Mr. MORSE. How many wives did he have?

Mr. RAWLINS. You mean George Q. Cannon?

Mr. MORSE. He was a polygamist, was he not?

Mr. RAWLINS. That is ancient history, my friend. Mr. Caine has represented Utah here; he was my predecessor as the Delegate from the Territory. He served here ten years. Mr. Caine is not a polygamist. In 1882 Mr. Cannon, the polygamist you speak of, was excluded from his seat in Congress on account of his polygamy.

Mr. MORSE. But he represented the sentiment of those people all the same, because they elected and sent him here.

Mr. RAWLINS. They elected him in years gone by. I am not denying, my dear friend, that in 1853 or 1860 or 1875 or 1880 polygamy was practiced in Utah. I am not denying that the people of that Territory elected polygamists to office in those old days. But the gentleman does not seem to know that the world does progress. [Applause.] There is nothing under the sun that is not changeable and subject to alteration.

"Why," said Mr. RAWLINS, "just let that noble commonwealth into the sisterhood of States and then we will show you the magnificent specimens of Utah manhood we will send down here." Well, they have sent the predicted specimen. [Laughter.]

And so the enabling act was passed. Every incredulous member who cast doubt upon the sincerity of polygamists in Utah was whistled down the wind. Every legislator who doubted if the funeral of polygamy had really taken place was laughed to scorn. Polygamy was dead! That was the battle cry, and on it the battle was fought and won.

What would have become of the bill if Mr. RAWLINS had declared that the State of Utah, just about to be born, would reserve the right to send a polygamist to Congress? His bill would have been buried beneath an avalanche of votes beyond the hope of resurrection.

The language of the enabling act is, "Provided that polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited."

The understanding was that those words prohibited the practice of living in the status or condition of polygamous marriage.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary says:

Marriage.—A contract made in due form of law by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge toward each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry, the mere act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on themselves.

"Marriage" is the legal status or condition of husbands and wives just as infancy is the legal relation or condition of persons under age. (1 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, volume 14, page 470.)

The act of marriage having been once accomplished, the word becomes afterwards to denote the relation itself. (Schouler on Domestic Relations, 222.)

Senator RAWLINS was asked before the committee on this case the following question:

Without reference to any assumed facts in this case, do you think that Congress would have admitted Utah to statehood if it had been predicted that Utah would send here in a few years a man as her Representative who was polygamously living with more than one wife?

He answered:

I do not think the Congress of the United States would have admitted Utah if they at that time had believed that a revival of the practice of polygamy would occur.

It is not to be assumed from the fact that a rare or sporadic case of polygamous marriage occurred in Utah, or sporadic instances of unlawful cohabitation had come to light, that that would be a violation of the agreement; but we take it that it is in the last degree a violation of the agreement or understanding when that State sends to Congress a man who is himself engaged in the persistent practice of the very thing the abandonment of which was the condition precedent to its admission; and that man the most conspicuous defier of the law and violator of the covenant of statehood to be found in Utah.

As bearing on this, I here quote the manifesto issued a few days ago by the Mormon Church and presented by Senator RAWLINS to the Senate:

In accordance with the manifesto of the late President Wilford Woodruff, dated September 25, 1890, which was presented to and unanimously accepted by our general conference on the 6th of October, 1890, the church has positively abandoned the practice of polygamy, or the solemnization of plural marriages, in this and every other State, and that no member or officer thereof has any authority whatever to perform a plural marriage or enter into such a relation. Nor does the church advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of any of its members.

In other words, the Mormon Church has left it to us and not to the church to say what shall be done with Mr. Roberts. Is the House of Representatives to respond in any uncertain tone?

THE RIGHT TO EXPEL.

Upon this alternative proposition that the proper method of procedure is to permit the claimant to be sworn in, and then, if a two-thirds vote can be obtained, to expel him, I desire to call attention first of all to what Story says on that subject, section 837:

The next clause is, "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member." No person can doubt the propriety of the provision authorizing each House to determine the rules of its own proceedings. If the power did not exist, it would be utterly impracticable to transact the business of the nation, either at all, or at least with decency, deliberation, and order. The humblest assembly of men is understood to possess this power, and it would be absurd to deprive the councils of the nation of a like authority.

But the power to make rules would be nugatory unless it was coupled with a power to punish for disorderly behavior or disobedience to those rules. And as a member might be so lost to all sense of dignity and duty as to disgrace the House by the grossness of his conduct, or interrupt its deliberations by perpetual violence of clamor, the power to expel for very aggravated misconduct was also indispensable, not as a common but as an ultimate redress for the grievance.

And again, section 838:

What must be the disorderly behavior which the House may punish, and what punishment other than expulsion may be inflicted, do not appear to have been settled by any authoritative adjudication of either House of Congress. A learned commentator supposed that members can only be punished for misbehavior committed during the session of Congress, either within or without the walls of the House, though he is also of opinion that expulsion may be inflicted for criminal conduct committed in any place.

And after a reference to the Blount case, Story says:

It seems, therefore, to be settled by the Senate upon full deliberation that expulsion may be for any misdemeanor which, though not punishable by any statute, is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a Senator.

On the subject of expulsion, Rawle says, second edition, page 48:

Both the Senate and the House of Representatives possess the usual power to judge of the elections and qualifications of their own members, to punish them for disorderly behavior, which may be carried to the extent of expulsion, provided two-thirds concur. It had not been yet precisely settled what must be the disorderly behavior to incur the punishment, nor what kind of punishment is to be inflicted. * * *

Paschal on the Constitution, page 87:

It seems to be settled that a member may be expelled for any misdemeanor which, though not punishable by any statute, is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a member.

We do not need to call particular attention to the phraseology of the constitutional provision, nor do we think it very important to consider the evolution, from the standpoint of punctuation, through which that provision went in the Constitutional Convention. It now appears as following in the same sentence as the provision for disorderly behavior, with only the rhetorical separation of a comma from it.

It thus appears that the language of the provision for expulsion, in the view of the ablest commentators, furnishes clear and cogent reasons for its construction, and that neither House ought to expel for any cause unrelated to the trust or duty of a member.

This has been the uniform practice of both Houses of Congress.

The case of Hiss vs. Bartlett (3 Gray, 468) is cited as showing the unlimited power of a legislative body to expel.

A casual reading of this case, which a careful reading confirms, will show that it directly sustains the position of the majority.

As there was no constitutional provision in Massachusetts respecting expulsion, the legislature of that State was, of course, clothed with all the powers incident to expulsion which are inherent in a legislative body whose powers are not limited by a constitution.

In addition to that, Hiss was expelled on the ground that his "conduct on a visit to Lowell, as one of a committee of the house, was highly improper and disgraceful, both to himself and to the house of which he was a member."

Everything said by the court had relation to such a state of facts. The case is one of expulsion for gross misconduct as a member and in the performance of his duty as a member.

Neither House has ever expelled a member for any cause unrelated to the trust or duty of a member.

Both Houses have refused to expel where the proof of guilt was clear, but where the offense charged was unrelated to the trust or duty of a member.

HUMPHREY MARSHALL.

The Senate in 1796 refused to expel Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky. He was charged with the commission of a grave offense against the law of his State. The Senate refused to expel, on the ground that it had "no jurisdiction" to do so.

WILLIAM N. ROACH.

In 1893 proceedings were set on foot in the Senate looking to the expulsion of William N. Roach, a Senator from North Dakota. A long and exceedingly interesting discussion followed, but the proceeding was abandoned without coming to a vote and Roach served out his term. Not a solitary precedent in the American Congress was cited in support of the proposition to expel. There was no precedent.

O. B. MATTESON.

Matteson had resigned in the Thirty-fourth Congress before a resolution of expulsion was passed. He was charged with a grave offense—an offense inconsistent with his trust and duty as a member. He was reelected to the Thirty-fifth Congress and took his seat without question or objection.

In the Thirty-fifth Congress a resolution of expulsion was proposed against him. The case went to a committee, and that committee, of which our honored colleague, Mr. GROW, was a member, in a somewhat elaborate argument, reported against the expulsion of Matteson on the ground that the Thirty-fifth Congress had no right to expel, because the offense was committed in the previous Congress, and did not relate to any violation of his trust or duty as a member of the Thirty-fifth Congress.

The resolution reported was to the effect that it was inexpedient for the House to take any further action in regard to the resolution proposing to expel O. B. Matteson, and the House never did take any further action, excepting to lay the resolution on the table, and Matteson served through the Thirty-fifth Congress.

BROOKS AND AMES CASES.

In the next place, we have the Brooks and Ames cases. They were cases in which charges had been made against Oakes Ames and James Brooks of corruption in connection with Credit Mobilier, and a special committee of five took the cases and reported in favor of expulsion.

Thereupon, the Judiciary Committee, which had taken up a resolution respecting Colfax, reported on the Ames and Brooks cases, with an elaborate argument setting out that the House had no right to expel, and gave many reasons, among others that it was an imposition of a qualification not fixed by the Consitution. They laid down the same proposition that can rightfully be urged against expulsion here, if the minority of this committee is right.

On February 18, 1873, the special committee submitted an elaborate report, concluding with the following preamble and resolutions, viz:

1. Whereas Mr. Oakes Ames, a Representative in this House from the State of Massachusetts, has been guilty of selling to members of Congress shares of stock in the Credit Mobilier of America for prices much below the true value of such stock, with intent thereby to influence the votes and decisions of such members in matters to be brought before Congress for action: Therefore,

Resolved, That Mr. Oakes Ames be, and he is hereby, expelled from his seat as a member of this House.

2. Whereas Mr. James Brooks, a Representative in this House from the State of New York, did procure the Credit Mobilier Company to issue and deliver to Charles H. Neilson, for the use and benefit of said Brooks, 50 shares of the stock of said company at a price much below its real value, well knowing that the same was so issued and delivered with intent to influence the votes and decisions of said Brooks as a member of the House in matters to be brought before Congress for action, and also to influence the action of said Brooks as a Government director in the Union Pacific Railroad Company: Therefore,

Resolved, That Mr. James Brooks be, and he is hereby, expelled from his seat as a member of this House.

Mr. Sargent, of California, offered the following substitute:

Whereas by the report of the special committee herein it appears that the acts charged as offenses against members of this House in connection with the Credit Mobilier occurred more than five years ago, and long before the election of such persons to this Congress, two elections by the people having intervened; and whereas grave doubts exist as to the rightful exercise by this House of its power to expel a member for offenses committed by such member long before his election thereto, and not connected with such election: Therefore,

Resolved, That the special committee be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Resolved, That the House absolutely condemns the conduct of Oakes Ames, a member of this House from Massachusetts, in seeking to procure Congressional attention to the affairs of a corporation in which he was interested, and whose interest directly depended upon the legislation of Congress, by inducing members of Congress to invest in the stocks of said corporation.

Resolved, That this House absolutely condemns the conduct of James Brooks, a member of this House from New York, for the use of his position of Government director of the Union Pacific Railroad and of member of this House to procure the assignment to himself or family of stock in the Credit Mobilier of America, a corporation having a contract with the Union Pacific Railroad, and whose interests depended directly upon the legislation of Congress.

They could not say that the things complained of were unrelated to these men as members, because at the time of their occurrence they were members not of the House that was then considering the resolutions, but of a previous House. The result was that the resolutions did not refer to any claim that these facts had no relation to Ames and Brooks as members. The resolution declaring in its preamble the grave doubt of the House as to its right to expel under those circumstances was substituted for the original resolution by a vote of 115 to 110. Thereupon, a motion was made to lay the preamble of the substitute on the table—that is to say, the proposition was made to vote down the principle declared in that substitute, that the House had no jurisdiction.

That motion was lost by a vote of 79 to 123, and Mr. McCullough was the only person who, in the progress of the vote, gave his reasons for voting "no," and he said he voted "no" because he doubted the power of the House to expel. Thereupon, a motion was made to adopt the preamble, and that motion failed to carry by a vote of 98 to 115, a very much smaller majority than that by which the motion to lay it on the table was lost. The inference from these two votes is that as to this particular proposition there was uncertainty in the minds of the members and they were not ready to make a definite declaration. Thereupon, the House by an overwhelming majority adopted the resolutions of condemnation.

The sum and substance of it all is, that the House in the Ames and Brooks case, where, as we apprehend, history and all authority declare the proof of guilt was practically conclusive, refused to adopt the report of the committee in favor of expulsion, and merely censured the offending members.

As indicating the views of eminent and able members of the House on this question, we quote the following from the debate on the Ames and Brooks case:

Mr. McCRARY. Now, sir, in this case, if the facts which the committee have found are true, the purpose and object of these corrupt transactions was to secure influence not alone in the Fortieth Congress, but in subsequent Congresses as well. The Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Credit Mobilier expected to require, perhaps not positive legislation, but they desired to prevent unfriendly legislation in all these Congresses. I have no doubt that they would have been glad if they had had the power to prevent this present investigation.

Without discussing the general question of jurisdiction, about which I confess I have some difficulty, I am perfectly satisfied to rest the jurisdiction of the House in this case upon the ground which I have just stated.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, since I first examined the subject of the right of the House of Representatives to expel a member under that provision of the Constitution which authorizes each House to "punish its members for disorderly behavior," and "with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member," my conviction has been growing stronger and stronger that this House has no jurisdiction of an offense committed by a person before he was a member of this body. I do not propose to enlarge upon that subject. In reference to this question, I concur in the conclusion of the Judiciary Committee, whose report in another case was yesterday read to the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Gentlemen in this connection have referred to Story. I do not propose to read at any great length from him. I am not unmindful of the fact that this lamented man, so full of learning, often crowded into his pages so much of the text of others with whose writings he was familiar that a doubt often arises as to his true and certain meaning. But I do not hesitate to say that every thoughtful man in America who reads the text of Story will come to the conclusion that upon the question under consideration this House has no power whatever over any member of this body except the power expressly given by the text of the Constitution and by the laws of the United States passed under the Constitution.

Story says, quoting from the Constitution: "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior." Punish its members, not the members of another House, but punish its members; not a member of the Fortieth Congress: not a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress; not a member of the Thirty-eighth Congress; "punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member." * * *

"No person can doubt the propriety of the provision authorizing each House to determine the rules of its own proceedings. If the power did not exist it would be utterly impracticable to transact the business of the nation either at all, or at least with decency, deliberation, and order. The humblest assembly of men is understood to possess this power; and it would be absurd to deprive the councils of the nation of a like authority. But the power to make rules would be nugatory unless it was coupled with a power to punish for disorderly behavior or disobedience to those rules."

Now, how could a man who was not a member of your body at all be guilty of misbehavior as a member of it or of disobedience to your rules before he came to be a member of it? It is useless to waste words upon such a proposition. Story goes on: "And as a member might be so lost to all sense of dignity and duty as to disgrace the House by the grossness of his conduct, or interrupt its deliberations by perpetual violence or clamor, the power to expel for very aggravated conduct was also indispensable, not as a common but an ultimate redress for the grievance."

From whom? From a member of this body. For what? For misconduct, for crime if you please, too grievous to be put up with or borne while he was a member of that body. Gentlemen have referred to Rawle. Rawle refers to the same provision of the Constitution, and says:

"It has not been precisely settled what must be the disorderly behavior to incur punishment, nor what kind of punishment is to be inflicted; but it can not be doubted that misbehavior out of the walls of the House or within them when it is not in session would not fall within the meaning of the Constitution."

There is an authority cited by the committee. I think it goes too far, but it does not sustain the committee. I stand upon the ground that a member of this body during his membership may be expelled for any crime he may have committed against the laws of his country or against the rules and authority and dignity of this House after his election to this, not to another House. And that is as far as, under the obligations of my oath, I dare go. And I venture the opinion that when the question comes to be understood by the American people, that will be as far as any House of Representatives dare go.

GEORGE Q. CANNON.

But I think a more significant case still than that—significant in more senses than one—was the case of Cannon, in the Forty-third Congress. George Q. Cannon had the certificate as Delegate from Utah. A feeble effort was made to prevent his being sworn in. There was no evidence that he had ever violated any law, and nothing more than a moral objection could be urged against him. Maxwell contested his seat on the theory that Cannon was ineligible, and that he, Maxwell, being the only eligible candidate, was therefore elected. His pretensions on that ground were promptly disposed of against him.

The committee brought in a report that Cannon was elected and returned. This was in May, 1874. The minority of the committee insisted that he was entitled to the seat which he occupied. The resolution of the minority was adopted by a small majority, as against the resolution that he was elected and returned. Some of the best, strongest, and ablest men in the House voted "no" on that proposition: among them, of those who are now in public life, were BURROWS, FRYE, HARMER, and HOAR.

The suggestion was made that the proper proceeding was to expel, if Cannon was a polygamist; and the House permitted itself to believe, since Cannon was already in his seat, that that was the proper course.

A committee was at once appointed to examine into the question as to whether or not he was a polygamist in order that they might expel him.

That committee was appointed in May, 1874, and on the 21st day of January, 1875, it reported in favor of what they called exclusion, but what was, of course, expulsion, because he was already in. They found he was a polygamist. The minority report, which accompanied the majority report, opposed expulsion on three grounds.

First. Because the House had in the preceding session declared that Cannon was entitled to a seat.

Having declared that he was entitled to his seat, it would be inconsistent to expel him, since there was no intervening circumstance which changed his status at the date of this report from his status when the House confirmed his right to a seat.

Second. That when Utah was created as a Territory it was a Mormon community, and Congress knew it and had a right to expect that it would send a Mormon Delegate. It therefore had no right to protest now that the Mormon had come.

Third. We here quote the language of the minority:

But a graver question than those we have considered is the question whether the House ought, as a matter of policy or to establish a precedent, expel either a Delegate or a Member on account of alleged crimes or immoral practices unconnected with their duties or obligations as Members or Delegates when the Delegate or Member possesses all the qualifications to entitle him to his seat.

There is more along the same line in this report.

Three weeks later this case was called up for consideration. Mr. Loughridge, of Iowa, raised the question of consideration, and the House refused to take it up by an overwhelming vote, only 21 members voting in favor of it.

Thus we see that the House, which thought in May that it might purify itself or protect itself just as well by expulsion at a later day, discovered that the very action which it had taken was turned into a weapon against it when it undertook at that later day to bring about expulsion, and Cannon sat until the end of his term. Will history repeat itself? It took the House several years to rid itself of Cannon. Will it be as deliberate in this instance?

SCHUMACHER AND KING.

This was a case where Schumacher and King, members of the House, were charged with corruption in connection with the China mail service.

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary was filed August 9, 1879.

In declaring against the right of expulsion, it said:

Your committee are of opinion that the House of Representatives has no authority to take jurisdiction of violations of law or offenses committed against a previous Congress. This is purely a legislative body and entirely unsuited for the trial of crimes.

The fifth section of the first article of the Constitution authorizes "each House to determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member." This power is evidently given to enable each House to exercise its constitutional function of legislation unobstructed. It can not vest in Congress a jurisdiction to try a member for an offense committed before his election; for such offense a member, like any other citizen, is amenable to the courts alone.

Within four years after the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Constitution, Humphry Marshall, a Senator of the United States from Kentucky, was charged by the legislature of his State with the crime of perjury, and the memorial was transmitted by the governor to the Senate for its action. The committee to whom it was referred reported against the jurisdiction of the Senate, and say:

"That in a case of this kind no person can be held to answer for an infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, and that in all such prosecutions the accused ought to be tried by an impartial jury of the State or district wherein the crime shall have been committed. Until he is legally convicted, the principles of the Constitution and of the common law concur in presuming that he is innocent. And they are also of the opinion that, as the Constitution does not give jurisdiction to the Senate, the consent of the party can not give it, and that therefore the said memorial ought to be dismissed."

The minority report did not combat the position of the majority in so far as this case is concerned, as the following extract will show:

That the only question now presented to the House is the question of jurisdiction, which question arises under the last clause of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution:

"Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

It will be seen that there are no words of limitation on the power to expel, which seems to have been left to the good sense and discretion of each House. In other words, does not the Constitution refer rather to the fitness of the member to hold the office, resting on considerations of public justice and policy, than to the time of his election? Yet the undersigned do not deny but that there are limitations on the power of this House arising from the circumstances of particular cases and the relations of this House to the constituency of an accused member; therefore, as will be seen, the undersigned need not go further in this case than to assert jurisdiction, because the offenses complained of were not known to the constituents of the members in question until after their election.

Much is said, Mr. Speaker, about the moral side of this question. Doubtless it has such a side; and if that were the only consideration before us, the House might take the same action it will take. I do not hesitate, Mr. Speaker, to submit this proposition to the candid judgment of the House and before the bar of history. I am profoundly convinced that I am right and history will so declare it. The House can no more safely part with this power than it can part with any other power it possesses.

This touches its very vitality; if it loses it, it is in certain conceivable instances absolutely powerless. We are told it is a power that may be abused. What power does the House possess that it has not at some time abused? What branch of the Government is it that, having power, has not abused it? What man, what body of men, clothed with a little brief authority has not made an unwise use of that authority? But shall they therefore be shorn of power? It is a mighty question, it is a question of governmental life, not to be lightly dealt with or inconsiderately answered.

The case of Roberts sinks into insignificance in its presence. If we do not exclude this man, we strike down one of the most vital and necessary powers that belong to a legislative body. Let not such a thing be done. If it is not we may be sure that never again while the spirit of civilization dominates this Republic will any defiant violator of the law, under cover of religion or any other claim, thrust himself into public view, nor will any polygamist knock for admission at the door of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for a moment? Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as the gentleman from Maine may occupy more than an hour, that he be allowed to complete his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the minority of your committee, unable after a long, arduous, thorough, and laborious investigation of this case, to agree with the majority, beg leave now to submit, with all due and becoming modesty, their views upon the legal propositions involved. The minority freely concede to the majority industry, integrity, honesty, and ability, but we can not surrender to them our judgments. We understand that we were invested by the House with a duty and a trust. It was that of investigating the right of the gentleman from Utah to a seat in this House. This involved upon the part of the committee the ascertainment of the facts and the law, not as we might wish them to be, not as anyone else might wish them to be, but as they in fact exist. We have discharged that duty so far as we have been able, and I propose in the time allotted to me to submit our views upon these propositions. Upon the facts we agree.

We believe that the House of Representatives is now sitting under the clause of the Constitution which makes it the judge of the election, the return, and the "qualifications of" the gentleman from Utah. We believe that it is the duty of the House of Representatives to now sit as a judge, to determine what qualifications are required and whether or not the gentleman from Utah possesses those qualifications. We do not believe, when this House sits as this great constitutional court, that it sits here to legislate and create disqualifications. We believe it sits here to ascertain and determine, to ascertain what qualifications are prescribed by the Constitution, to determine whether or not the gentleman from Utah possesses these qualifications.

The qualifications prescribed by the Constitution are age, citizenship, and inhabitancy.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.—(Constitution, Article I, section 2.)

The report of the committee finds that the gentleman from Utah possesses these qualifications. Here the majority and the minority part company. The majority hold that this House sitting here, alone, of its independent action, can add to the qualifications mentioned in the Constitution. The minority hold that they can not add to them. The minority hold that when this House sits as this great constitutional court and ascertains the qualifications required, and ascertains that the gentleman from Utah possesses these qualifications, that it is its duty under the Constitution to render a judgment in accordance therewith, no matter what the consequences may be, because we believe the Constitution to be, to quote the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], "the supreme law of the land."

I call attention to the several propositions relied upon by the majority, in order that we may understand at the outset the questions which divide us.

The majority state, first, that they propose to exclude the gentleman from Utah—

By reason of his violation of the Edmunds law.

Second—and this is the main ground:

By reason of his notorious and defiant violation of the law of the land, of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and of the proclamations of the Presidents, holding himself above the law and not amenable to it. No government could possibly exist in the face of such practices. He is in open war against the laws and institutions of the country whose Congress he seeks to enter.

This proposition, stripped of its verbiage and rhetoric, simply means that this House of Representatives, here and now, can create and impose qualifications or disqualifications not mentioned in the Constitution, by its own independent. individual action.

This is the proposition of which, as I understand, the majority are principally enamored.

They say, on page 40 of their report:

The principles underlying the second main ground of disqualification, hereinbefore asserted, have already been fully discussed, but the ground is appropriately restated at this point.

We assert before the House, the country, and history—

It seems that history is standing around here somewhere looking at us—that it is absolutely and impregnably sound, not to be effectively attacked, consonant with every legislative precedent, in harmony with the law and with the text-books on the subject.

This is the first proposition to which I propose to address myself. It involves the construction of the Constitution and transcends in gravity and importance all other questions. Reflect for a moment. Let us see what the proposition is. This House by its own independent action can add a disqualification or a qualification not mentioned in the Constitution.

At this time it is proposed to add the disqualification of polygamy. At a future time it may be proposed to add the disqualification of adultery, of fornication. At another time it may be proposed to add the disqualification of membership in a trust or an octopus, or the attorney of a trust or an octopus, or any misdemeanor or obnoxious conduct, and so on ad infinitum.

No man when he is elected to this House under this proposition, suggested by the majority, can ever tell whether he possesses the qualifications, or is affected by the disqualifications, that are thus to be asserted. It is only when he stands at the threshold of the House and knocks at the door, that he discovers that the House of Representatives, in the exercise of its wisdom, deeming him obnoxious, then creates and declares the disqualification that may exclude him. No constituency can know whether its choice is eligible; in fact, between the election, and organization, popular excitement may demand the imposition of a disqualification, before unthought of, and their choice, though qualified when elected, would be ineligible when he presented himself for admission. And inasmuch as it is suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], and well suggested, and in accordance with the law, that the action of this House does not conclude the action of another, the man who is admitted to-day may be excluded to-morrow.

The man who is excluded to-day may be admitted to-morrow. I submit that this proposition, so general and so indeterminate, can only be justified by the "general-welfare" clause in the Constitution. In order to be accurate and perspicuous, I propose, as I go on with these suggestions, to allude to this proposition as the "general-welfare" proposition.

To this nebulous, elastic, dangerous "general-welfare" proposition, indefinite as space, without limit or boundary, we enter our absolute dissent. As against it, we place ourselves upon the sound bed rock of the Constitution. We say that the right and the privilege of becoming a member of this House is a great right and a high privilege; we believe that that right is defined and the conditions prescribed by the Constitution; that it is surrounded by legal rules, protected by legal principles. It is not a varying rule, to be affected by the vicissitudes of changing political majorities, or to be affected, if you please, by fickle and evanescent, public agitation. The rule that we rely upon is plain, simple, and well settled. He "may run that readeth it."

It stands undisturbed by the mutations and changes of time. It is without variableness, neither shadow that is cast by turning. Except as it may be modified by constitutional amendment, it is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." It changes not, when the majority changes in this body, nor does it change, when the morality changes in this body. Against its foundations the waves of popular, transitory, agitation beat in vain. It is a distinct, well-defined right.

Bearing in mind, if you please, the proposition of the majority, that this House, alone, can establish a disqualification, I wish to ask the House to allow me to review the historical conditions that surrounded the founders of this Government, when they built the Constitution under which we live. It is well and fitting. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the great constitutional case of Kilbourne vs. Thompson, in order to ascertain the limitations on the power of the House of Representatives to punish for contempt, and to define the rights and privileges of its members, went back to an English statute of 1688. I take the House back to 1762. That year signalized a great period in the development of English liberty. John Wilkes then became famous, in the struggle for liberty and freedom.

In 1762 and 1763 he published a series, or what were then called, libels. In the main they consisted of caustic criticism and terrible arraignment of the ministry which was then controlling the destinies of England. They were drastic, severe, pointed; because John Wilkes wielded a pen that was the mortal foe of oppression and autocracy.

Shortly after April 23, 1763, the date of the publication of No. 45 of the North Briton, a prosecution was begun against him for the publication of two libels—the "Essay on women" and No. 45 of the North Briton—and he was summarily committed to the Tower. He was then a member of the House of Commons. Upon habeas corpus proceedings he was immediately released, because his arrest was held to be a violation of his privilege as a member.

Shortly after that Wilkes left England and went to Paris. In 1764, after he had thus fled the Kingdom, in order to escape the consequences of these prosecutions, he was expelled from the House for the first libel, his "Essay on women." Let it not be forgotten that Wilkes was then fighting the great battle for free thought and free speech—the liberty and freedom of the press—the right to publish, subject to legal responsibilities, just, fair, honest, and truthful criticisms of public men or measures. That right was vindicated by Wilkes, he "paying with his person" in 1769. In these days all concede, that the liberty and freedom of the press, is simply indispensable to the preservation of the liberties of a free people. The very presence here in these two Halls of Congress, of the representatives of the press, is of the greatest value to the Republic, for the conservative influence that it exercises upon national legislation. The right of the press in this land to-day to criticise, and condemn if need be, every officer, from the President of the United States down to the humblest hogreeve or field driver, is the result largely of the courage and resolution of John Wilkes.

In 1769 Wilkes, having returned to England, received his sentences for two libels and was committed to prison in the execution thereof. He had been elected a member of the Parliament which sat in 1768, not the same Parliament from which he was expelled in 1764, but a subsequent Parliament. He published a short criticism of a letter written by Lord Weymouth. He was again expelled, and I will read the resolution of expulsion, because I want the House to understand from this historical source the origin of the contrast between, this power of exclusion and expulsion, as it rests upon sound historical foundation. His second expulsion was February 3, 1769, and the resolution read as follows:

> That John Wilkes, esq., who hath expressed himself the author and publisher of an insolent, scandalous, and seditious libel—

That was the article prefacing and criticising the letter of Lord Weymouth—> and who has been convicted in the Court of Queen's Bench of having printed and published a seditious libel and three obscene, seditious, and impious libels, and been sentenced to twenty-two months' imprisonment, be expelled this House, and that a warrant be issued for a new election.—Fitzgerald's Life of John Wilkes, Volume II, page 37.

I beg the House to note this: This resolution of expulsion, February 3, 1769, expelled Wilkes, among other things, for an offense for which he had already been expelled in 1764, and for two offenses, both of which had been committed at least five years before that Parliament sat, and for which he was then imprisoned, so that he could not appear in the House of Commons. That was the expulsion of February 3, 1769. What was the next step in this struggle?

Wilkes was returned again immediately, and unanimously, from the county of Middlesex. What did the House of Commons do then? On the 17th day of February, 1769, they passed a resolution reading as follows:

> Resolved, That John Wilkes, esq., having been in this session of Parliament expelled this House, was, and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in the present Parliament.—Cavendish, Debates, volume I, page 231.

Note the language:

> Was and is incapable of being elected a member, and that the late election is a void election.

Not an expulsion, but the declaration of the House of Commons on its own motion that Wilkes, by reason of having been expelled, was ineligible to a seat in the House of Commons—exclusion.

In opposing the adoption of this resolution, Edmund Burke said:

> I rise to obtain some information upon this great constitutional point. You are going to make a disqualification of a member to sit in Parliament; you are going to make a disqualification contrary to the unanimous opinion of a whole county. Words have been thrown out by the noble lord importing that this is the law of Parliament. Is that, sir, a fact? Is this the law of Parliament? I wish to have that law established on the ground which establishes all laws. Has it acts of Parliament? It has none. Has it records? Has it custom? I have not heard a variety of precedents used.—Ibid., page 231.

Here it will be seen that of all who took any part in that debate, the only man who lives in history, made the specific point that the House of Commons was adding, in violation of law, by its own action, a disqualification in Wilkes's case.

On the 17th of March, 1769, Wilkes having been returned again as a member of the House of Commons, with an overwhelming majority, his election having been opposed by a Mr. Dingley, the House adopted a resolution which read as follows:

> That the election of John Wilkes, who hath been by this House adjudged incapable of being elected, etc., is null and void. (Ibid., page 53.)

On the 15th of April he was returned again, Henry Luttrell opposing him in the election. The Commons then adopted a resolution amending the return, inserting Luttrell's name in place of Wilkes, and declared Luttrell elected.

This is the history of the Wilkes case in the House of Commons. He was twice expelled and three times excluded. The second expulsion was in part for offenses committed six or seven years before the Parliament from which he was expelled, sat. For one of them he had already been expelled, and for both of them he was then suffering imprisonment in the Tower. In 1782, after the House of Commons had recovered its liberty and been emancipated from the control of the ministry and the King, it adopted, on the motion of Wilkes himself, this resolution:

> That the said resolution [that of February 17, 1769, declaring him incapable of being elected] be expunged from the journals of this House, as being subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this Kingdom. (Hansard, volume 23, page 1269.)

They resolved to expunge what? I beg the House to notice "the resolution of February 17, 1769," declaring him ineligible. Why? Because it was "subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this Kingdom."

That the significance of this resolution and its vital importance, as declaring the lack of power of one branch of the legislature to add a qualification, was fully appreciated at that time clearly appears from the discussion on its adoption. While Fox conceded the principle, he thought the resolution unnecessary, as it would not have the force of law and would not change the doctrine. The lord-advocate agreed with Mr. Fox and spoke principallyto the "idea of excluding anyone from a seat in that House by a mere resolution of the House, and without the concurrence of the other branches of the legislature. Such a resolution would be contrary to all law and to the very spirit of the constitution, according to which no one right or franchise of an individual was to be taken away from him but by law."

Wilkes was a man of almost supernatural resources in the line of fighting his battles against the Crown and the officers of the law. He had writs of error, habeas corpus petitions, and every artifice known to the law; but at no time during that whole period of twenty years from 1762 to 1782 did either Wilkes, or any champion of his, make any complaint as to the impropriety of the action of the House, in the two expulsions. Bear this in mind: The original historical distinction between "expulsion" and "exclusion." This is not all. These things were not done in a corner. The war cry in England during that period was "No. 45!" "Wilkes and liberty!"

It was the battle for freedom of the press, free thought, and free speech. This period gave rise to all of those magnificent specimens of polemical literature known as the Junius Letters. I read what Junius said in his most famous letter, the letter to the King, upon this proposition of the right of the House of Commons to create a disqualification; I read it in connection with this same proposition now pending before the House upon the part of the majority.

He says:

> The Commons have attributed to their vote an authority equal to the act of the whole legislature.—Ibid., 63.

The proposition was emphasized during the whole of the period of "Wilkes and liberty."

The most serious objection urged was that "the law of the land," which entitled Wilkes to his seat as the choice of the electors, had been put aside by a resolution of a single branch of the legislature, instead of by the joint action of the three.

This is a single branch of Congress. The Senate and the President are the other branches that must concur before this body can make any law of the land.

It was thus that a warm burst of Mr. Henry Cavendish's became a regular toast at political banquets: "I do from my soul detest and abjure as unconstitutional and illegal the damnable doctrine that the House of Commons can make, alter, suspend, or abrogate the law of the land." This really expressed the whole, as it is called, "in a nut shell."—Fitzgerald's Life of Wilkes, volume 2, page 45.

There is the history of "exclusion" by one branch of the great legislature. In 1215 the barons of England, on the field of Runnymede, wrested from King John, Magna Charta. In 1664 and 1665 the liberties of the people of England were being ruthlessly trampled under foot by a dissolute, infamous ministry and a profligate king. Cromwell, at Marston Moor and Naseby, vindicated and preserved them. During this period, from 1762 to 1782, John Wilkes was paying the "penalty in his own person" and rendering great services to the cause of English liberty.

The practical demonstration of the lack of power on the part of the Commons alone "to make, alter, suspend, or abrogate the law" is a great milestone, along the pathway, blazed by a free people, in achieving civil and religious liberty.

Such "proceedings were proved by unanswerable arguments to be illegal." (May's Parliamentary Practice, tenth edition, 1893, page 54.)

We freely concede to the majority the credit and the glory, if credit and glory there be, of resurrecting and in invoking, in these closing hours of the nineteenth century, for the purpose of excluding a polygamist from the House of Representatives, a doctrine which was declared during that eighteenth century conflict, by liberty-loving Englishmen, to be detestable and "damnable" and "subversive of the right of the whole body of electors of the Kingdom."

We congratulate the House upon being given the opportunity by the majority to place itself upon record before "the country and history," as it will, if it adopts their resolution, as indorsing and approving a doctrine that history declares to have been an infamous instrument of oppression and tyranny. We can not consent to thus turn the time hand backward on the dial plate. Let the House of Representatives adopt the policy suggested by the majority in the light of these historical facts and principles.

PROCEEDINGS OF FEDERAL CONVENTION.

Let us examine the proceedings of the Federal Convention, held when? In 1787, only five years after the termination of this great controversy in England, in which Wilkes played so important a part. If the gentlemen of the majority will now permit me, I will correct an error which they make in the report they submit to the House. They say, referring to the discussion in that convention, on page 15:

The next day after this discussion, and when the clause respecting age, etc., had, in its general sense, been informally approved, a proposed section respecting a property qualification was discussed. Mr. Wilson said (Madison Papers, volume 5, page 404) that he thought "it would be best, on the whole, to let the section go out; this particular power would constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications." What did Mr. Wilson mean if the result of the discussion in which he participated on the preceding day was to "constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications?"

In view of the objections urged by Dickinson and Wilson and their opinions as to the construction that would result and the consequences thereof the conclusion seems reasonable, if not absolutely irresistible, that the change from the affirmative to the negative form was intentionally made, and with the very purpose of obviating such objections, and hence that in being negatively stated it was considered by the convention that the particular qualifications mentioned would not be exclusive and would not render impossible the "disqualifying, odious, and dangerous characters" and would not prevent "supplying omissions."

It was because Mr. Wilson objected to the report of the committee of detail, that this clause was changed in the Constitution, they say. Let me call the attention of the majority to the fact, as I hold Madison's Debates in my hand, that the speeches made by Wilson and Dickinson in that Convention were not made on the report of the committee of detail, but upon a proposition which was to be submitted to, and reported upon, by the committee of detail. The discussion was on July 26. August 10 the second speech was made by Mr. Wilson, which the committee say was made one day after the discussion—an error of only fourteen days, a mere trifle for the majority.

Many more errors will be seen before I finish this discussion. The proposition under discussion that was to be submitted to the committee of detail reads:

That the committee of detail be instructed to receive a clause requiring certain qualifications of landed property and citizenship of the United States in members of the National Legislature, and disqualifying persons having unsettled accounts with, or being indebted to, the United States from being members of the National Legislature.

The objection that both Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Wilson made to a provision as to qualifications was made at that time. It was reported finally by the committee of detail, and when it was reported by the committee of detail it read as follows:

Every member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years at least; shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.

Now, I state to the House that after the report of that committee of detail, no man raised his voice in the Federal Convention to object to that clause in any way, and the records bear me out. What, then, becomes of this suggestion, based upon an erroneous statement of facts, that the clause as to qualifications was changed from affirmative to negative to meet the objections of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Dickinson to this clause, in the report of the committee of detail, when neither of them made any objection to it in that report?

The whole case, of the right to add qualifications is based upon the fact that such qualifications as are prescribed are negatively expressed. The juxtaposition of the affirmative and negative clauses, it is said, has some significance. It does not appear that any of the court's, elementary writers, or lawyers, that have had occasion to insist upon this, have ever availed themselves of the debates in the Federal Convention, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the framers of the Constitution. While this precaution has not hitherto been observed, common fairness and a due regard for a thorough investigation, require that these great men, whose handiwork has so well withstood the assaults of time, should now, and upon this important question, be allowed to speak for themselves. An inquiry as to the origin of this clause will not only be interesting and instructive, but possibly determining. This course is stated by Cooley to be proper. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 80.)

And Story, in his great work on the Constitution, makes constant use of the debates in the Federal Convention.

In the report of the committee of detail giving the first draft of the Constitution, August 6, 1787 (Madison Papers, etc., volume 5, page 576), the paragraph in question appears as an independent section—i. e., section 2, Article IV—and reads:

SEC. 2. Every member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of twenty-five years at least, shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.

It is significant that this section is affirmative, and is therefore exclusive, as is conceded, in its character. It is important to inquire whether the change in phraseology was made for the purpose of changing its legal effect. That it was understood by the framers of the Constitution to be exclusive will, I think, clearly appear. The first consideration which indicates this is the incorporation in the same draft of the Constitution of section 2 of Article VI, which reads:

SEC. 2. The Legislature of the United States shall have authority to establish such uniform qualifications of the members of each House with regard to property as to the said Legislature shall seem expedient.

The inference that the framers of this draft must have understood that section 2 of Article IV was exclusive, and that in order that the Legislature might have any power at all over qualifications it was necessary to confer it by a later and specific provision, is necessary and obvious. The debates confirm this idea.

Madison opposed the proposed section 2, Article VI—

As vesting an improper and dangerous power in the Legislature. The qualifications of elector and elected were fundamental articles in a republican government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution. If the Legislature could regulate those of either it can by degrees subvert the Constitution.

A republic may be converted into an aristocracy or oligarchy as well by limiting the number capable of being elected as the number authorized to elect. In all cases where the representatives of the people will have a personal interest distinct from that of their constituents, there was the same reason for being jealous of them as there was for relying upon them with full confidence when they had a common interest. This was one of the former cases.

Gouverneur Morris moved to strike out "with regard to property," in order, as he said, "to leave the Legislature entirely at large"—precisely what is now claimed without any such constitutional provision. This was objected to by Mr. Williamson on the ground that should—

A majority of the Legislature be composed of any particular description of men—lawyers, for example, which is no improbable supposition—the future elections might be secured to their own body.

Mr. Madison further observed that "the British Parliament possessed the power of regulating the qualifications both of the electors and the elected, and the abuse they had made of it was a lesson worthy of our attention. They had made changes in both cases subservient to their own views of political or religious parties." (Madison Papers, etc., page 404.)

This article was not agreed to.

Note the significance and primal importance of Mr. Madison's assertion that "the qualifications of electors and elected were fundamental articles in a republican government and ought to be fixed by the Constitution," as otherwise the Legislature might "subvert the Constitution."

What did the House of Commons say in 1782? They said that the attempt on the part of the House of Commons, in violation of the law of the land, to add a qualification was "subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this Kingdom." It is not surprising that James Madison, with a knowledge of these facts in his mind, saw that exclusive regulation of qualifications by the Constitution, was vital.

His insistence upon these reasons, prevented the adoption of the provision that only conferred this power upon the legislature in one particular, and the convention thus evidently adopted his views as to the exclusiveness of the provisions of Article IV, section 2.

Again, when the original proposition, which resulted in Article IV, section 2, was under discussion prior to the draft reported by the committee of detail, Mr. Dickinson opposed the section altogether, expressly because it would be held exclusive, saying he—

Was against any recitals of qualifications in the Constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the Legislature from supplying omission. (Ibid., page 371.)

Mr. Wilson took the same view, saying, "Besides, a partial enumeration of cases will disable the Legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters." (Ibid., page 373.)

When this section in the draft was under discussion, after "three" had been stricken out and "seven" inserted as to citizenship, Alexander Hamilton moved "that the section be so altered as to require merely citizenship and inhabitancy," and suggested that "the right of determining the rule of naturalization will then leave a discretion to the Legislature on the subject which will answer every purpose." (Ibid., page 411.)

Here it is clear that, as Hamilton construed this provision, without this latitude as to naturalization, the Legislature had no discretion or power. From the affirmative language of this provision, then, as it stood in the report of the committee of detail, and the understanding of the framers of the Constitution, it is clear that it was exclusive. This section was not changed to the negative form by amendment, or as the result of any debate. In its affirmative form, with other sections that had been finally acted upon, and their construction and terms definitely settled, it was referred to a committee "to revise the style of and arrange the articles which had been agreed to by the House," and this committee consisted, among others, of Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Gouverneur Morris, and Mr. Madison. (Ibid., page 530.)

This committee had no power to make any change in the legal effect of any of the clauses submitted to them. They were simply "to revise the style of and arrange." Certainly, with his very pronounced views, Mr. Madison would not have made a change in Article IV, section 2, that would, in his opinion, have placed it within the power of the Legislature to "subvert the Constitution."

Yet, when the committee reported the Constitution as it now stands, Article IV is rearranged so as to be included in Article I, and the original affirmative section 2 of Article IV appears in the negative form as the second independent paragraph of Article I, somewhat changed, it is true, but in no sense connected with or dependent upon the preceding paragraph, which, with an improvement in phraseology, is section 1 of Article IV of the draft. This deprives the argument sought to be derived from the juxtaposition of all significance. (Ibid., page 559.)

An examination of the finished work discloses the fact that the rearrangement and changes in phraseology by the committee were extensive. The object unquestionably was, to make the arrangement more orderly and lucid, and the language more perspicuous and felicitous. To hold that in any particular, any change was intended to be made in the legal effect, is to impeach the integrity of men whose characters are of the most illustrious in our history. To assert that they unwittingly made such changes, is a much more grievous assault upon their intelligence and ability.

Moreover, we are not left to inference as to how this clause in its present form was interpreted by the most eminent of its framers. The Federalist, as is well known, was published while the Constitution was undergoing public discussion, and while it was being ratified by the States. It had been ratified by six States only when the numbers of the Federalist hereafter referred to appeared. The author of No. 52 evidently assumes that all of the qualifications of Representatives has been "very properly considered and regulated by the convention."

He says:

The qualifications of the elected being less carefully and properly defined by the State constitutions, and being at the same time more susceptible of uniformity, have been very properly considered and regulated by the convention. A Representative of the United States must be of the age of 25 years; must have been seven years a citizen of the United States; must at the time of his election be an inhabitant of the State he is to represent, and during the time of his service must be in no office under the United States. Under these reasonable limitations, the door of this part of the Federal Government is open to merit of every description, whether native or adoptive, whether young or old, and without regard to poverty or wealth or to any particular profession of religious faith.

If the learned author had supposed that any limitations in addition that might appeal to the caprice of a legislature could be added, he would hardly have used the term "these reasonable limitations," as he evidently did, as descriptive of all of the limitations to be imposed. In No. 57 a general reference to this clause is made, which evidently proceeds upon the idea that the qualifications to be required, are stated in the Constitution. It reads:

Who are to be the objects of popular choice? Every citizen whose merit may recommend him to the esteem and confidence of the country. No qualification of wealth, of birth, of religious faith, or of civil professions is permitted to fetter the judgment or disappoint the inclination of the people.

How could he know that, unless the Constitution settled the qualifications? The authorship of these two numbers is in doubt between Madison and Hamilton. Hamilton is conceded to be the author of No. 60, and with many he authority is greater than his; and this, so far as his authority goes, settles it beyond cavil. He says:

The truth is that there is no method of securing to the rich the preference apprehended but by prescribing qualifications of property, either for those who may elect or be elected. But this forms no part of the power to be conferred upon the National Government. Its authority would be expressly restricted to the regulation of the times, the places, the manner of elections. The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution and are unalterable by the legislature. The term "legislature" is used in the Federalist as synonymous with "Congress."

This unequivocal declaration was made after the negative form was used. It is not believed that the Federalist was a determining factor in securing the ratification of the Constitution, though it was undoubtedly published for that purpose. So far, however, as this clause weighed in the public mind, as this is the only construction that appears to have been placed upon it, it may be inferred that this construction was adopted by the States which afterwards ratified.

Here is the crucible out of which the Constitution came; here the history that surrounded it, the conditions under which it was made, and the declarations of the men who framed it.

In the light of these facts it is to be deplored, that exigencies arise, which are supposed to justify a construction, in direct conflict with the intention and interpretation of those who framed and assisted in ratifying the Constitution. It seems clear that the negative form of expression has no interpretive significance, and as it affords no support for the proposition which involves the right to add qualifications, that proposition must fail with the erroneous construction upon which it is based.

The gentleman from Ohio admitted that this provision reported by the committee on detail, being positive in form, was exclusive. I would like to have some metaphysical, hypercritical member give this House the distinction between the expressions "at least" and "shall not have attained"—"he shall not have attained twenty-five years of age" and "at least twenty-five years of age." Why is "at least" any more pregnant with the idea of exclusiveness than "shall not have attained"—"shall not have attained" twenty-five years; in other words, must be "at least" twenty-five? Why are they not in essence synonymous?

This is the whole proposition upon which these gentlemen rest their case, that they can add, not only in legislation by Congress, but by the act of this House alone, a disqualification that is not mentioned in the Constitution. Let them stand here—some member with an analytical mind—and explain the distinction between the words "shall not have attained" and "at least." It may be substantial, but I do not believe they will attempt it.

Sound reason does not sustain this claimed right. If the construction contended for is admitted, it must be conceded that the power of adding qualifications is unlimited, as there is nothing in the Constitution which circumscribes it. The suggestion in Barker vs. People (3 Cowen, 636) that the only power to add is in case of a conviction of crime is purely arbitrary and gratuitous, and absolutely no constitutional authority is given therefor.

The rigid confinement by the court of the right to break away from the Constitution, to a conviction for crime, must have been in the nature of expiation, a satisfying of the judicial conscience for the departure thus made from the Constitution. If the power exists, it must be unlimited; and therefore, while you can not take from, or narrow, the first two specified elements, you have unlimited power to add to them. For instance, unless a man is at least twenty-five years of age he is not eligible; therefore the Constitution does not undertake to say that a greater age may not be required. In fact, the necessary inference is, that only the minimum limit as to age has been established and the Legislature has unlimited power to add to that qualification, and hence may require all Representatives to be fifty years of age. The same course could be pursued with reference to the seven years' citizenship clause; you can not act within the domain to which the Constitution has confined itself. Outside of it you can do anything.

But we do not stop here. If this provision in the Constitution which is now under discussion is not exclusive, why is it that in 1866, the American Congress, by reason of an experience through which it had recently been—why is it that the American Congress saw fit to propound an amendment to this Constitution, adding a qualification? Why observe the solemn form of submitting it to the States for ratification?

I submit this to the common sense of the House. Was that act of the American Congress, when ratified by the requisite number of States, a solemn farce, a vain ceremony, or was it necessary to amend the Constitution in order to exclude men who were there denominated as traitors? Such men had been excluded, were being then excluded, but why amend the Constitution if this tremendous power exists, existed then, this "general-welfare" power to do anything and everything under heaven that this body happens to want to do, when it meets a man it does not like, and sees fit to read a disqualification into the Constitution and exclude him? Why pass the fourteenth amendment? I read section 3:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof.

Was it necessary to adopt that amendment to the Constitution? If it was not necessary, why was it done? I say if this great power existed, could not this House invoke it in the case of the application of a traitor to be admitted within its walls, as my friend here suggests, without a Constitutional amendment?

The House and Senate had both exercised the power to exclude traitors without an amendment to the Constitution in great emergencies. Does not the fact that this amendment grew out of that crisis, demonstrate that both the House and Senate knew that their action in thus excluding, was unauthorized by the Constitution?

Let me suggest another consideration to my friends. Here is this fourteenth amendment, that limits the disqualification to persons who have taken an oath, only those. There were a great many traitors at one time in this country who had never taken an "oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States." What about that vast body? When there is a constitutional provision limiting the disqualification to those who had taken such "oath," would this committee and this House hold that they could go further, and exclude any and every traitor, irrespective of his having taken the oath? Why, they say they can now. Here is a clause in this Constitution that provides for the method to be adopted when a man who is disloyal stands at the door and knocks.

And what does the chairman of this committee say? What does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] say? He says the member from Utah, Mr. Roberts, is "disloyal." Well, if he is disloyal, does he not come under the fourteenth amendment? Has this House, in the plentitude of its power, or rather in the plentitude of its determination, the power and the right to do anything that it sees fit, under any circumstances, when this constitutional amendment confines the right to exclude, to a man who has taken such oath? And there is no pretense that the gentleman from Utah has taken an oath, and there were thousands and thousands of traitors who never have taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Let me see, has something been said about the sacredness of the Constitution? The minority of your committee stand here to say, that they take the Constitution as it reads, and stand for its interpretation upon reasonable, logical, common-sense principles.

M'CULLOCH VS. MARYLAND.

The case of McCulloch against Maryland (4 Wheat., 416) is, on the part of the gentleman from Ohio, said to have very great significance in construing this provision of the Constitution; and as I remember, when he made his speech to the House on the second day of the session, he said he shuddered to think what Judge Marshall would have said, if some one had suggested that you can not add to this provision of the Constitution relating to qualifications. If the gentleman had taken a little pains, and read the opinion through, he would have found that Chief Justice Marshall was discussing a section of the Constitution (section 8, Article I), which confers various powers upon Congress. That section concludes with this provision:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

That is the section of the Constitution that Chief Justice Marshall was discussing—in relation to the powers vested in Congress, and the right to execute those powers and carry them into effect.

Purely as a dictum, made by way of illustration, when discussing the powers reasonably to be implied from the concise and general provisions of this section, necessary, appropriate, and plainly adapted to effectuate its purposes, he said that—

He would be charged with insanity who should contend that the legislature might not superadd to the oath directed by the Constitution, such other oath of office as its wisdom might suggest.

This does not impress me as entitled to much weight in construing a provision of the Constitution, which the court was not considering, and to which the doctrine "that a government intrusted with such ample powers, on the due execution of which the happiness and prosperity of the nation so vitally depends, must also be intrusted with ample means for their execution," can have little, if any, application.

Now, the gentleman in effect says, that the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in McCullough against Maryland is to be used in construing every provision of the Constitution. If this be true, the annotator of the Constitution should have repeated that citation under every section, instead of placing it only under those which related to the powers conferred on Congress by section 8, article 1. If the gentleman from Ohio could see the awful shade of Chief Justice Marshall, when he first learned that the language he had used, a dictum, by way of illustration, in respect to the construction of section 8, was to be applied to this section of the Constitution under discussion, the gentleman from Ohio would shudder before he had time to think. [Laughter.]

TEST OATH AS A QUALIFICATION.

It is suggested that the existence of the clause "but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States," which is found in Article VI of the Constitution, in a paragraph relating wholly to oaths, has a direct tendency to show that the previous paragraph in Article I, section 2, prescribing qualifications, was not intended to be exclusive, inasmuch as this paragraph in Article VI is said to add a qualification, which is entirely inconsistent with the idea, that the prior paragraph was exclusive. Reflection, however, leads me to the conclusion that this paragraph in Article VI has no proper connection with, or relation to, the paragraph in Article I, section 2. I think the word "qualification" in connection with "religious test," is used in an entirely different sense from that in which the word "qualification" is used in Article I, section 5. It is clearly applied to and is a description of the "religious test," and must be construed in connection with that phrase, no "religious test * * * as a qualification." The clause is found in a paragraph which relates solely to the oath to be administered.

Qualification, when used in discussing the elements which a member-elect must possess in order to be entitled to enter upon the office, is synonymous with eligibility. This is substantially the definition of legal lexicographers—Bouvier, Rapalje, and Anderson. This "test oath" came from the common law. It is clearly defined in Rogers against Buffalo, 123 N. Y., pages 189–190.

Most, if not all, of the provisions of the Federal and State constitutions, which are of the nature of a bill of rights, were placed therein with reference to English history and the struggles for liberty, which such history recorded. Declarations, oaths, and tests as a condition for holding office had been frequently resorted to by the Parliament of Great Britain for the purpose of promoting the prosperity or one religion or insuring the downfall of another

And, after referring to several histories—

It can not be doubted that the facts mentioned in them were present to the minds of the framers of our original Constitution, from which this provision is extracted. They meant that no such oaths, declarations, or tests as above described, nor any other of like nature, should be ordained as a condition for the holding of any public office. The Federal Constitution has declared that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." That provision was undoubtedly inserted for the same reasons which led to the insertion of the somewhat similar one of our State constitution, and now under discussion. Attorney-General vs. Detroit Common Council (58 Mich., 217); Anderson's Dictionary of Law, "Test;" "Test act;" "Test oath."

The English test acts (25 Geo. II, c. 2) required persons holding office within six months after appointment to take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England. The qualification of a "religious test" thus prohibited relates clearly to something "required" to be done by an officer when entering upon, or after having entered upon the office, and not to qualifications or elements of eligibility which he must possess, or disqualifications, or elements of ineligibility, which he must not possess, before he can enter upon the office. Qualification or disqualification, eligibility or ineligibility, is a status that either does, or does not, exist at the time of entering upon the office. The qualification of a religious test has no existence as a status; it is not a status, it is simply a condition to be performed. No member can change his status as to the elements of eligibility, or qualification as defined in Article I, section 2, at the time of entering upon the office; but if the qualification of a religious test existed, every member could, if his conscience were sufficiently elastic, comply with the test. One is predicated upon the past, the other upon the future. One relates to things done, or not done; the other to things to be done.

After the rendition of a judgment of the House holding that a member-elect possesses the qualification to entitle him to take the oath, and only then, could the "test oath as a qualification" be applied.

An examination of the constitutional history of this clause fully corroborates this view. The last paragraph of Article VI, with the exception of the clause as to the test oath and the word "affirmation" (which was added by amendment), is substantially Article XX of the first draft of the Constitution as reported by the committee of detail August 6, 1787. (The Madison Papers, containing debates on the Confederation and Constitution, volume 5, 381; Elliot's Debates.)

The clause in question first appears in the proceedings August

20, 1787, and was introduced by Mr. Pinckney as an independent proposition to be referred to the committee of detail, and then read:

No religious test or qualification shall ever be annexed to any oath of office under the authority of the United States. (Ibid., 446.)

That the word "qualification" as here used related to the oath, and to nothing else, is too clear for argument, and that it was not used in the sense in which it was used in Article I, section 5, is likewise clear. This conclusion is emphasized by the fact heretofore noted, that it was at one time proposed, by an independent constitutional provision, to confer upon the legislature express authority to add one qualification. The effort failed, and it is hardly to be supposed that they would do indirectly by this clause, what they had directly decided, not to do. Later, when Article XX was being considered, Mr. Pinckney moved as an amendment to the article, his original proposition in precisely the language in which it now appears in the Constitution. (Ibid., 498.)

There is nothing in the proceedings to indicate that by a change in the phraseology he intended any change in its meaning. The selection by him for amendment, of the clause as to the oath, and not that relating to the qualification, is in harmony with this view.

For these reasons it seems to me that the clause relating to religious tests can serve no legitimate purpose in enlarging that prescribing the elements of eligibility.

AUTHORITIES.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the authorities relied upon by the majority in support of the right to add qualifications to the Constitution. I read now from the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, delivered in this House on the second day of the session, when he was proposing to halt the gentleman from Utah at the bar of the House.

Our State courts in many instances have construed exactly similar provisions.

I will read now from the report which the majority of the committee make to the House:

The courts of several of the States in construing analogous provisions have with practical unanimity declared against any such narrow construction of the Constitution.

The House was informed, and I presume in all candor, that there were "many instances in the courts of this country where they had construed similar provisions." It dwindles down now to "several States" with "practical unanimity;" and as there are just two, that makes "several States," and as it is a fact, that those two agree, we have "practical unanimity." All of the cases now relied on were mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio in his first speech, but, I submit, with the air that they were simply a sample, of the great array of cases to follow.

They rely upon Rogers against Buffalo. I want to say to the members of the House that I think the gentleman from Ohio was inadvertently led—mark you, I do not say that he intentionally stated—into a stronger statement of the law than this authority will justify. The gentleman from Ohio said, that the supreme court of the State of New York in the case of Rogers against Buffalo, in an opinion drawn by Mr. Justice Peckham, who "now adorns the bench of the Supreme Court"—and, by the way, have you noticed that any judge, or elementary author who, tends to sustain the position of my friends of the majority either adorns the bench, or is a distinguished jurist or an eminent man?—The gentleman from Ohio says Justice Peckham held—that a provision of the constitution of New York declaring certain qualifications for office was not exclusive and did not bar the legislature from imposing new, reasonable, and proper qualifications.

I am obliged to question the accuracy of that assertion. If the gentleman from Ohio had read the opinion of the court in Rogers against Buffalo with diligence enough to find in it anything but the obiter dicta that suited his own use, he would have discovered that when Justice Peckham wrote the opinion there were no provisions in the constitution of New York that prescribed qualifications. I read from the opinion.

Here is the first proposition:

This last provision, preventing the formation of a civil-service board of commissioners from one political party is cited as a violation of Article I, section 1, of our constitution, which declares that "no member of this State shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof unless by the law of the land or judgment of his peers." (Page 181.)

Are there any qualifications prescribed in that?

Here is the next one:

The provision is also claimed to be a violation of section 6, Article I, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. (Page 181.)

Is there any qualification prescribed in that?

The next proposition reads:

Still another ground of invalidity is alleged by the appellant. He says that the statute conflicts with Article 12, which provides for taking of an oath of office by members of the legislature and all officers, executive and judicial, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, which oath is therein set forth, and it is then stated that as a qualification "no other oath, declaration, or test shall be required as a qualification for any office of public trust" (pp. 187, 188).

I have already shown that Judge Peckham has determined that an oath or test was not a qualification. It was a test and an oath. Is there any qualification in that? And those are all the provisions of the constitution of the State of New York that were being construed by the court in that case.

So I submit the original suggestion by my friend from Ohio in regard to that case, when he says that Justice Peckham "held that a provision of the constitution declaring certain qualifications for office was not exclusive and did not bar the legislature from imposing new reasonable and proper qualifications," can not be sustained for a moment.

I read a little further to show what he did hold in that case. Not only was there no provision in the constitution of New York prescribing qualifications, which were being considered by Judge Peckham, but Judge Peckham in that opinion several times said that he did not decide it on any such ground. He says:

The appellant bases his argument upon the proposition that every citizen has a right, which is protected by the constitution, to be regarded as eligible to hold any office, unless the constitution has itself prescribed certain qualifications for such holding—

The opinion discloses the fact that no such qualifications were prescribed in the Constitution—

He then asserts that the statute in question violates this constitutional right. It is not necessary, in the view we take of this statute, to decide upon the correctness of the claim as to the eligibility of the citizen to hold office as made by the appellant under the provisions of the Constitution. We will simply, for the purpose of this discussion, assume it to be correct. (Page 182.)

Again—

But, in our judgment, legislation which creates a board of commissioners consisting of two or more persons, and which provides that not more than a certain proportion of the whole number of commissioners shall be taken from one party, does not amount to an arbitrary exclusion from office, nor to a general regulation requiring qualifications not mentioned in the Constitution.

In the light of these facts, what justification is there for the confident assertion that Mr. Justice Peckham sustains the majority contention? As to decided cases, they rest solely upon Ohio and Colorado instead of "our State courts in many instances."

In Ohio vs. Covington (29 Ohio St., 102) the court were passing upon the right of the defendants to hold the offices of police commissioner and member of the board of health for the city of Cincinnati. The constitution provided that—

No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this State unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.

The court distinctly held that—

The defendants, as members of the board of police commissioners, * * * are officers for whose election and appointment no provision is made in the constitution of the State or of the United States—

And were therefore such as the legislature had, by the express provisions of the constitution, authority to create. When the legislature created the offices in question it attached to them the condition that each officer should be—

A resident citizen for three years of the city in which he shall be appointed, and able to read and write the English language.

The offices in question were creatures of the statute and not of the constitution. It is familiar law that whatever office the legislature creates it can create with such conditions, limitations, qualifications, and restrictions as it sees fit to impose, and this was all that it was necessary for the court to say in that case, in upholding the validity of the statute. It is true, that it did go further than that, further than the case required, and held that no implication arose, from the negative language of the constitution, that other qualifications could not be added by the legislature. In so far, however, as the opinion goes beyond the requirements of the case, it is certainly doubtful authority. It should be stated that this case has been fully approved in the recent case of Mason vs. State (58 Ohio St., 54).

The case of Darrow vs. People (8 Colo., 420) relied on is also subject to the same criticism as State vs. Covington, as the office there considered was that of alderman, the creature of the statute.

That is all there is left of the "many instances in the courts of this country" which they claimed sustained, this proposition.

ELEMENTARY AUTHORS.

I examine briefly the elementary writers relied upon. They rely upon Burgess upon Political Science and Constitutional Law. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] says that I suggested that Mr. Burgess was not entitled to any consideration as an authority. I do not remember ever having made any reflection upon the distinguished gentleman who writes, what the distinguished gentlemen of the majority suggest, is "a very ambitious work." Certainly the minority views contain no such reflection. The majority say, it "must be considered an authority on the subject of constitutional law."

I do note the fact, that Mr. Burgess, in his work on Political Science and Constitutional Law, cites no authority for the very loose propositions that he lays down in an ex cathedra manner.

I waste no time on Throop on Public Officers. He suggests no authority to sustain his text that relates to, or is in any way connected with, the construction of any provision in the Constitution. Any member of the bar can examine the work and see whether or not my suggestion is correct.

Pomeroy suggests the extraordinary proposition that Congress can not, but that one House can, add qualifications. He does not, however, state it to be the law, but says he is "strongly of the opinion," etc. If you will read what he says the House does under this power, you will be in doubt as to what he did think on the element of qualifications.

Now, I wish to call attention to what Mr. Justice Miller says, and I think I can rely upon what Mr. Justice Miller says, because I find in the report of the majority this splendid and significant certificate of Justice Miller's character. The majority say: "If a profound constitutional authority like Justice Miller had believed, etc." Now, what did Justice Miller say? He said:

Though it might be conceivable that Congress—

Not the House of Representatives, not the Senate, but "that Congress"— might make some conditions or limitations concerning the eligibility—

Now we are finding out from "profound constitutional authority" what qualifications mean—the eligibility of its members, it has not been done and the constitutional qualifications alone regulate that subject.—Miller on the Constitution, page 191.

Mark that language!

He was a "profound constitutional authority," and every lawyer in this presence recognizes it, and reveres the memory of that magnificent jurist. He says "it has not been done and the constitutional qualifications alone regulate that subject." I submit to the industry, and skill, and care, of the gentlemen on the part of the majority, that it might have been well for them to have examined the chronology of that statement, before they cited it as an authority before the House, on the proposition that this act of 1882, known as the Edmunds law, excluded the gentleman from Utah.

When was this lecture of this distinguished jurist delivered, in which he says "it has not been done and the constitutional qualifications alone regulate that subject?" That lecture was delivered in 1889 and 1890. This statute that they now claim is a disqualification was enacted in 1882. It can not be said that Justice Miller did not know that there was any such legislation, because the great Ramsay case (114 U. S.), which defines the status of polygamists or persons unlawfully cohabiting, was announced in 1884, two years after this act was passed, and five years before Justice Miller said that "conditions or limitations" had not been added. Justice Miller took part in that decision as a member of the United States Supreme Court.

There is your authority. There is the judge, who says, concerning the elements of eligibility, "It might be conceivable that Congress might make some conditions and limitations," but who also says:

It has not been done, and the constitutional qualifications alone regulate that subject.

An "it might be conceivable" is hardly the foundation for a change in the Constitution. However, if Justice Miller is an authority, and if he knew enough at that time to state the law as it was, there is nothing for our friends to stand upon in relation to this Edmunds Act. They can come back to their "general-welfare" proposition—that is, they have found something that they do not like in some man; hence ineligibility. It is one thing today; it may be another thing to-morrow; but they have found what they want for this case; they now declare it, and they now propose to impose it.

That is all I have to say about the authorities relied upon by the majority. Only two State courts and only three writers, Burgess, Throop, and Pomeroy—Pomeroy, in fact, does not state it, because he states an entirely different proposition—only these can be relied upon. I leave out Cushing, as he writes on both sides. We present to the House, on the other hand, every case we have been able to find in the courts. In the case of People vs. May (3 Mich., 598).

The court said:

We concede to the fullest extent that it is not in the power of the judiciary or even the legislature to establish arbitrary exclusions from office or annex qualifications thereto when the constitution has not established such exclusions nor annexed such qualifications. But it is begging the question to assume that the act of construing the constitution has that effect (610).

In Thomas vs. Owens (4 Maryland, 223) the court said:

Where a constitution defines the qualifications of an officer, it is not within the power of the legislature to change or superadd to it, unless the power be expressly or by necessary implication given to it.

And in Page vs. Hardin (8 Ben. Mon., 661) the court said:

We think it entirely clear that so far as residence is to be regarded as a qualification for receiving or retaining office, the constitutional provision on the subject covers the whole ground, and is a denial of power to the legislature to impose greater restrictions.

In Black vs. Trover (79 Va., 125) the court also said:

Now, it is a well-established rule of construction, as laid down by an eminent writer, that when the constitution defines the qualifications for office, the specification is an implied prohibition against legislative interference to change or add to the qualifications thus defined.

I call attention right here and now to the suggestion that Mr. Justice Story is the first man upon whom we rely, and what our friends of the majority say about Judge Story? Judge Story happens in this instance to state the law flatly, squarely, and distinctly, contrary to the contention of the majority. What do they say? "First, that it is dismissed in a very few words." They say, "Justice Story himself disclaims explicitly in his works that he gave his own opinion as to what the Constitution means, but asserts that he undertakes merely to give the statements of others." Here, in this year of our Lord 1900, in this debate, the profession and the courts are advised, that this great commentator on the Constitution, Justice Story, did not write a commentary upon that instrument, but simply narrated what somebody else said or simply what some other man thought. He is the Boswell of the Constitution [laughter] and no longer an authority.

Well, now, I submit for the consideration of my distinguished friend, that this is in the nature of a revelation to the courts, and the profession in the United States. I had occasion while I was investigating this question, upon an allied proposition, to examine the opinion of the court carefully, in Kilbourne against Thompson, that case to which I have already alluded as establishing the constitutional limitations of this House in the exercise of its power to commit for contempt, and I noticed that the counsel in his brief cited to the court twelve instances where this great, powerful body had, in the plenitude of its mighty power, committed for contempt. And I noticed that the counsel on the other side cited one Story, "the Boswell of the Constitution."

I also noticed, that when the justice of the Supreme Court came to write his opinion, he did not even so much as allude to the alleged precedents of this great body; but, being neither oppressed, or impressed, by this new hallucination as to Mr. Story, inadvertently referred to him in terms of respect as an authority. [Applause and laughter.] I do not imagine it is necessary for me, an humble member of the legal profession, to stand here to defend the memory of that distinguished man. May I submit for the consideration of the majority that long after all of us who shall take part in this debate, in our weak and feeble way, shall have been covered by the protecting mantle of oblivion, the magnificent intellect of Judge Story will continue to illumine the jurisprudence of this, and other lands? [Applause.]

They quote what Mr. Bingham said about Mr. Story. I submit it is hardly a proper attack, at the hands of men who wish to establish in a disinterested manner, a proposition. John A. Bingham, of Ohio, if I remember aright—a gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] It seems a good many things come from Ohio. This legal criticism of Justice Story seems to have originated in Ohio. This is from a speech of John A. Bingham, of Ohio. Speaking of Mr. Justice Story, he says:

Gentlemen in this connection have referred to Story. I do not propose to read at any great length from him. I am not unmindful of the fact that this lamented man, so full of learning, often crowded into his pages so much of the text of others with whose writings he was familiar that a doubt often arises as to his true and certain meaning.

"This lamented man," how painful. Here seems to be the origin of this proposition, in Ohio [laughter], and when it was first started in Ohio, the objection was that Judge Story would narrate what other great men had said, and you could not tell on that account where Judge Story undertook to say anything himself. The idea is now improved, and the objection is that he never gives his own opinion, simply narrates what other people said, and is therefore unquestionably, the Boswell of the Constitution.

Let me read what Justice Story said on the provision under discussion, and let the House say whether in the language used he is undertaking to repeat what any other men have said. He was discussing this very provision. He says:

It would seem but fair reasoning upon the plainest principles of interpretation, that when the Constitution established certain qualifications as necessary for office—

Now mark!

it meant to exclude all others as prerequisites. From the very nature of such a provision the affirmation of these qualifications would seem to imply a negative of all others.—Story on the Constitution, section 625.

Who said that? Is that the report of what somebody else said, of some constitutional sewing circle, or is that the sound learning of Justice Story? This was the utterance of a great lawyer, and no man ever was a great lawyer who undertook to claim for himself all knowledge and information and speak in a dogmatic, autocratic manner on a legal proposition. It may be that Judge Story had read what Madison had said; it may be he had read what Hamilton had said, because his significant language is in perfect harmony with what they did say. Attention has already been called to what they did say.

Again Justice Story says:

But as the qualification of members were thought to be less carefully defined by the State constitutions, and more susceptible of uniformity than those of the electors, the subject was thought proper for regulation by the convention.

It is observable that the positive qualifications are few and simple. They respect only age, citizenship, and inhabitancy. (Ibid., section 616.)

In another part of his great work Judge Story discusses negative expressions and the weight to be given them in interpreting the Constitution. The same Story that lays down those principles as to negative expressions, and bearing them in mind, makes the positive declarations about the specific provision of the Constitution under discussion, just quoted. He declares that though negatively stated, they are "positive qualifications." What, then, from the history of the Constitution and the opinion of this commentator becomes of this ignis fatuus of a negative form of expression? The majority, however, still insist upon it. Is not their position well illustrated by the distich from the reader?

Amidst the mists
He thrusts his fists
Against the posts,
And still insists
He sees the ghosts.

[Laughter.]

I wish in passing to read, for the information of the House, the modest declaration in the preface of Story's works, upon which I suppose my distinguished friend determined, after having learned that John A. Bingham had ventured upon that ground, that he would eliminate Judge Story as a legal author. [Laughter.]

My object will be sufficiently attained if I shall have succeeded in bringing before the reader the true view of its powers, maintained by its founders and friends and confirmed and illustrated by the actual practice of the Government. The expositions to be found in the work are less to be regarded as my own opinions than as those of the great minds which framed the Constitution or which have been found from time to time called upon to administer it. Upon subjects of government it has always appeared to me that metaphysical refinements are out of place.

I commend this closing sentence to my friends:

Metaphysical refinements are out of place.

The minority of your committee stand upon this provision of the Constitution precisely with Judge Story. They read it as it stands, plain and simple, clear and direct, as the fathers made and understood it, unimpaired by metaphysical refinement, furnishing a constitutional bulwark to the right, for which every true patriot would not only undergo imprisonment, but render up life itself. We say that a right so precious can not rightfully be frittered away by any "general-welfare" construction of this provision of the Constitution.

Cooley certainly stands next in authority to Story, and he says:

Another rule of construction is that where the Constitution defines the circumstances under which a right may be exercised, or a penalty imposed, the specification is an implied prohibition against legislative interference, to add to the condition, or to extend the penalty to other cases. On this ground it has been held by the supreme court of Maryland, that, where the Constitution defined the qualifications of an officer, it was not in the power of the legislature to change or superadd to them, unless the power to do was expressly or by necessary implication conferred by the Constitution. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 73.)

Cushing, as against his former statement, says:

The Constitution of the United States having prescribed the qualifications required of Representatives in Congress, the principal of which is inhabitancy within the State in which they shall be respectively chosen, leaving it to the States only to prescribe the time, place, and manner of holding the election, it is a general principle that neither Congress nor the States can impose any additional qualifications. It has therefore been held, in the first place, that it is not competent for Congress to prescribe any further qualifications, or to pass any law which shall operate as such. (Cushing on Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, second edition, p. 27, sec. 75.)

John Randolph Tucker, one of the latest writers on the Constitution, is explicit on this point:

Nor can the Congress nor the House change these qualifications. To the latter no such power was delegated, and the assumption of it would be dangerous, as invading a right which belonged to the constituent body, and not to the body of which the Representative of such constituency was a member—Tucker on the Constitution, 394.

The principle that each House has the right to impose a qualification upon its membership which is not prescribed in the Constitution, if established, might be of great danger to the Republic. It was on this excuse that the French Directory procured an annulment of elections to the Council of Five Hundred, and thus maintained themselves in power against the will of the people, who gladly accepted the despotism of Napoleon as a relief.—Foster on the Constitution, page 367.)

It is a fair presumption that where the Constitution prescribed the qualifications it intended to exclude all others.—Paschal's Annotated Constitution, second edition, page 305, section 300.

When the Constitution prescribed the qualifications for an office, the Legislature can not add others not therein prescribed.—McCrary on Elections, section 312.

McCrary also takes the ground that statutory and constitutional provisions making ineligible to office any person who has been guilty of crime presuppose a conviction before the ineligibility attaches. (Ibid., page 345.)

Paine, in his work on elections, takes the same view (pages 104–108).

Upon this great proposition as to whether or not it is legitimate upon the part of this House, by its own unaided action, to thus change and make uncertain that which should be certain a fundamental law, I wish to invoke the authority—though not precisely in point, still significant—of the immortal Webster, the defender and expounder of the Constitution.

His language is striking and bears upon the general proposition as to the propriety of any majority of this House undertaking to amend, and supplement, the Constitution. He says, in discussing a similar question, fundamental in our system:

Suffrage is the delegation of the power of an individual to some agent.

This being so, then follow two other great principles of the American system:

1. The first is that the right of suffrage shall be guarded, protected, and secured against force and against fraud; and

2. The second is that its exercise shall be prescribed by previous law: its qualifications shall be prescribed by previous law; the time and place of its exercise shall be prescribed by previous law; the manner of its exercise, under whose supervision (always sworn officers of the law), is to be prescribed. In the exercise of political power through representatives we know nothing, we never have known anything, but such an exercise as should take place through the prescribed forms of law: when we depart from that we shall wander as widely from the American track as the pole is from the track of the sun.

I have said that it is one principle of the American system that the people limit their governments, national and State. They do so; but it is another principle, equally true and certain, and, according to my judgment of things, equally important, that the people often limit themselves. They set bounds to their own power. They have chosen to secure the institutions which they establish against the sudden impulses of mere majorities. All our institutions trem with instances of this. It was their great conservative principle in constituting forms of government that they should secure what they had established against hasty changes by simple majorities. (Daniel Webster's Works, volume 6, page 225.)

We are not to take the will of the people from public meetings, nor from tumultuous assemblies by which the timid are terrified, the prudent are alarmed, and by which society is disturbed. These are not American modes of signifying the will of the people, and they never were. If anything in the country, not ascertained by a regular vote, by regular returns, and by regular representation, has been established, it is an exception and not the rule; it is an anomaly which, I believe, can scarcely be found. (Ibid, page 225.)

While the great Webster was not discussing this provision of the Constitution, I submit that in prophetic language he gave to this House a fundamental principle, which on its oath and its conscience it must not disregard in determining the rights of the gentleman from Utah, independent of conditions, unconstrained by desires or wishes, unaffected by majorities, undisturbed by "sudden impulses" of the people, and undeterred by influences outside or inside of this House.

Upon this great question, whether this House, under the lead of the majority of this committee, can of its own motion declare a disqualification that has not heretofore existed and impose it on the gentleman from Utah, or whether it can be done by an act of Congress, we stand, and I trust we may be pardoned if I say we take pride in standing, with Burke, the lawyer, orator, and patriot of the eighteenth century; with Wilson, Dickinson, Morris, Madison, and Hamilton, framers and interpreters of the Constitution, who have hitherto received, and will continue to receive, the universal homage and admiration of mankind for their great services in establishing constitutional liberty; the State courts of Michigan, Maryland, Kentucky, and Virginia; Webster and Story, Cooley, Tucker, Foster, Paschal, McCrary, and Paine, elementary writers, that for learning, authority, and reputation are at least unexcelled, against the State courts of Ohio and Colorado, construing a constitutional provision as applied to statutory offices; Burgess, Throop, and Pomeroy, and an "it is conceivable" of Mr. Justice Miller.

We give the House the authorities. Let it say where the weight of authority lies. Let the House say, when it comes to vote before "the country and history," whether it will stand by the authorities to which I have called your attention or with the courts of Ohio and Colorado and the three elementary writers. Before I leave this branch of the subject allow me to repeat what Mr. FOSTER says, showing the dangers that inhere in the majority proposition:

The principle that each House has the right to impose a qualification upon its membership which is not prescribed in the Constitution, if established, might be of great danger to the Republic. It was on this excuse that the French Directory procured an annulment of elections to the Council of Five Hundred, and thus maintained themselves in power against the will of the people, who gladly accepted the despotism of Napoleon as a relief.

LEGISLATIVE PRECEDENTS.

The minority of your committee say that while they concede that weight is to be given to the precedents established in this House and in the Senate, they also say that unless it shall appear to the House, on adequate information and intelligent discussion, that these precedents are founded on reason, they can not rightfully govern the action of the House in this case. Because someone else did wrong on insufficient information, on inadequate debate, is no excuse for this House at this time, under these circumstances, in pursuing a like wrong course.

I have just a word to say about the Larned case in Massachusetts. There is no statement in the report of the majority as to what the provisions of the constitution of Massachusetts were. It was prior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and in the absence of that statement the case counts for nothing upon either side.

NILES CASE.

I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] to say that a question was raised as to the exclusion of Niles, and that a resolution was adopted in the Senate for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not he was sane or insane, as an element of eligibility. I beg leave to disagree with my friend, the gentleman from Ohio. I hold in my hand the resolution, being that of the majority of the committee which reported it, and what does it say?

To inquire into the election, return, and qualification of the said John M. Niles—

And what else?

And into his capacity at this time to take the oath.

"Capacity" meant his mental capacity. It is not worth while for me to stand here and argue in the presence of lawyers that an insane man can do no valid act. If insane he could take no valid oath. And after they were instructed to inquire as to his "qualifications," they were instructed to inquire also "into his capacity;" simply whether or not mentally he was capable of taking the oath. "Capacity," as thus used, had nothing whatever to do with eligibility or qualifications.

THOMAS CASE.

The Thomas case, next alluded to, I will discuss with the Kentucky cases of a like nature, that occurred in the House.

STARK CASE.

If you have the report of the majority, you will find it on page 21. I will call the attention of the House to a few things that the majority of this committee omitted when they stated this case to the House.

I wish you to remember as I begin the analysis, the square, distinct, explicit statement of the gentleman from Ohio that "no precedent in the American Congress exists against exclusion"—that is, that there is no case where they have decided they did not have the power to exclude. That is his explicit statement in his speech this afternoon in the House. (Since revised, the gentleman probably meaning "House" instead of "American Congress.")

What was the Benjamin Stark case? Benjamin Stark was a Senator from the State of Oregon who was charged with disloyalty. In the majority report they have quoted quite a lengthy suggestion from Mr. Trumbull, who was a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Trumbull discusses this "general-welfare" proposition in relation to qualifications. What does Mr. Trumbull start out with? Bear in mind that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] has just stated to this House that there was "no precedent against exclusion in the American Congress." Let me read in the Stark case from Mr. Trumbull. He says:

A preliminary question was raised in the Senate when this case was referred to the committee, whether it was competent for the Senate, for any cause, to refuse to allow a person to be sworn as a member of the Senate whose credentials were in proper form and who possessed all the qualifications as to age, citizenship, and inhabitancy prescribed by the Constitution; and whether the only remedy which the Senate had to protect itself against the presence of an infamous person, a convicted felon, or an avowed and open traitor, was not by expulsion by a two-thirds vote after he should have been sworn into office.

This is the precise question presented now. The precise question presented in the Stark case is presented here at this moment.

Again:

Many lawyers holding that when he possessed the necessary credentials and the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution, that notwithstanding the charge of disloyalty he had the right to be sworn in and the remedy was by exclusion.

Mr. Trumbull held the other way, but every other man on the Judiciary Committee held against him. Bear in mind the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] that there is "no precedent against exclusion." What did the Senate do "in the American Congress?" I think the gentleman from Ohio ought to have leave to amend his remarks. What did the Senate do in this very case? Let me read the resolution that they finally adopted under circumstances where, it is suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, this House of Representatives might make itself "supremely ridiculous" before the American people. This awful spectacle was first presented by the Senate, or rather the precedent was furnished by them. Here is the resolution:

Resolved, That Benjamin Stark, of Oregon, appointed a Senator of that State—

Now, they did not put this in their report, mind you—appointed a Senator from that State by the governor thereof, is entitled to take the constitutional oath of office without prejudice to any subsequent proceedings in the case.

The majority of the committee supported it. The charges of disloyalty were made. Ex parte affidavits were submitted as in this case. Mr. Trumbull, a minority of one, raised the same questions raised here to-day by the majority of this committee. I do not know whether he charged the Senate with being "ridiculous," as has been suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], but every other man on the Judiciary Committee supported that resolution, and that resolution was adopted by the Senate of the United States—yeas 26, nays 19.

Now, I submit, in all candor and fairness, when we are standing here upon either side of these legal propositions to disclose the truth, what becomes of the assertion of the gentleman from Ohio that there is no "precedent in the American Congress against exclusion?" What becomes of it, in view of this case and this vote on the part of the Senate? I am not through with this case yet. Let me read the names of the men who voted in the affirmative. They were:

Anthony, Browning, Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Kennedy, Latham, McDougall, Nesmith, Pearce, Powell, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Simmons, Ten Eyck, Thomson, Willey, and Wilson of Missouri.

There is the vote of the Senate, under circumstances exactly parallel to the circumstances existing before this House, except that Stark was charged with actual disloyalty, not the newly invented, theoretical, metaphysical, empirical, chimerical, fanciful "disloyalty" of the majority.

There is a further suggestion that is made upon the Stark case by the majority. They say here, on page 25:

There is absolutely no doubt whatever that if the case of disloyalty had been stronger, Stark would have been excluded.

I do not say that this is not so, though I think the assertion is rather vigorous. I am going to state the facts to the House and let the House say whether it is so. The committee say:

There is absolutely no doubt whatever that if the case of disloyalty had been stronger, Stark would have been excluded.

Let me read to you from the report of a committee of investigation returned to the Senate on April 22, he having been admitted February 27 and his case referred to the committee. The committee say:

That the Senator from Oregon is disloyal to the Government of the United States.

Does not that look as if it was reasonably strong? [Laughter.] What is the matter with that case?

That the Senator from Oregon is disloyal to the Government of the United States.

There is the precedent cited by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] for the purpose of frightening this House from acting in accordance with the fundamental law of the land, as to which he says that there is no precedent in the American Congress against the power of exclusion, when the Senate took precisely the course suggested here.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If the Senate thought he was disloyal, why did it not expel him?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The case dragged along for a long while. I have it right here. Do not fear that I am not informed about the case. I have not commented on what the Senate did. I am giving you the record in the case. The principle involved is the question. John Sherman, of Ohio, was on that committee that found he was disloyal, and that ought to settle it. [Laughter.] Now, it is true that when it came to a vote, for some reason or other the Senate of the United States did not vote to expel him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Might not the same thing occur in this case?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I am ready to meet you on that proposition, that you can frighten this House into voting for exclusion, in violation of the law, when the other course is the only one which can legitimately be pursued. I stand here upon the proposition that, so far as I am concerned, the gentleman from Utah, Mr. Roberts, shall have what I believe under all circumstances to be his constitutional right. I do not care how he is situated [applause] nor what is the result. The fact that you may not get votes enough to expel does not tend to demonstrate the existence of the legal right to exclude.

The vote in favor of expulsion did not pass in that case, and Mr. Sherman, who signed the report of the committee, holding that he was disloyal, did not even vote, either in the affirmative or in the negative. That indicates, perhaps, that some things might have occurred in connection with Mr. Stark, of Oregon, that the record does not disclose. I do not know anything about it. I give you the case exactly as it stands. I submit this in all fairness and candor. I do not complain of the inadequate report of the majority.

These records are open to us all, and it may appear to the House before I get through with this discussion, that I have taken occasion to examine some of them, in order that this House might intelligently apprehend, upon all the facts, precisely what these propositions stand upon. There is no good reason why the House should not have all the facts.

KENTUCKY AND THOMAS CASES.

First, we should take into consideration the conditions that surrounded the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States in those days of 1866, 1867, and 1868. I do not wish to stand here and closely criticise the action of either one of those bodies, for we should bear in mind that under the feeling that existed throughout the land, they believed that these men who were seeking admission to Congress, had been engaged in open rebellion and were still traitors to the United States. We must consider the fact, that these cases were determined under such circumstances. The reports of the committees and the debates show the intense feeling that existed. In the Thomas case they were passing upon the question as to the test oath in 1862. This is what Mr. Dawes said in his second report in the Kentucky cases in the House, as appears by the majority report:

After calling attention to the gravity of the situation he said that "in relation to these questions there are no precedents by which it may be guided in arriving at correct conclusions." In 1867, then, it seems from Mr. Dawes, that there were no precedents for this action now sought to be taken in this House. It may be that Mr. Dawes had not looked up these precedents, although his ability and industry were recognized as great.

I hope that no one will think for a moment that I have failed to recognize the great industry, zeal, intelligence, ability, and capacity which the gentleman from Ohio has brought to the investigation of these questions. We all know that he has rendered most valuable service. But still Mr. Dawes did not examine the precedents, if there were any earlier that could properly be relied on, the Thomas case occurring March 18, 1867, and the Kentucky case July 3, 1867. Shellaberger, in his letter, states the question upon which these cases turned. "First, may a law such as that prescribing the test oath be constitutionally passed and enforced either as to any officer or to a member of Congress?" And Mr. Dawes makes this suggestion:

Now, sir, to those of us who believe that that fourteenth article is already a part of the Constitution, there is an expressed inhibition upon this man contained in that article. I do not care to take the time of the House in discussing the question whether it is or not a part of the Constitution. I plant myself upon the Constitution without amendment.

It is apparent that some members based their action upon the test oath act of 1862, and some upon section 3, of the fourteenth amendment.

This great fact is to be borne in mind. It was in the trying times, when the Republic was reorganizing itself after a terrible and devastating war, that these precedents occurred. What else came out of that excitement under the heat and prejudice that was engendered there? The fourteenth amendment was placed in the Constitution to bar and exclude men from a seat in Congress who had been traitors, because they knew without the amendment they had no right to exclude, even a traitor. Its purpose was self-preservation. I submit at this time, in these days of peace, when there is no probability under the circumstances that exist to-day, in either North or South—brethren everywhere—of the existence of a traitor within our borders, it is hardly worth while to invoke such cases as precedents, for the exercise of this unlimited power. No exigency exists, anything like that which existed under those circumstances. [Applause.]

I desire to call attention of the House further to what seems to me a very significant fact, as bearing on the proposition as to whether or not these cases are now entitled, in cold blood, in the exercise of plain, simple reason, to weight as precedents. The test-oath act was passed in 1862. In 1865 a statute was passed making it applicable to attorneys at law. Under that section the case of Ex parte Garland (4 Wall., 333) was determined. The Supreme Court of the United States, by a majority opinion announced in 1866, held, in relation to this test oath that was proposed to be imposed upon members of Congress, upon attorneys at law, and upon any officers of the United States, as follows:

The exaction of the oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom the act is intended to operate, and instead of lessening, increases its dangerous character. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties, and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included (page 377).

A little thing like that is of no consequence, I apprehend. The Thomas and Kentucky cases were substantially based on the test-oath act of 1862. Ordinarily, after such a decision by the United States Supreme Court they would lose all force as precedents; not so now, however.

These cases have never been cited hitherto, as precedents. Before I call your attention to the remarks of General Logan in the Whittemore case, I call the attention of the House to the fact that in 1867 John A. Logan was a member of the House of Representatives, and himself, submitted one of the resolutions against swearing in certain members from Kentucky, making them stand back until their loyalty was determined.

He made on the floor of the House afterwards, at least half a dozen speeches on the same question. In 1870, when this man Whittemore, who had been guilty of selling cadetships, resigned from the House, went back to the State of South Carolina and was returned immediately, a gross insult to the American Congress, Logan, making his speech on the floor of the House insisting upon excluding Whittemore, said—what?

In reference to precedents, it is said by men whispering around that there is no precedent for the course that I desire the House shall take in this case. But if we were to copy precedents, and ask ourselves is there any precedent to be found anywhere for this conduct of ours, I say there is; and the only precedent you can find is against Mr. Whittemore. If you will take the case of Wilkes in the English Parliament—he was four times, I believe, expelled from that Parliament.

One resolution of exclusion in the Kentucky cases was adopted in 1868.

Just think of it! Logan taking part in this debate early in 1870, says:

If we were to ask ourselves, is there any precedent to be found anywhere for this conduct of ours—

He put it fairly well—

this conduct of ours, I say there is but one precedent you can find.

Mark that!

The only precedent you can find is against Mr. Whittemore, if you take the act of Wilkes, in the British Parliament, who was twice four times expelled.

Logan said in his speech, fresh from the cases of 1867 and 1868, that the Wilkes case was "the only precedent."

I submit in all soberness and seriousness, to this House that it is a far cry in 1900, thirty years afterwards, to cite as a precedent for the action of this House, a precedent that John A. Logan, himself, did not deem worthy of citation for the action of the House in 1870. It must be that Logan realized, as I think everyone realized, that the House under those trying and exciting circumstances had gone beyond the proper constitutional limitations of its power, and that a constitutional amendment was necessary in order to protect the House under similar conditions. If the Thomas and Kentucky cases, by reason of their extraordinary and exceptional character, were not worthy to be cited by Logan, has anything transpired to improve them by age? It is inconceivable that they were not fresh in the minds of all. If they were not authority then, they certainly can not be now.

WHITTEMORE CASE.

The case of Whittemore, in the Forty-first Congress, is another legislative precedent for the right to exclude. I have examined that case with care, and I feel bound to say that I do not think it entitled to any weight as a precedent. The argument upon which it was based shows the action of the House to have been unwarranted and ill advised in excluding Whittemore. The only speeches made in support of the proposition were by Mr. Logan. He does not in any way refer to the one great legal question involved, as to whether Congress, to say nothing of the House, acting alone, had the power to add to the qualifications specified in the Constitution, and that question was not raised during the debate, although at that time (1870) several State courts—one at least—had discussed it, People vs. Barker having been decided in 1824.

The House had apparently never heard that there was such a question. The only provision of the Constitution that could possibly justify the action of the House, that constituting the House the judge of the "election returns and qualifications of its own members," was not referred to directly or indirectly, and if the debate is the criterion, the House acted without any reference to it whatever. The clause stating the qualification was incidentally referred to once. Indeed, they apparently acted upon an entirely different provision, that does not relate to exclusion or determining eligibility or qualifications, and Mr. Logan distinctly based his case upon it when he says:

I base my opinion, first, upon the Constitution of the United States, which authorizes Congress to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of their members, and provides that by a two-thirds vote either House may expel any one of its members without prescribing the offenses for which either House may expel.

He then proceeded to make this gratuitous and unwarranted assumption:

This being the theory with which I start out, I then assume that where the House of Representatives has power to expel for an offense against its rules, or a violation of any law of the land, it has the same power to exclude a person from its body.

Without giving any attention to the legal distinctions involved, or even referring to the constitutional right of passing upon qualifications, or adverting to the fact that exclusion is the act of a majority and expulsion of two-thirds, he begs the whole question and assumes their identity. He quotes a statute which makes a disqualification to hold office absolutely dependent upon a conviction, and then assumes it disqualified Whittemore, although there had been no conviction. He admits there was no Congressional precedent for the action which he proposed. He cites the Wilkes case in the English Parliament as a precedent, when, as he states it, that case was directly in point against him. Wilkes, he says, was elected four successive times to the same Parliament, three times without opposition and the fourth time against an opposing candidate. Three times he was expelled. The fourth time his opponent was seated. Neither time, according to his statement, was Wilkes excluded.

Just how that case can be an authority for excluding as against expelling Whittemore we can not see. These considerations (and many more could be suggested), in view of the fact that the House, under Mr. Logan's lead, absolutely refused to allow any committee to examine, for the information of the House, the legal questions involved or to have the cases referred to any committee—though such a course was desired by such men as Poland of Vermont, Farnsworth of Illinois, and Schenck and Garfield of Ohio—and would not allow Schenck and Garfield to be heard on the law for even ten minutes each, deprive this case, in my opinion, of all weight as a precedent.

CANNON CASE.

As to that, it is only necessary to say that Cannon was a Delegate from the Territory of Utah. He was the creature of Congress and was not a constitutional member of this House. He was subject to its control, and this House undoubtedly could have fixed provisions as to his admission if it saw fit when they created the office.

It could deal with him as it saw fit, and it dealt with him in all sorts of ways, and all sorts of arguments were used. That is practically the history of the Cannon case. It is in no sense a precedent for action in case of a member of Congress. We submit that all these precedents appear to have been ill advised, ill considered, unusual, and are entitled to no controlling weight. The Stark case sustains the minority. These are the only precedents. What is there so inviolable about a precedent, that should lead this House, in violation of the law, to slavishly follow it? I do not understand that the continuous repetition of a wrongful or unlawful act, has ever by prescription, ripened into a rightful act.

I remember very well—and I have occasion to remember it, because I reflect upon it with great pride—I remember very well when the man of iron stood in the chair in this House, and in response to the order of the Republican House established a ruling, overturning the precedents of a century. He took the House of Representatives, an obstructive body, and made it an instrument to register the people's will. That ruling was not made in violation of the law, it was not made on the basis of public policy, or because expediency required the Constitution to be wrenched, nor under the "general-welfare" power, but it was made in accordance with the law of the land.

A decision in 62 New Hampshire, in 1882, had declared it, and since the ruling, the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained it. Unless precedents are based on sound legal reason they ought not to influence or control the action of this House.

MEMBERSHIP IN CONGRESS NOT AN "OFFICE UNDER THE UNITED STATES."

We submit with great confidence that there can be no question that this act of 1882 does not now, and never did, apply to the gentleman from Utah. Why? This statute we submit must be construed in connection with the conditions and circumstances under which it was enacted.

What were the conditions under which it was enacted? When it was enacted Utah was a Territory. To what did the act apply?

No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman * * * in any Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction.

It was then the Territory of Utah. Did that act, when it was passed, affect the eligibility of any member of Congress? Did it not affect the eligibility of a Delegate to Congress from a Territory, and no one else? Did it affect the eligibility of a polygamist or a person unlawfully cohabiting in Iowa, or in Maine, or New York? Was it not confined in its operation, when it was passed to Utah, and other Territories, of the United States? No man, a resident of the Territory of Utah, could become a member of Congress from elsewhere, and I submit that when that act was passed, the circumstances that surrounded it, demonstrate that it did not, and could not, apply to a member of Congress, and that it could only apply to a Territorial Delegate.

But eighteen years have now passed, and where is the act of the American Congress that has changed the enactment so as to make it apply to a member of Congress? It could not then apply to a member of Congress. How can it now? Unless a member of the House holds an office "under the United States," within the meaning of the Edmunds Act, there is no disqualification.

As to the nature of their offices, whether "under the United States" or otherwise, members of the House and Senate are evidently the same. The words "office" and "offices" occur in the Constitution and amendments twenty-three times, and the words "officer" and "officers" fifteen times, and, with the exception of perhaps two instances, these terms are never used, either directly or indirectly, as relating to, or in connection with, a Representative or Senator.

One possible exception referred to is found in Article I, section 3, and reads:

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

The term "office" in the first clause, as to "removal from office," clearly does not relate to a member of either House, as it will be seen that the provisions as to impeachment do not apply to them. It would seem that a civil officer guilty of conduct that would justify impeachment ought not to be eligible to a seat in Congress, though unless the clause "office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States" be held to include a member, he could not be disqualified thereby. Still, if a member is not the subject of impeachment, there is perhaps as much reason, in exempting him from the disqualifications of impeachment.

The other possible exception is in Article I, section 9, paragraph 8:

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state.

Standing alone, we might understand the paragraph as broad enough and comprehensive enough to include members of Congress; but taken with the other provisions of the Constitution—and they are numerous—wherein the like terms do not embrace or apply to Senators or Representatives in Congress, what support can this paragraph possibly afford to those who invoke it as an authority for adding anything whatever, to the prescribed qualifications of a Representative.

The clause in Article I, section 6, provides:

And no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Here it is very clear that "any office under the United States" can not include a member, as otherwise it would be equivalent to a provision that no member of either House shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office—an absurdity. A clause in Article II, section 1, provides:

But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Here the terms "Senator or Representative" and "person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States" are used in the alternative, or in contradistinction from each other. If they were one and the same, their separate enumeration was unnecessary. If identical, there would be no occasion to particularize "Senator or Representative."

If identical, the adjective "other" should have been used, so that the clause should read, "or person holding any other office of trust or profit under the United States," etc.

These observations apply to the following provisions:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation, etc. (Constitution, Art. VI.)

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who having previously taken an oath, etc. (XIV Amendment, sec. 3.)

Article II, section 4—"The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors"—has been construed by the only tribunal therefor known to the Constitution, the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, which held that a Senator was not a "civil officer," and therefore was not liable to impeachment. It was the case of William Blount, a Senator, who was impeached before the bar of the Senate by the House of Representatives. In his plea he claimed that as a member of the Senate he was not one of the "civil officers of the United States," and on the 11th of February, 1797, the Senate announced its conclusion, as follows:

The court is of the opinion that the matter alleged in the plea of the defendant is sufficient in law to show that this court ought not to hold jurisdiction of the said impeachment, and that said impeachment is dismissed. (Annals of Congress, volume 3, page 2319.)

Story concurs in this view. (Story on the Constitution, section 792.)

Who can be said to hold office "under the United States" was practically decided in United States vs. Germaine (99 U. S., 508-512), where the court said:

The Constitution, for purposes of appointment, very clearly divides all its officers into two classes. The primary class requires a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. But foreseeing that when officers become numerous and sudden removals necessary this mode might be inconvenient, it was provided that, in regard to officers inferior to those specially mentioned, Congress might by law vest their appointments in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment there can be but little doubt.

In United States vs. Maat (124 U. S., 303-308) the Germaine case is cited and approved, the court saying:

In that case, it was distinctly pointed out that, under the Constitution of the United States, all its officers were appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, or by a court of law, or the head of a Department.

The same principle is affirmed in United States vs. Hendee (124 U. S., 309-315).

If, then, "all its officers," "under the Constitution," are appointed in the manner above indicated, clearly a member of either House does not hold an office "under the United States," and the Edmunds Act does not apply.

The fact, if it be a fact, that there are statutes in which the expression "office under the United States" is disclosed by the context to include a member of Congress, when there is no such context in this act, and when the existing conditions expressly negative the idea, is of no probative force in construing this act of 1882. I submit upon this branch of the case that there is no question but that this act has no application whatever to the member from Utah, because an "office under the United States" does not include a member of Congress.

THE EDMUNDS ACT.

The committee quote section 8 of the Edmunds act and then say:

Reading that act as applicable to this case, eliminating the irrelevant portions, it appears as follows—

And let us see how they eliminate it—

No polygamist shall be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument under the United States.

I submit to this House whether that is the act:

No polygamist shall be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument under the United States.

Where? According to the statement of the committee, when they have eliminated all they desire—(and I am prepared to concede that if this committee can amend the Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, they have equal authority and power at least, to amend the statutes of the United States without the assistance of Congress)—[laughter] where, after their elimination, does the act apply? Anywhere, everywhere, without limit. The only place where this act can operate—"any Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction"—is "irrelevant," in the opinion of the committee. What does the act say?

No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman * * * in any Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction.

Let us have an analysis of this law as it is, not as some of us wish it was. This will show that no ineligibility can be predicated upon section 8 of the Edmunds Act, upon the facts, as they must be conceded to exist. A brief statement of the history of the legislation involved may be useful.

The Edmunds Act became a law March 22, 1882. Section 1 amended section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and defined and prohibited polygamy. Section 3 defined and prohibited unlawful cohabitation, and reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Section 8, relating to eligibility to hold office, reads:

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

The Edmunds-Tucker Act, which became a law March 3, 1887, supplemented the Edmunds law, imposed penalties for various kindred offenses, dissolved the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and contained, among other things, various provisions as to dower and the law of descent. With reference to eligibility to office it contained, among others, this paragraph, in the last part of section 24:

No person who shall have been convicted of any crime under this act, or under the act of Congress aforesaid, approved March 22, 1882, or who shall be a polygamist, or who shall associate or cohabit polygamously with persons of the other sex, shall be entitled to vote in any election in said Territory, or be capable of jury service, or hold any office or emolument in said Territory.

It will be noticed that this act applied only to "office or emolument in said Territory." It did not go as far as the similar provision in the Edmunds Act and apply to "any office under the United States."

February 4, 1892, Chapter VII of the laws of the Territory of Utah was enacted. Section 1 defined and punished polygamy substantially as did section 1 of the Edmunds Act. Section 2, relating to cohabitation, in all material parts is an exact transcript of section 3 of the Edmunds Act. There is no provision whatever in this act relating to ineligibility to office, by reason of any of these offenses. (Laws of Utah, 1892, page 5.)

The enabling act, authorizing the people of Utah to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union, became a law July 16, 1894. This act required the convention to provide by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of the State—

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

The constitution of Utah was adopted by the convention May 8, 1895, by the people November 5, 1895, and the proclamation of the President of the United States announcing the result of the election and admitting the State into the Union was issued January 4, 1896. Article III, ordinance of the constitution, contained the provision as to religious liberty and polygamous or plural marriages in the exact language of the enabling act. (R. S. Utah, 1898, page 40.)

Article XXIV, section 2, of the constitution reads as follows:

SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Utah now in force not repugnant to this constitution shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitation or are altered or repealed by the legislature. The act of the governor and the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah entitled "An act to punish polygamy and other kindred offenses," approved February 4, 1892, in so far as the same defines and imposes penalties for polygamy, is hereby declared to be in force in the State of Utah. (R. S. Utah, 1898, page 67.)

This did not give the State of Utah any law making persons ineligible to any office, by reason of polygamy or cohabitation, as no such provisions existed in the act of 1892, chapter 24, or in any of the "laws of the Territory of Utah."

Sections 4208 to 4216, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of Utah (R. S. Utah, 1898, page 899) are substantially the act of 1892. Section 2 of the act of 1892 and section 4209 of the Revised Statutes, relating to unlawful cohabitation, are precisely alike. This statute has not been changed.

The laws of the State of Utah, then, do not now impose, and never have imposed, any disqualification for holding office, by reason of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation. Mr. Roberts was a resident of the Territory of Utah, and since its organization as a State has been a resident of the State of Utah. Under these circumstances we do not think that the disqualifications imposed by the Edmunds Act have had any operation as to him since the organization of the State of Utah. It is settled by an unbroken line of decisions that all Territorial Congressional legislation, is superseded by the adoption of a State constitution, and the organization of a State.

In discussing the effect of the adoption of the constitution of Louisiana upon the laws of Congress, the court, in Permoli vs. First Municipality (3 How., 619), said:

So far as they conferred political rights, and secured civil and religious liberties (which are political rights), the laws of Congress were all superseded by the State constitution; nor is any part of them in force unless they were adopted by the constitution of Louisiana, as the laws of the State.

The case of Strader et al. vs. Graham (10 How., 94) determines the same question, and says:

The argument assumes that the six articles which that ordinance declares to be perpetual are still in force in the States since formed within the Territory, and admitted into the Union. If this proposition could be maintained, it would not alter the question. For the regulation of Congress, under the old Confederation or the present Constitution, for the government of a particular territory, could have no force beyond its limits. It certainly could not restrict the power of the States within their respective territories; nor in any manner interfere with their laws and institutions; nor give this court any control over them. The ordinance in question, if still in force, could have no more operation than the laws of Ohio in the State of Kentucky, and could not influence the decision upon the rights of the master or the slaves in the State, nor give this court jurisdiction upon the subject.

But it has been settled by judicial decision in this court, that this ordinance is not in force.

The case of Permoli vs. The First Municipality (3 How., 589), depended upon the same principles with the case before us.

The same doctrine is held in Pollard et al. vs. Hagan (3 How., 212).

It is approved by all of the court, from Chief Justice Taney to Judge Curtis, in Dred Scott vs. Sandford (19 How., 490).

It is approved in Woodman vs. Kilbourne Manufacturing Company (1 Abb. U. S., 152), opinion by Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court. Columbus Insurance Company vs. Curtenius (6 McLean, 212).

This precise question, in the application to the State of Utah of a law of Congress which was not continued in force by any legislation, has been determined in Moore vs. United States (85 Fed. Rep., 468).

The court were determining whether a law of Congress against unlawful combinations was in force in Utah, and held:

By its terms, the provision of the statute under which this indictment was found applies only to the Territories of the United States, and while it may yet be in full force within the Territories, it is clear that no prosecution could be maintained under it for entering into a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade in Utah after the date of her admission as a State. * * * When Utah became one of the States of the Union, this statute ceased to be in force within its boundaries, unless by appropriate legislation it was continued in force for the purpose of prosecuting violations thereof committed during the existence of a Territorial government. * * * The act of July 2 was not repealed by the enabling act, for it yet applies to the Territories of the United States. It ceased to be in force in Utah only because it was superseded by the constitution upon the admission of the State.

We have seen that there was no legislation of any kind continuing in force section 8 of the Edmunds Act, relating to disqualification. It is to be observed that this section does not undertake by its terms to operate within the limits of any State. It is expressly confined in its operation, by its terms, to "any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction." The meaning of the terms "polygamist" or "person cohabiting," with reference to the restriction as to voting, has been fully settled by the United States Supreme Court in Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S., 39; 29 L. C. P., 47).

This was an action for damages sustained by reason of being deprived, under this section, of the right to vote in the Territory of Utah; and among other things the court held:

It is not, therefore, because the person has committed the offense of bigamy or polygamy at some previous time, in violation of some existing statute, and as an additional punishment for its commission, that he is disfranchised by the act of March 22, 1882, nor because he is guilty of the offense as defined and punished by the terms of the act. * * *

The requirements of the eighth section of the act, in reference to a woman claiming the right to vote, are that she does not, at the time she offers to register, cohabit with a polygamist, bigamist, or person cohabiting with more than one woman. * * * Upon this construction the statute is not open to the objection that it is an ex post facto law. It does not seek in this section and by the penalty of disfranchisement to operate as a punishment upon any offense at all. * * *

The disfranchisement operates upon the existing state and condition of the person, and not upon a past offense. It is therefore not retrospective. He alone is deprived of his vote who, when he offers to register, is then in the state and condition of a bigamist or a polygamist, or is then actually cohabiting with more than one woman. * * * So that, in respect to those disqualifications of a voter under the act of March 22, 1882, the objection is not well taken that represents the inquiry into the fact by the officers of registration as an unlawful mode of prosecution for crime.

In respect to the fact of actual cohabitation with more than one woman, the objection is equally groundless, for the inquiry into the fact, so far as the registration officers are authorized to make it, or the judges of election, on challenge of the right of the voter, if registered, are required to determine it, is not, in view of its character as a crime, nor for the purpose of punishment, but for the sole purpose of determining, as in case of every other condition attached to the right of suffrage, the qualification of one who alleges his right to vote. It is precisely similar to an inquiry into the fact of nativity, of age, or of any other status necessary by law as a condition of the elective franchise.

The principles which apply to eligibility as a voter, must apply to eligibility to office, as they are in the same section and the same language applies to each, and in order to be affected by the disqualification prescribed by this section, a person must be a polygamist or unlawfully cohabiting within the meaning of the section, "at the time" of entering upon the office. It is not enough to show that at some former period Mr. Roberts was a polygamist or unlawfully cohabiting, as the disfranchisement does not operate "upon a past offense." It would have been entirely competent for Roberts to have taken himself from under the operation of this section while Utah was still a Territory by simply ceasing to be a polygamist or cohabiting, or by moving into a State, as the "disfranchisement" operates upon "the existing state and condition of the person" only. In other words, the offense must be continuous. The offense, and the disqualification, are coterminous.

There is a further legal proposition, too well settled to require the citation of authority, and that is, no statute can operate, either directly or indirectly, extra-territorially. The statute in question does not undertake to.

The offense of polygamy, and unlawfully cohabiting, is localized by the statute. The provision is not general. No polygamist or person thus cohabiting "anywhere, without any restriction as to place," is not the language. On the other hand, the prohibition is confined to a specified locality. No polygamist or any person, thus cohabiting—where? "In any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction." The United States had no power to make the prohibition apply to any other place, and did not attempt it. The offense, and the place defined, must coexist. He must be a polygamist, or person unlawfully cohabiting, in "any Territory," or the statute does not apply. The statute applies only to residents of the Territory.

In the light of these propositions let us analyze the case as it is.

Mr. Roberts presents himself as a member-elect of this House. It is objected that he is disqualified, under this section, as a polygamist or person unlawfully cohabiting. The disqualification must exist, at the time of his becoming a member. But since January, 1896, he has resided in the State of Utah, and this statute has not since then, and does not now, operate upon him. It can not, therefore, now disqualify him. The conditions of offense, and place, required by the statute to coexist, do not coexist in his case, and therefore the statute does not apply. In other words, it is said he is ineligible. Why? Because there is a statute of the United States which says that no polygamist or person unlawfully cohabiting, in "any Territory" is eligible, and he is a polygamist or person thus cohabiting. It is a complete answer to say, "While I am a polygamist, I am not such in 'any Territory.'"

While the penal provisions of the Edmunds Act are in full force in "any Territory," it would not for a moment be contended that Mr. Roberts would be liable to prosecution thereunder since January, 1896. Why? Simply because since that time he has committed no crime, within "any Territory," as all of his acts have been in the State of Utah. A fortiori the disqualifying provisions do not apply to him, as they do not even "operate as a punishment upon any offense at all." The moment Utah became a State, he, living in Utah, became a resident of the State, and one of the indispensable elements of the condition to which the disqualification attaches—residence within "any Territory"—ceased to exist, and the disqualification ceased to apply. The offense of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation in "any Territory" and the disqualification were no longer coterminous. He is now doing no act in "any Territory" to which the disqualification applies, and therefore it does not exist.

It is true that while Utah was a Territory Roberts was unlawfully cohabiting, and the disqualification existed, and his status was then that of ineligibility, and therefore it may be suggested it continues. But this would make the disqualification the result of a past offense, and the law says that it "operates upon the existing state and condition of the person, and not upon a past offense." It does not "operate as a punishment" at all, all of which it clearly would do, if the supposition were correct.

If the disqualification attaches to Roberts by reason of acts committed in Utah, the State, then the act would be operating extra-territorially, outside of "any Territory" to which by its specific terms it is expressly confined. The fact that Roberts still resides in the same place where he resided in 1895, though Utah is now a State, but then, was a Territory to which the law applied, undoubtedly is the cause of some confusion of thought. It is clear that his legal rights are precisely the same as though, since 1896 he had been residing in Maine and had been elected to Congress from that State. It would not be contended that this act could have any application to him in such case, to affect his present status, as it never operated there. No more has it in Utah since January, 1896.

To be sure, it is suggested that he may be eligible while in Utah by reason of the fact that this statute does not operate upon him there; but that the moment he gets into the District of Columbia, this being under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, he is ineligible, which involves the further interesting proposition that the moment he returns to the State of Utah, he is also eligible again. Now you see it; now you don't. [Laughter.] Such a suggestion is not worthy of serious attention

It seems to me beyond question that this act does not now apply to Mr. Roberts. Then there is no law having any application to this case by which the attempt is made to add anything to the constitutional qualifications. This House, by its independent action, can not make law for any purpose. The adding by this House, acting alone, of a qualification not established by law would not only be a violation, of both the Constitution, and the law, but it would establish a most dangerous precedent, which could hardly fail to "return to plague the inventor." You might feel that the grave moral and social aspects of this case allowed you to—

> Wrest once the law to your authority
> To do a great right, do a little wrong.

But what warrant have you, when the barriers of the Constitution are once broken down, that there may not come after us a House with other standards of morality and propriety, which will create other qualifications with no rightful foundations, that, in the heat and unreason of partisan contest—since there will be no definite standard by which to determine the existence of qualifications—will add anything that may be necessary to accomplish the desired result? Exigency will determine the sufficiency. It would no longer be a government of laws, but of men. To thus depart from the Constitution and substitute force for law is to embark upon a trackless sea without chart or compass, with almost a certainty of direful shipwreck.

THE UNDERSTANDING.

The ingenuity of the majority is not yet exhausted. They say:

> His election as a Representative is an explicit and offensive violation of the understanding by which Utah was admitted as a State.

I would like to inquire of the majority where they find the authority for the proposition that the United States Government can go into the question of an "understanding" that existed before a State was admitted into this Union, and then, having found it, exercise this domiciliary, supervisory, disciplinary power over the State. Where does it exist? What is it indicated by? Is it oral? They do not undertake to suggest it is in the enabling act, although they refer to it.

But is it an oral "understanding" that exists between the States by reason of this "general welfare" power? I assume that they invoke it under this "general welfare" proposition. Think of it! An "understanding" which is based on what? A compact or a contract? I had supposed it was too late at this stage of the history of the Republic, in these times of peace, to invoke the proposition of a contract, existing between the States and the General Government.

I knew that the theory of a contract was the parent of the infamous heresy of secession, and I have believed that it was wiped out in blood from 1861 to 1865. More than 500,000 of the best, truest, most heroic, and bravest men that ever met on the field of battle—the blue and the gray, brethren all—rendered up their lives that that infamous proposition should be blotted out, and blotted out forever. Let the dead past bury its dead. I submit that under these circumstances it ill becomes this House to undertake, in the interest, if you please, of civilization, to invoke anew the proposition of a contract existing between a State and the United States.

In what kind of a condition does it leave the State of Utah, if this "understanding" exists? Let me give an illustration of the application of this "understanding." I suppose that the "general welfare" of the people of this great Republic, is as fundamental as any other proposition involved in this "understanding." I imagine, and I can assume, that every State that came into the Union agreed to help to promote the "general welfare." Without such an "understanding," no State would have been admitted. On the basis of this "understanding," any State that is guilty of conduct that does not promote the "general welfare," or whose people are, violates the "understanding" under which it came into the Union, and therefore can be disciplined by the United States. Especially must they not imperil the "general welfare."

I would like to inquire, under this "understanding," if that theory is entirely true, if this view of the "general welfare" is to be followed, what would happen, for instance, to New Jersey, which is now the breeding ground of trusts and octopuses. [Laughter.] They are organizing corporations from $10,000,000 anywhere up to $125,000,000, based on air, and almighty thin air at that. [Laughter.]

There are a great many people that believe that the octopus, "as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour," and I would like to know why, if this proposition is true, if this nebulous, diaphanous, gauzy, dangerous, insufficient, metaphysical, chimerical, hypercritical, impalpable, evanescent and nonsensical theory is to be applied to this discussion [great laughter and applause] I would like to know how it is to be applied in the exercise of our practice under our "general welfare" clause. Will it be necessary to suspend New Jersey from representation upon this floor in order that she may not hereafter thus interfere with the "general welfare." [Renewed laughter and applause.]

If not, why not? Is it necessary to say more about that proposition? [Laughter.] I shall now make this suggestion. I have discussed this subject up to this time upon the basis of the propositions laid down by my friends on the majority of the committee.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does not my friend think that the prohibition laws of Maine are not more against the general welfare and against the people than the corporation laws of New Jersey?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There are those who think the Maine prohibition law against the sale of rum, even worse than polygamy. I believe in the law.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Has the gentleman read the corporation laws of New Jersey? They are fifty years old and the result of Democratic administration.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have. I do not want to make any reflection upon the State of New Jersey. I only used that as an illustration. [Laughter.] I have read the corporation laws of New Jersey. I have also read the excellent speech made before the Buffalo Bar Association by Mr. Keasby, advertising these corporation laws of New Jersey.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Have you read Governor Voorhees's speech at the Republican club dinner in New York City lately?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will be very glad to read it, if the gentleman will furnish it to me. There are a good many things I condemn in the corporation laws. We have a corporation law in Maine, but we stop at $10,000,000. You do not stop them anywhere. The only limitation that is placed upon them is the minimum. They shall not be incorporated for less than $1,000. You then go to anything below the stars. There is nothing but the gall of the men who organize the corporations to limit them. [Great laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is there any limitation in the Maine law?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is a limitation that they shall not go beyond $10,000,000.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. They could go on.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. We stopped at that. Let me venture the statement that this has no point in relation to this case. That is a question between Maine and New Jersey.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. And New Jersey can take care of these corporations.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just for a moment. Let me state that there was an effort in 1899 in the State of Maine to get a charter for the organization of the ice trust, with a capital of $60,000,000. They appeared before the committee on judiciary. Mr. Joseph H. Manley, who is one of the prominent members of the Republican party, was a member of that committee. The committee promptly turned it down because it was a trust. It went forthwith to New Jersey and got a charter. [Laughter.]

"THE COMPACT OF STATEHOOD."

Compact is synonymous with contract. The idea of a compact or contract is not predicable upon the relations that exist between the State and the General Government. They do not stand in the position of contracting parties. The condition upon which Utah was to become a State was fully performed when she became a State. The enabling act authorized the President to determine when the condition was performed. He discharged that duty, found that the condition was complied with, and that condition no longer exists.

What did Congress require by the enabling act? Simply that "said convention shall provide by ordinance irrevocable," etc., and the convention did in terms what it was required to do. It was a condition upon the performance of which by the "convention" the admission of Utah depended. Its purpose accomplished, its office is gone, and as a condition it ceases to exist. No power was reserved in the enabling act, nor can any be found in the Constitution of the United States, authorizing Congress, not to say the House of Representatives alone, to discipline the people in, or the State of Utah, because the crime of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation has not been exterminated in Utah. Where is the warrant to be found for the exercise of this disciplinary, supervisory power? This theory is apparently evolved for the purposes of this case, is entirely without precedent, and has not even the conjecture or dream of any writer to stand upon.

If it is suggested that the case of Texas vs. White (7 Wallace, 700) lends aid or comfort to this idea, I respectfully submit, without stopping to analyze the case, that it is based upon other grounds, and while the term "compact" is mentioned but once, it is then mentioned for the purpose of showing that it was not a proper term to describe the relations existing between the State and the Federal Government. As the court said (page 776):

> When, therefore, Texas became one of the United States she entered into an indissoluble relation. All the obligations of perpetual union and all the guaranties of republican government in the Union attached at once to the State. The act which consummated her admission into the Union was something more than a compact. It was the incorporation of a new member into the political body, and it was final. The union between Texas and the other States was as complete, as perpetual, and as indissoluble as the union between the original States. There was no place for reconsideration or revocation except through revolution or through consent of the States.

I propose now for a few moments to take up the question as to whether this House is or is not without remedy in case Mr. Roberts has the oath administered to him in compliance with his full constitutional rights, though that proposition has no legitimate relation to the question which I have been discussing. His rights depend upon the Constitution, and they are to be so determined, irrespective of what the results may be. I do not know how others may feel in relation to their constituents, but I am ready to go back to my constituents in Maine and say I have acted conscientiously, upon my construction of the Constitution, regardless of the consequences.

At this point I will advert, to what, to my mind, is a significant circumstance in a kindred matter in the recent history of the House. During the sessions of the last House a distinguished gentleman, whom the Republican party has delighted to honor, who now presides over the deliberations of this House with so much ease, grace, dignity, and ability, was chairman of the committee which was passing upon the rights of General Wheeler, that gallant little hero of two wars, who by his heroic conduct in battle in the war of the rebellion, and later in the war against Spain, entwined around himself the heartstrings of the American people. [Applause.] A great wave of sympathy welled up over the country, when it appeared that the gallant little general, who had left this House at the call of his country, came back and the question arose whether or not under the Constitution he could return to his seat as a member. I have no doubt the chairman of that committee could hear the mighty throb of the great American heart, pulsating with patriotic fervor, and could feel the surges of the wave, of love and affection, which swept over the country, but what did he say? He made this sublime declaration as chairman of that committee:

> No mere patriotic sentiments should be permitted to override the plain language of the fundamental law.

That magnificent sentence, as a part of the history of a free people, deserves to be "graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock forever." [Applause.]

I ask the House, under these circumstances, not to be governed, or affected, in determining this great constitutional question by any fear of reproof, or apprehension as to the result, particularly in view of the fact that 300 members of this House, on the statement of my friend from Ohio, held this man upon the threshold for the purpose of investigating his rights as a member. I have seen nothing to indicate, upon the facts of this case, that there has been any change of feeling upon the part of members. Let nothing induce you to "override the plain language of the fundamental law."

EXPULSION.

It is claimed that the House has no right to expel Mr. Roberts. I can not see how that fact, if it be a fact, has any legitimate tendency to establish the existence of a legal disqualification. I contend that this House has an undoubted right to expel him, even for conduct unrelated to him as a member. The majority say his conduct must be "inconsistent with his public trust and duty as such."

I will quote from the report of the committee, and see whether their findings of fact do, or not, indicate that the gentleman from Utah, from their standpoint, has been guilty of acts "inconsistent with his public trust and duty as such." I think I can satisfy the House, from what they say, that he is richly entitled to the application of the rule, they establish, for expulsion.

They say that "no government can possibly exist in the face of such practices." Is that inconsistent—a man guilty of these things—would that be inconsistent "with his public trust and duty as such?"

They say he is in "open war against the law and institutions of his country and this Congress which he seeks to enter." Would that be inconsistent "with his public trust and his duty as such?" If it is not, in heaven's name are they going to exclude him for it? If all these terrible things are not inconsistent "with his public trust and his duty as such," do they exclude him for them and yet he can not be expelled?

They further say:

You have solemnly enacted certain laws; you have crystallized into statute the will of the sovereign people. I bid defiance to your law. I will not recognize it. I here and now before your very eyes do the things you say I shall not do. I recognize a higher law than your man-made law—no law of yours can relieve me from the obligations which I thus take in defiance of your enactments. The only thing I promise not to do is to take a fourth wife.

The case of a bribe taker, or of a burglar, or of a murderer is trivial, is a mere ripple on the surface of things, compared with this far-reaching, deep-rooted, audacious lawlessness.

I will ask this House in all candor, (I am assuming the committee have made their report judiciously, coolly, not hysterically,) is not that "inconsistent with his public trust and duty as such," or is it consistent with it? I have thought it was inconsistent with it.

Now, here again, they say:

The acts of Roberts are essentially disloyal. They deny the sovereign; they repudiate the lawful government. Look at them from whatever point you will, they are subversive of government. They do not merely breed anarchy, they are anarchy. And this proposition is asserted not so much for reasons personal to the membership of the House, as because it goes to the very integrity of the House and the Republic as such.

Now, is that inconsistent "with his public trust and his duty as such?" If not, what would be? Looking at "them from whatever point you will," they say what? That "they are subversive of government." Can it be said, without being ridiculous, that when a man is in here whose acts are "subversive of the Government" that that is not "inconsistent with his public trust and his duty as such?" "They are anarchy." Is that "consistent with his public trust?" I submit that if the acts of Roberts are such as is suggested, it seems to me that upon their standard there is ample justification for his expulsion. This spirit, called by them "from the vasty deep," fades away when their own charges are applied to the legal propositions as they state them. If we abjure fervor, and think coolly, the result is the same.

The power of expulsion is, however, unlimited, and not confined to acts related to the trust or duty of a member. They insist upon the contrary in order to frighten the House into exclusion. To exclude, the majority read into the clause relating to qualifications new provisions. To narrow the right of expulsion they read new conditions into that section. I take both clauses as they stand. I neither add to, nor take from. This precise question has been determined but once in this country. The opinion of the court in that case, an authoritative construction of this clause of the Constitution, was written by Chief Justice Shaw, conceded to be one of the greatest judges that ever sat in any court, in any land, at any time.

The constitution of Massachusetts contained no provision authorizing the expulsion of a member of the house of representatives. Joseph Hiss was expelled by the house, upon the ground that his conduct on a committee at Lowell "was highly improper and disgraceful, both to himself and to this body of which he is a member." This was not disorderly conduct in the house, and it is significant that the facts that made it "improper and disgraceful" were not disclosed by the case.

Hiss, after his expulsion, was arrested at the instance of one of his creditors on mesne process and committed to jail. He brought a petition for habeas corpus on the ground that he was a member of the House of Representatives and as such privileged from arrest. This raised the precise question of the legality of his expulsion, and, speaking through Chief Justice Shaw, the court, among other things, said:

The question is whether the House of Representatives have the power to expel a member.

After adverting to the fact that the Constitution did not in terms authorize expulsion, he says:

There is nothing to show that the framers of the Constitution intended to withhold this power. It may have been given in other States, either ex majori cautela, or for the purpose of limiting it, by requiring a vote of more than a majority.

In the Constitution of the United States it was given evidently "for the purpose of limiting it," as a two-thirds vote is required.

Again:

The power of expulsion is a necessary and incidental power to enable the house to perform its high functions, and is necessary to the safety of the State. It is a power of protection. A member may be physically, mentally, or morally wholly unfit; he may be inflicted with a contagious disease, or insane, or noisy, violent, and disorderly, or in the habit of using profane, obscene, and abusive language. It is necessary to put extreme cases to test a principle.

If the power exists, the house must necessarily be the sole judge of the exigency which may justify and require its exercise.

After having fully examined the law and practice of Parliament, he says:

But there is another consideration, which seems to render it proper to look into the law and practice of Parliament, to some extent. I am strongly inclined to believe, as above intimated, that the power to commit and expel its members was not given to the House and Senate, respectively, because it was regarded as inherent, incidental, and necessary, and must exist in every aggregate and deliberative body, in order to the exercise of its functions, and because without it such body would be powerless to accomplish the purposes of its constitution; and therefore any attempt to express or define it would impair rather than strengthen it. This being so, the practice and usage of other legislative bodies, exercising the same functions, under similar exigencies; and the reason and grounds, existing in the nature of things, upon which their rules and practice have been founded, may serve as an example and as some guide to the adoption of good rules when the exigencies arise under our Constitution.

But independently of parliamentary custom and usages, our legislative houses have the power to protect themselves by the punishment and expulsion of a member.

"It is urged that this court will inquire whether the petitioner has been tried. But if the House have jurisdiction for any cause to expel, and a court of justice finds that they have in fact expelled, he then held their action was conclusive, and dismissed the petition." (Hiss vs. Bartlett, 3 Gray, 468.)

It is instructive on this point to note that this paragraph of the Constitution, as originally drawn, read:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings; may punish its members for disorderly behavior; and may expel a member.

Making three distinct clauses separated by semicolons, eliminating the idea that the words "disorderly conduct" have any effect in limiting the power to expel, which appears in the clause immediately following.

This extract from the records of the debates in the Federal Convention shows clearly why the two-thirds provision was inserted in the expulsion clause:

Mr. Madison observed that the right of expulsion (Article VI, section 6) was too important to be exercised by a bare majority of a quorum, and in emergencies of faction might be dangerously abused. He moved that "with the concurrence of two-thirds" might be inserted between "may" and "expel."

Mr. Randolph and Mr. Mason approved the idea.

Mr. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS. This power may be safely trusted to a majority. A few men, from factious motives, may keep in a member who ought to be expelled.

Mr. Carroll thought that the concurrence of two-thirds, at least, ought to be required.

On the question requiring two-thirds in cases of expelling a member, ten States were in the affimative; Pennsylvania divided.

Article VI, section 6, as thus amended, was then agreed to nem con. (Journal of Constitutional Convention (Madison), Volume V, page 500.)

While I think this Hiss case establishes beyond successful controversy the power of expulsion as discretionary and unlimited, it is proper to note that no decided case, or elementary writer, militates against it. I give all that I have found on the question.

In discussing this question, the court, in State vs. Jersey City (25 N. J. L., 539), said:

The power vested in the two Houses of Congress by the Constitution, Article I, section 5, paragraph 2, is in different phraseology; it is, that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member." Under this power, the Senate in 1797 expelled a member of that body for an offense not committed in his official character as a member, nor during a session of Congress, nor while the member was at the seat of Government. (Blount's case, Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, chapter 12, paragraph 833.) But it is not clear that the power to expel is limited by the Constitution to the cause of disorderly behavior.

Evidently without having in mind the accurate use of the term "qualification," as used in the Constitution, the court, in State ex rel. vs. Gilmore (20 Kansas, 554), said:

The Constitution declares (Article II, section 8) that "Each House shall be judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." This is a grant of power, and constitutes each House the ultimate tribunal as to the qualifications of its own members. The two Houses acting conjointly do not decide. Each House acts for itself and by itself; and from its decision there is no appeal, not even to the two Houses. And this power is not exhausted when once it has been exercised and a member admitted to his seat. It is a continuous power, and runs through the entire term. At any time during the term of office each House is empowered to pass upon the present qualifications of its own members.

Story says:

And as a member might be so lost to all sense of dignity and duty as to disgrace the House by the grossness of his conduct, or interrupt its deliberations by perpetual violence or clamor, the power to expel for very aggravated misconduct was also indispensable, not as a common, but as an ultimate redress for the grievance. But such a power, so summary and at the time so subversive of the rights of the people, it was foreseen, might be exerted for mere purposes of faction or party, to remove a patriot or to aid a corrupt measure; and it has, therefore, been wisely guarded by the restriction that there shall be a concurrence of two-thirds of the members to justify an expulsion. * * *

In July, 1797, William Blount was expelled from the Senate for "a high misdemeanor, entirely inconsistent with his public trust and duty as a Senator." The offense charged against him was an attempt to seduce an American agent among the Indians from his duty, and to alienate the affections and confidence of the Indians from the public authorities of the United States, and a negotiation for services in behalf of the British Government among the Indians. It was not a statutable offense, nor was it committed in his official character; nor was it committed during the session of Congress, nor at the seat of Government. Yet, by an almost unanimous vote he was expelled from that body; and he was afterwards impeached (as has been already stated) for this, among other charges. It seems, therefore, to be settled by the Senate, upon full deliberation, that expulsion may be for any misdemeanor which, though not punishable by any statute, is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a Senator.—Story on the Constitution, volume 1, page 607.

Paschal states:

It seems to be settled that a member may be expelled for any misdemeanor which, though not punishable by any statute, is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a member. (Blount's Case, 1 Story Const., paragraph 838; Smith's Case, 1 Hall's L. J., 459; Brook's Case, for assaulting Senator Sumner in the Senate Chamber for words spoken in debate.) It extends to all cases where the offense is such as in the judgment of the House unfits him for parliamentary duties. (Paschal's Annotated Constitution, page 87, paragraph 49.)

It has not yet been precisely settled what must be the disorderly behavior to incur punishment, nor what kind of punishment is to be inflicted; but it can not be doubted that misbehavior out of the walls of the House or within them, when it is not in session, would fall within the meaning of the Constitution. Expulsion may, however, be founded on criminal conduct committed in any place, and either before or after conviction in a court of law. (Rawle on the Constitution, 2d ed., 47.)

Cooley is specific:

Each House has also power to punish members for disorderly behavior, and other contempts of its authority, as well as to expel a member for any cause which seems to the body to render it unfit that he continue to occupy one of its seats. This power is generally enumerated in the Constitution among those which the two Houses may exercise, but it need not be specified in that instrument, since it would exist whether expressly conferred or not. It is "a necessary and incidental power to enable the House to perform its high functions, and it is necessary to the safety of the State. It is a power of protection."

"A member may be physically, mentally, or morally wholly unfit; he may be afflicted with a contagious disease, or insane, or noisy, violent, and disorderly, or in the habit of using profane, obscene, and abusive language." And, "independently of parliamentary customs and usages, our legislative Houses may have the power to protect themselves by the punishment and expulsion of a member," and the courts can not inquire into the justice of the decision, or even so much as examine the proceedings to see whether or not the proper opportunity for defense was furnished. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, pages 159, 160.)

Since there has been repeated occasion to take steps against members of each House under each of these two clauses, and since the majority has never taken this standpoint, it may now be regarded as finally settled that that interpretation is correct which is the broader and at the same time, according to ordinary speech, unquestionably the more natural one. Both Houses of Congress must have been granted every power needed to guard themselves and their members against any impropriety on the part of a member and to preserve their dignity and reputation among the people. It is wholly for them to say what conduct they are to regard as dishonorable enough to require expulsion. An appeal from their decision lies only to the court of public opinion, a court which brings in its verdict at the elections. (Von Holst's Constitutional Law of the United States, 102.)

The power of expulsion is unlimited, and the judgment of a two-thirds majority is final. (Pomeroy on Constitutional Law, page 159, 1905.)

It seems necessary also to remark that a member may be expelled, or discharged from sitting as such, which is the same thing in milder terms, for many causes, for which the election could not be declared void. (Cushing, Law and Practice Legislative Assemblies, page 33, section 84.)

The power to expel a member is naturally and even necessaraly incidental to all aggregate, and especially all legislative bodies; which, without such power, could not exist honorably, and fulfill the object of their creation. In England this power is sanctioned by continued usage, which, in part, constitutes the law of Parliament. (Ibid., page 251, section 625.)

Blount was expelled from the Senate for an offense inconsistent with public duty, but it was not for a statutory offense, nor was it in his official character, nor during the session of Congress, nor at the seat of government. The vote of expulsion was 25 to 1.

The motion to expel a member may be for disorderly behavior, or disobedience to the rules of the House in such aggravated form as to show his unfitness longer to remain in the House, and the case above cited, as well as the reason of the provision, would justify the expulsion of a member from the House where his treasonable and criminal misconduct would show his unfitness for the public trust and duty of a member of either House. But expulsion, which is an extreme punishment, denying to his constituency the right to be represented by him, can only be inflicted by the concurrence of two-thirds of the House, and not by a bare majority only. (Citing Story on the Constitution, section 837.) Tucker on the Constitution, page 429.

It has since been held by the House of Representatives that a member duly elected could not be disqualified for a cause not named in the Constitution, such as immorality, and that the remedy in such a case, if any, was expulsion. The distinction between the right to refuse admission and the right of expulsion upon the same ground is important, since the former can be done by a majority of a quorum, whereas expulsion requires the vote of two-thirds. The question can not be said to have been authoritatively decided. Foster on the Constitution, page 367.

Mr. Foster's attention does not appear to have been directed to the case of Hiss vs. Bartlett, as it is in point on his doubt if it relates to the power of expulsion, and he does not refer to it.

Expulsion is generally reserved for offenses which render members unfit for a seat in Parliament and which, if not so punished, would bring discredit upon Parliament itself. Members have been expelled as being in open rebellion, as having been guilty of forgery or perjury or frauds and breaches of trust, of misappropriation of public money, of conspiracy to defraud, of corruption in the administration of justice, or in public office, or in the execution of their duties as members of the House, of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer or gentleman, and of contempts, libels, and other offenses committed against the House itself. (May's Parliamentary Practice tenth edition 1893, page 55.)

These authorities clearly establish that conduct "inconsistent with the public trust and duty as such" or related to the duties of a member is not an indispensable element of the right to expel. "It is a power of protection." Protection of what? Certainly not the member expelled; necessarily the House, its dignity, character, "and reputation among the people." It seems difficult for some to appreciate the distinction between exclusion and expulsion.

Now I suppose it will be conceded that Sir Roundell Palmer (Lord Selborne), a distinguished advocate and counsel at the English bar, was a man of some ability. In the O'Donovan-Rossa debate, in 1870, he used this expression, very happily contrasting the power of expulsion, with the right of exclusion:

A man may be expelled from the House for certain offenses, though not legally disqualified.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] says that is "ridiculous and absurd," but I have no doubt that Sir Roundell Palmer will survive the suggestion. Palmer says that a man may be expelled from the House for certain offenses, "though not legally disqualified." And that is our proposition.

LEGISLATIVE PRECEDENTS.

I examine the legislative precedents for a few moments, and then I shall be through.

The Marshall case, which is cited from the Senate as against the power to expel, was overruled by the Smith case, to which the report of the committee devotes two lines. The reason for this brief mention will clearly appear when that case is stated.

SMITH CASE.

John Quincy Adams made the report for the committee, which was unanimous. You will find it on page 720, Senate Election Cases. It states the law thus:

By letter of the Constitution the power of expelling a member is given to each of the two Houses of Congress, without any limitation other than that which requires a concurrence of two-thirds of the vote to give it effect.

And how near do you suppose the Senate, under that proposition, came to expelling Smith? The vote was just 19 to 10, lacking one vote of expulsion. That is a precedent cited on the other side. It is a precedent distinctly in our favor. The Senate squarely held that they had jurisdiction, because a majority vote was sufficient to sustain jurisdiction. In the Roach and Herbert cases, as stated by the majority, it was not even contended that the Senate or the House did not have the power to expel. In fact, the inference is that the power was conceded, but was not exercised.

MATTESON CASE.

The Matteson case, in my judgment, does not warrant any such inference. Matteson was charged with inciting parties to corrupt the House, and with slandering the House by charging that a large number of members had pledged themselves not to vote for measures granting money or lands unless they were paid for it. Upon these charges a resolution for his expulsion was pending in the Thirty-fourth Congress, and was about to be adopted, when he prevented further action by resigning. Meanwhile, and before the hearing by the committee, he had been elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress. In the Thirty-fifth Congress a resolution reciting these facts and declaring Matteson expelled was, after a long debate, referred to a committee, of which Mr. Seward, of Georgia, was chairman.

The debate discloses that the principal ground relied upon in opposition to the resolution was that proceedings for expulsion were analogous to a criminal prosecution at common law, and that Matteson, having in effect been once punished by the Thirty-fourth Congress, could not properly be punished a second time for the same offense. In this respect the facts are not parallel to Mr. Roberts's case, as it appears that the offense with which he is charged is still continuing. The committee recommended the adoption of a resolution "that it is inexpedient to take further action in regard to Orasemus B. Matteson." The whole subject was afterwards laid on the table by a vote of 96 to 69, and this ended the action of the House.

Mr. Seward, in urging the adoption of the recommendation, incorrectly stated the action of the Senate in the Smith case in 1808. Smith was indicted for treason in Virginia, as an accomplice of Aaron Burr. Mr. Seward states:

Mr. Adams made a report to the Senate setting forth the crime for which the party was arraigned; and when the vote was taken, there was not a sufficient number of the members of the Senate voted in favor of jurisdiction over the cause, and the Senate refused a conviction on the charge. They acted upon the principle that the criminal courts had jurisdiction when either the Constitution or laws of the United States were violated, because the facts established were clear, and the refusal to convict must turn upon the want of jurisdiction and power.

It was claimed in the Smith case that the Senate had no jurisdiction until after a conviction upon the indictment. The unanimous report of the committee, as heretofore stated, held otherwise.

There was no separate vote as to whether the Senate had jurisdiction. The report recommended a resolution expelling Smith and failed, as I have stated, lacking only one of the necessary two-thirds.

When Mr. Seward stated that the "facts established were clear," and the case must have turned upon "want of jurisdiction and power," he presumed upon the lack of information on the part of the House, or himself was lacking in information, as the record discloses that the existence of the facts was bitterly contested, and page after page is devoted to their discussion, and a majority vote would have clearly been sufficient to determine the question of jurisdiction or power.

The Matteson case was in 1858. With the exception of a suggestion that a case had been decided in Massachusetts, the purport of which was not stated, no reference was made to the Hiss case, though it was published in 1857. Although the only decided case in the country, it does not appear to have been cited in any debate on this question.

BROOKS AND AMES CASES.

Brooks and Ames were charged with complicity in the Crédit Mobilier frauds and with bribing members of Congress some five or six years before the session of Congress, when the resolution was pending, to expel them. Their case was referred to a subcommittee, and the subcommittee reported in favor of expulsion.

For the purpose of showing this House the amount of deliberation and examination upon which other Houses have acted when they have established precedents that are invoked here to control our action, I want to call your attention to the report of the Judiciary Committee, headed by Benjamin F. Butler, in that case. A resolution involving the question as to whether Colfax, then Vice-President, could be impeached for an offense committed before his election as Vice-President, was referred to the Judiciary Committee on the 20th day of February, 1873, and they reported back to the House on the 24th day of February, 1873.

That was only three days, at the outside, that this committee had in which to investigate, first, the question committed to them, the great constitutional proposition as to whether or not the Vice-President of the United States could be impeached for an offense committed before he took the office; second, the question as to whether or not the House had the right to exclude, and third, they went on to discuss the question as to whether, or not, the House had the power to expel, the last two questions never having been referred to them. In three days' time that committee undertook to thoroughly investigate, those three great constitutional propositions and report to the House.

Now, as a matter of interest, I want to show you what they said on this question of exclusion. The majority did not quote this from the report of that committee. They said:

> Your committee believe that there is no man or body of men who can add to or take away one jot or title of these qualifications. The enumeration of such specific qualifications necessarily excludes every other.

I submit that if this report of that committee is good authority to sustain their proposition that you have no power to expel, it is equally good authority on this proposition that you have no power to exclude, when they state it with a great deal more emphasis.

The value of an opinion depends upon the care exercised in its preparation. On this point of time, Mr. Clarkson N. Potter made this suggestion, which is a part of his report:

> I dissent from the report, but I concur in the recommendation to discharge the committee, for want of time to make further investigation and for reasons expressed in views submitted herewith.

This is the report upon which they rely. The special committee, of which Poland, of Vermont, was chairman, held that the power of expulsion was unlimited. They said:

> The principal purpose of expulsion is not a punishment, but to remove a member whose character and conduct show that he is an unfit man to participate in the deliberations and decisions of the body and whose presence in it tends to bring the body into contempt and disgrace.
>
> Every consideration of justice and sound policy would seem to require that the public interests be secured, and those chosen to be their guardians be free from the pollution of high crimes, no matter at what time that pollution had attached.
>
> If two-thirds of the House shall see fit to expel a man because they do not like his political or religious principles, or without any reason at all, they have the power, and there is no remedy except by appeal to the people. Such exercise of the power would be wrongful and violative of the principles of the Constitution, but we see no encouragement of such wrong in the views we hold.

That report is signed by George W. McCrary. On the second day of the session the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] read from Judge McCrary's work, with an air of authority, to halt this man at the bar of this House. I notice that this air has disappeared, and they say they do not quote his work "as being authoritative in itself." They have probably since learned his views on expulsion. If Judge McCrary was sufficient authority to justify challenging a member at the threshold, why is he not equally as good an authority for the proposition that this House has unlimited power of expulsion?

CANNON CASE.

The Cannon case is indefinite and uncertain, and was affected by several independent considerations, and can not fairly be said to determine anything.

SCHUMAKER AND KING.

In this case not only did the minority of the Judiciary, consisting of Scott Lord, W. M. Lawrence, GEORGE F. HOAR, and B. G. Caulfield, hold that—

> It will be seen that there are no words of limitation on the power to expel, which seems to have been left to the good sense and discretion of each House—

but George W. McCrary again, in a separate note, said:

> But where the charge is that a member of the House has received money to be used by him to corrupt legislation in Congress, for which offense no indictment has been found, I think the House may properly take jurisdiction, though the offenses charged were committed prior to his election.

In this case, the fact that everything for which the gentleman from Utah is to be excluded, now exists, and in a very aggravated form, by reason of its continuance, if the majority are correct, eliminates the element of past offense, and is a complete answer to the objection raised against expulsion.

It is proper to observe that the determinations of the courts and the opinions of eminent legal authors unexcelled in reputation and learning are entitled, upon these propositions, to great weight, as they are in every instance the result of careful, dispassionate, and disinterested research and sound reasoning, unaffected by considerations that must necessarily have been involved in legislative precedents. The two-thirds limitation upon the right to expel not only demonstrates the wisdom of the fathers, but illustrates the broad distinction between exclusion and expulsion.

A small partisan majority might render the desire to arbitrarily exclude by a majority vote, in order to more securely intrench itself in power, irresistible. Hence its exercise is controlled by legal rules. In case of expulsion, when the requisite two-thirds can be had, the motive for the exercise of arbitrary power no longer exists, as a two-thirds partisan majority is sufficient for every purpose. Hence expulsion has been safely left in the discretion of the House, and the safety of the members does not need the protection of legal rules.

It seems to me settled upon reason and authority that the power of the House to expel is unlimited, and that the legal propositions involved may be thus fairly summarized: The power of exclusion is a matter of law, to be exercised by a majority vote, in accordance with legal principles, and exists only where a member-elect lacks some of the qualifications required by the Constitution. The power of expulsion is made by the Constitution purely a matter of discretion, to be exercised by a two-thirds vote, fairly, intelligently, conscientiously, with a due regard to propriety and the honor and integrity of the House and the rights of the individual member. For the abuse of this discretion we are responsible only to our constituents, our consciences, and our God.

I believe that Mr. Roberts has the legal constitutional right to be sworn in as a member. The facts are such that I further believe the House, in the exercise of its discretion, is not only justified, but required, by every proper consideration involved, to expel him promptly after he becomes a member.

I address myself to the intelligence, judgment, and conscience of the House, not to its prejudices. Sympathies, prejudices, tendencies, opinions, and conditions may change; principles never. The Great Charter is our only guide. May the Constitution remain inviolate. [Great applause.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, without at the present time undertaking to make any arrangement as to the method or order in which the resolutions and substitute may be offered, but specially, however, of an opportunity to be afforded the gentleman from Iowa to present his amendment, to which I have no objection—that is, in so far as the presentation is concerned—I ask unanimous consent that an arrangement be made that debate on this question continue until half past 4 o'clock on Thursday next, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution, the substitute, and the amendment to be presented later by the gentleman from Iowa; but until that time the gentleman from Maine and myself shall have control of the time occupied by debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that general debate be continued until half past 4 o'clock on Thursday next, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and substitute proposed by the minority, and the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, and the vote then to be taken, the time to be controlled in behalf of the majority by the gentleman from Ohio, and on behalf of the minority by the gentleman from Maine. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does that involve any division of time including the three hours that have been occupied by one side?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. By an understanding with the gentlemen from Maine and Missouri it involves an equal division of time from the beginning of the debate.

The SPEAKER. That will be the understanding, if the request is granted.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I should like also to inquire if this makes any provision for any member outside of the committee to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the question, but the custom of the House is that the members of the committee shall first be heard.

Mr. GROUT. That is precisely why I make the inquiry; because the gentlemen ought to be able to inform the House whether gentlemen from outside the committee who desire to be heard will have an opportunity. For one, I wish to be heard.

The SPEAKER. That is a question the Chair can not answer. In the absence of objection——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Iowa read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I understood the gentleman from Iowa was going to change the phraseology.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is as the gentleman proposes to offer it, and the Clerk will now report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolution by inserting, after the word "and" in the fourth line, the following words: "he is expelled;" so as to read:

"Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case, Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, ought not to have or hold a seat in the House of Representatives, and he is expelled, and that the seat to which he was elected is hereby declared vacant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the member-elect from Utah be heard for an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Utah be heard for an hour and a half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the discussion I have listened to upon the question involved on the admission of the member from Utah discloses wide differences of opinion, at least as to matters of procedure with reference to this case. I presume that the House will appreciate the fact that in the presentation of this case I can not agree with either the minority or the majority reports. I find myself in the position where one could say, with some propriety, perhaps, "a plague on both your houses" [laughter], since the propositions of both minority and majority reports equally propose my undoing.

The situation, however, may not be altogether without its advantages; for if the minority can convince the House, as I confess it has me, that I ought not to be excluded, and, on the other hand, if the majority can convince the House, as it has me, that I can not be expelled [laughter], it seems to me that matters would fall out about as I would have them, and I think substantial justice would be done. [Laughter and applause.]

So that this side or corner of the House hereby appropriates the magnificent argument of the minority against exclusion and appropriates so much of the argument of the majority as relates to expulsion. I want it understood, too, that this applies not only to what has already been said, but to what shall hereafter be said on the same subject by each side, respectively, on the same question.

I call the attention of the House to the findings of this committee—at least to a part of the findings, and especially to the first paragraph:

We find that Brigham H. Roberts was elected as a Representative to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, and was at the date of his election above the age of 25 years; that he had been for more than seven years a naturalized citizen of the United States and was an inhabitant of the State of Utah.

I call attention to this enumeration of the qualifications of the member from Utah because they include all the prescribed qualifications in the Constitution of our country for a member in this House, and I further call attention to the declaration here made that the member for Utah was elected.

Now, putting behind that finding the logic, the forceful argument, of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]—and, mark you, I have already served notice upon you that I would appropriate it—I ask you if, without a violation of the Constitution of your country, you can deny the member from Utah the right to be called back to the bar of this House, from which he was improperly turned away, and permit him to be sworn?

A breach in the Constitution of our country is a very important matter—much more important than anything personal can be to this member from Utah. To drive him forth from this assembly without recognizing his right to take the seat may be in and of itself an insignificant thing; but if by doing it you make a breach in the fundamental law that was meant to prescribe a limit to your powers, then that is serious. It would be a breach of constitutional morality compared with which the crime of the member from Utah, even though that be as bad as it is described to be by the majority of this committee, would be pure innocence. It is by such actions—such breaches in the Constitution—insidiously introduced and repeated, that lead to the downfall of republics. Let us not be too confident in our ability to survive such violations of the Constitution.

We are standing in the midst of great temptations to indulge in actions of this description—that is to say, actions involving the disregard of constitutional limitations—and are invited to undertake enterprises in response to the popular clamor irrespective of what the limitations fixed by the Constitution may be.

A man would be open to the charge of disloyalty almost if he were to intimate that there was a possibility of this great Republic of the West crumbling to pieces, and yet we know from the graveyard of nations, which is described in history, that nations quite as proud and people equally as patriotic for their systems of government have fallen into decay, and naught remains but ruins to mark the place which they once occupied. "Nations melt from power's high pinnacle after they have felt the sunshine for a while, and downward go like avalanches loosened from the mountain's belt."

We may know from the history of the past that there is a power above that "rules the harmonious destiny of this world even better than prime ministers," and that if nations indulge in constitutional immorality the result must be just what the indulgence in immorality with the individual is. Its end is death. And so I call your attention to the seriousness of departing from the Constitution to respond to the clamor of misled people. What is it that is invoked as an excuse for this proposed action?

What mighty emergency has arisen that demands this disregard of constitutional limitations? What vital force or principle of our Government is threatened? Who is in arms against our institutions, that you should resort to methods that never were resorted to except in the midst of civil war and when the life of the nation was at stake? It is alleged that a man guilty of having married under the sanction of his church a plurality of wives has been elected to the House of Representatives, and hence that the American home is in danger and these extraordinary proceedings must be invoked against it. His crime and the circumstances under which it was committed is supposed to make his a more direful offense than murder or robbery, and hence you must be rid of him. The report says:

The case of a bribe taker or of a burglar or of a murderer is trivial, is a mere ripple on the surface of things, compared with this far-reaching, deep-rooted, audacious lawlessness.

It seems to me that that is rather strange language to be employed in a sober presentation of facts before the House of Representatives and breathes too much of rhetoric and passion. Just for a few moments I want to pay attention to the nature of this crime of polygamy, not with a view of showing that the American people have not the right to establish monogamy as a system of marriage that shall prevail, and not for the purpose of defending polygamy either. In the early debate that took place with reference to this case on the floor of the House I then said that I was not here to represent polygamy, that I was not here to defend it; that we had long ago passed that stage of the case; that the thing itself was taken out of the realm of discussion. So I do not wish my remarks to be construed as any defense of the doctrine of polygamy; but I do want to call attention to the nature of this crime, in order that we may ascertain whether it is as awful as the description of it in the committee's report and if it warrants a more lawless act than polygamy itself in order to rebuke a man supposed to be guilty of it who has been elected to the House of Representatives.

The Jewish people were made the depository of God's revelation to humanity. You will not find the crime of polygamy referred to regarded among that people as of the character that it is described here in the report of the committee. Evidently it is not from its nature a sin or a crime. If it were, you would not find the Jewish law enforcing it under some circumstances, regulating it under other circumstances, and men after God's own heart sustaining those relations which are now supposed to justify you in closing the doors against the member from Utah. If you go to the teachings of the great Master, whom, I take it, we all revere, although He denounced every crime, every sin that man can commit, you shall find no word of His in condemnation of the conduct of the patriarchs or of the law relating to this matter as it was given by Moses to ancient Israel.

Last evening, while walking in the resident portion of this city, I passed a magnificent, heroic statue of stern old Martin Luther, than whom the nations of western Europe and America owe no man more than they do to him for the religious and civil liberty that they now possess, the founder of Protestant Christendom; and that man upon this subject that is here so much denounced declared in the early days of Protestant Christendom, when he was informed that his disciple Carlstadt was teaching polygamy, said in his letter to Chancellor Bruecks:

I indeed must confess that I can not protest when one takes many wives, for it does not contradict the Scriptures.

And again, in his letter to Philip, the Landgraave of Hesse, remarking upon the fact that Philip had taken a second wife, his first wife being still living, he said:

In matters of matrimony the laws of Moses are not revoked or contradicted by the gospels.

Yet we build monuments to Luther, notwithstanding his toleration and defense of that form of marriage. Now, I say all these things not for the purpose of arguing here upon the rightfulness of polygamy, but I do say what I have here remarked for the purpose of fixing it in the minds of members that it is merely a crime because prohibited by law, and not by its nature a crime.

In order that we may better judge of this case I desire to call attention to the origin of this institution of plurality of wives in the Mormon Church. It began under sanction of a revelation purporting to have been received by Joseph Smith at Nauvoo in 1840. Subsequently the church was expatriated, not, however, on account of polygamy, but for other reasons, because of the religious intolerance of the people in the northwestern part of the State of Illinois. They went a thousand miles from the frontiers of the United States and established themselves upon Mexican soil.

In 1852 they publicly announced to the world their belief in this form of marriage and openly and boldly defended it from the platform and from the pulpit and through the public press of the country. There was nothing secret in their conduct. It was a part of their religion, and they considered themselves protected alike in their belief and in the practice thereof under the provisions of the Constitution—that provision which said:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

In 1862, however, the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of its powers over the Territories, enacted a law against this system of marriage; but the people did not surrender this practice, for the reason that they believed they were protected by the clause in the Constitution I have just quoted.

In 1876, desiring to put the matter to a test and not to be under the odium of violating the laws of the country, and being confident that the courts would sustain the views that they had held, the Mormon Church themselves furnished a case, supplied the evidence and the witnesses, and brought that case before the courts, carrying it from one court to another, until in 1878, as already related here on the floor of the House, the law against this form of marriage was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

It has been recited as the chief offense both of the Mormon people and of the member from Utah that notwithstanding this decision they still continued to maintain the rightfulness of that institution. The argument seems to be that as soon as the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered those people should have dropped their hands and instantly conformed to the law of the land. Limited, indeed, must have been the experience and reading of that man who would suppose that controversies of this character would be so easily disposed of and who would think that a great religious conviction of a people would be immediately given up on the decision of a court.

Worthy of all respect as the Supreme Court of the United States unquestionably is, and held in high esteem, amounting almost to veneration, by my people, still we could not forget the fact that the court was still human and liable to error. The people call to mind that judicial tribunals in other lands and in other ages had rendered decisions that were not altogether in keeping with righteousness. Going back no further in history than the commencement of the Christian era, we in Utah could not forget that the great Peasant of Judea was condemned under all the forms of law by a judicial tribunal—the Sanhedrim of the Jews. We could not forget that the Inquisition of Spain was a judicial tribunal, the supreme court of the land, though it sent men to the rack and filled the land with the groans of suffering martyrs. We could not forget the fact that the Star Chamber in England, that filled the prisons of that country with patriots, was a judicial tribunal. We could not forget the fact that thousands and tens of thousands of patriots in France were sent to the guillotine by the decisions of judicial tribunals. We could not forget the fact that this Supreme Court of ours, high and exalted as it is, had frequently reversed itself. We remembered that it had sustained the constitutionality of the fugitive-slave law and that its decisions had been overturned by the people, by revolutions in sentiment as well as by revolution through arms. I see upon the floor of this House a man who, because of his race, if absolute submission to the decisions of the Supreme Court had been allowed to be the last of any controversy, would now be but a piece of goods or chattels in this country instead of being a member of the House of Representatives.

So, believing in the righteousness of our doctrine, knowing that it came from a divine source to us, we hoped that there would be such a revolution in public sentiment as would result in the reversal of this decision. The hoped-for revolution did not come; the sentiment grew harder and stronger the other way. But such violations of the law after the decision of the Supreme Court in 1878—such violations of the law as took place, did not take place in wantonness against constituted authority and for the purpose of "spitting upon the law," to use the eloquent language of the majority of the committee. Those violations did not occur because we supposed that we could elevate ourselves above the law or that governments could subsist where that proposition obtained among the people. We were not so ill instructed in civil government as that. But such violations of the law as took place were in pursuance of a deep conviction of duty and to maintain what we believed to be a divine institution. So I say that such violations of the enactments of Congress as occurred must not be interpreted too hard against the people of Utah or the man that they sent here to represent them.

But let us proceed to the history of this matter. In 1882 additional legislation was passed. Special funds were granted to the courts in Utah and a judicial crusade started. Extrajudicial powers were invoked against this particular crime until a perfect reign of terror existed throughout the Territory. Women and children were driven into exile. Thirteen hundred men passed through prison out of a small community of less than 200,000, not more than 2 per cent of whom were at any time involved in the violation of this law; and out of that small number 1,300 passed through the prisons of the Territory, the member from Utah among the number. And these men, let me say, both for the mercy of the courts and also for the justification of the right intentions in the hearts of the condemned—these men could have escaped this indignity by speaking a word, and that was "to agree to give up this institution." I remember that the day I myself stood before the court a gentleman, now a district judge of Salt Lake City, a personal friend now, said to the court, "This man need not go to prison if he will speak the word and say that he will obey the law and give up this institution." I refused to say the word, because I felt at that time that it would have been like deserting the cause of God to do it. [Applause in the galleries.]

Hence, I stood true to the convictions that had been instilled into my heart from boyhood, and so far as I was personally concerned in the matter, I felt as if I could have stood to have the flesh hewed piece by piece from my body rather than to have been untrue to that religious conviction. It was this conviction which led to such lawlessness as I may have been guilty of, and only that.

But the time came when there must be a submission to the people of the United States, for we were under their jurisdiction; and, consequently, after grave consideration, the president of the Mormon Church at last issued what is known as the "Woodruff manifesto," in the month of September, 1890. I shall ask that the manifesto be printed in full in my remarks, though I read now only just the most important paragraph, which covers all the matter that needs to be considered here:

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

The full text of the manifesto is as follows:

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent out for political purposes from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, alleges that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that 40 or more of such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June, or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy, I therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, and I deny that either 40 or any other number of plural marriages have, during that period, been solemnized in our temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage took place in the Endowment House in Salt Lake City in the spring of 1889, but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony. Whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which has appeared to convey any such teaching he has been promptly reproved. And now I publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

SEPTEMBER, 1890.

That manifesto was supported by the authoritative action of the church, and polygamous marriages from that day have been discontinued. Notwithstanding all the misrepresentations that have been made with reference to that subject, this committee has not been able to find, and so far as I know no effort has been made to prove before them, that there has been a single polygamous marriage in Utah from that date until now. The people of Utah have been true to that manifesto. But what happened? In what condition were the men who had been involved in this system of marriage? They had a proposition on their hands which could not be "whistled down the wind." The proposition was this, how to conform their lives with the requirements of the law and at the same time discharge what was clearly their moral obligations to the families they had formed under this Mormon system of plural marriage. Well, death kindly solved it for some, and many have felt that it was a pity that the same solution did not come to all. I feel so. Others abandoned the women whom they had married as wives under this institution. You need not doubt it; I am not proud of it. I am merely informing you of the fact in the case, and that shall be my part of this discussion, for I feel that I can leave the legal questions to the respective sides to this controversy as represented by the majority and minority reports. But some abandonments took place. The Salt Lake Tribune, an anti-Mormon sheet, the chief storm starter in this present crusade that has swept over the land, on the 3d of January, 1894, said this:

DO THE RIGHT THING.

Regarding a little matter of which we spoke yesterday—that is, the abandonment of their plural wives and families by some former polygamists of this Territory—we have to say that if the names of any such people can be sent to the Tribune office, and the sender will give proper proof that there is no mistake about his statement, we will publish the name of any man who thus has abandoned the women and children to whom he owes the duty of supporting them. We think our friends of the Mormon press ought to join us in this. We think the Mormon Church ought to assist us, because it is a mighty reproach upon the feelings of Utah. It is, further, a mighty reproach against the church itself. Utah is in the transition state, but that transition state furnishes no justification for men to go back on obligations of humanity, which they have incurred in all apparent seriousness in the past. There is no justification for a man to refuse to do his duty under any circumstances. Under the laws of the United States it is a crime for a man to live with more than one woman at the same time as his wife. Under the laws of the Mormon Church that practice has been abandoned, and the heads of the Mormon Church have pledged their honor as to the good faith of their people in making a change. But there is nothing, either in the laws or rules of this church, which absolves a man from either assisting to care for a woman whom he has once held to be his plural wife or from seeing, as a manifest duty, that his children by said wife are fed, clothed, and educated and counseled in the right, and a man who is base enough to shirk that duty deserves, first, advertising as the renegade he is, and next, if there is any hold which the law has upon such a man, it should be enforced to make him perform his duty.

And on the following, this:

DO THE RIGHT THING.

It has come to us that certain former polygamists in this Territory, either through a mistaken idea of duty or who have taken the new order as an excuse, are utterly neglecting their former plural wives and the children of those wives, and that this, in many cases, is working extreme hardships and causing infinite sorrow.

To such men we beg to say that there has never been a time, even in the extreme bitter days of the past, when both the Tribune and the Gentiles of this region would not have cried out against injustice of that kind, and now we beg to say that we do not believe there is a man, woman, or child in Utah, of any race, color, or condition, that would not condemn such work; that would not insist that every obligation of manhood requires men so involved to do their utmost within the law to secure the comfort, happiness, and peace of mind of those involved with them; to support their former wives and to watch over, provide, and educate to their best ability their children by such wives.

It is a situation where there are bound to be some heartaches at best; the men involved should forget their own to make as light as possible the aches of those whose lives are a part of their own.

And yet for performing these very acts of humanity a man could be haled before the courts, and men in the Territorial days have been haled before the court, and condemned for just such conduct. Such are the terms of the law that men had to take other means of meeting their obligations than those described. Those other means were these: This law enacted for the Territories by the Congress of the United States did not operate in surrounding States, and consequently plural wives were located beyond the boundary where the law did operate, and there, to the best of their ability, men sustained the sacred obligations they had incurred, and at the same time undertook to live within the provisions of the law applicable to the Territory of Utah.

By these three causes—death, abandonment, and by removing such families from the Territory of Utah—plural marriages, polygamy, did cease practically in the State of Utah; and when Delegate RAWLINS, now Senator RAWLINS, upon the floor of this House declared that polygamy had practically ceased in Utah he stated that which was the truth. When he said that the Mormon Church had given up that institution and given it up and in good faith he spoke the truth; and there was no design on the part of the people of Utah or the Mormon Church to deceive the people of the United States and get statehood under false pretenses.

I come now to the settlement of this question under the statehood, under the enabling act passed by the Congress of the United States, and by the adoption of the Constitution on the part of the people of Utah. Congress made this demand of the people of Utah in the enabling act:

Said convention shall provide by ordinance, irrevocable without consent of the United States and the people of said State, first, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that the inhabitants of said State shall never molest any person or property on account of his or her religious worship, provided that polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

That was the demand on the part of the people of the United States through their representatives in the American Congress. When the representatives of the people of Utah met in convention, how did they meet the requirements of the country? They met those requirements by adopting the very language of the enabling act, and it stands in the constitution to-day as an argument irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State.

For a fuller discussion of that subject I refer members to the hearings before this committee, from page 219 to page 229, and also to the Utah State conventional debates, which were officially reported, on this question, to be found on page 1736 to page 1750, occupying some 14 pages of the public debates. Now, in the debates a resolution was brought in affecting this question; that is, in 1892 the Territory of Utah had enacted a law that practically paralleled the enactments of Congress on that subject, defining and punishing polygamy; also defining and punishing unlawful cohabitation, which is polygamous living. Mr. Varian, the last United States prosecuting attorney for the Territory, brought in a resolution which cut in two the old Territorial law of 1892, and the part of it that related to polygamy was made a part of the constitution. This not only forbade the practice of polygamy, but provided also for its punishment under this constitutional provision.

But the part of the law that related to unlawful cohabitation, which, if adopted, would have had the effect of disrupting such existing relations as were then extant in Utah, was purposely omitted from the constitution. Mr. Varian, upon the floor of the house, was asked if by omitting this part of the act of 1892 he did not thereby repeal it. He held that the law of 1892, since it paralleled the legislation of Congress and undertook to occupy a field already filled by Congressional enactments, was not valid. He said that if the law were valid, this action of the convention in effect and by implication would repeal it. But he clearly demonstrated that the only thing he desired to reach by his resolution was to prohibit plural marriages for the future, and with plural marriages prohibited by this constitution the result was that the institution of polygamy must cease to exist in the State of Utah.

That was the understanding we had of the requirements of the country. It was publicly discussed, and it filled fourteen pages of the reported debates. It was published in the papers at the time, and there never was, so far as I know, any objection made against the admission of Utah because we had not complied with the terms of the enabling act. The fact that Utah was admitted to statehood must be the proof that the terms of the contract required of us had been complied with.

Now, as to the conditions that followed statehood. This settlement of the question appeared everywhere to be satisfactory. No one complained of the conditions that existed. Men previously involved in this system of marriage were freely nominated for political offices. In 1895, when our first State election was to take place, I myself was nominated as a Democratic candidate for Congress. Another man involved in that system of marriage was nominated by the same Democratic convention to be the candidate with Senator RAWLINS for United States Senator from the State of Utah, and no objections were urged against these nominations at that time.

And so in relation to State offices, as well as to these Federal positions. Everywhere the matter was accepted as settled upon the terms fixed in the Constitution, and there was no dissenting voice from that. But in this campaign of 1898 we find ourselves confronted by another condition of things, and that is that when the Democratic State convention put in nomination the present member-elect from Utah, then suddenly, as from a cloudless sky they say a thunderbolt sometimes falls, charges were made against him which undertook to say that his nomination and election would be a violation of the understanding upon which Utah was admitted to statehood. Then, if that be true, you must find in the compact, you must find nominated in the bond itself, that Utah engaged never to send as her representative, either to the Senate or to the House of Representatives, any man who had been involved in that system of marriage; and you can not find that nominated in the bond. It does not exist.

It is part of the complaint, if not of the charge, against the member from Utah that to this attack made upon him, not by the opposing political party or any of its candidates, but by a Salt Lake newspaper, it is claimed, he made no answer, and that is true. I made no answer, except in so far as about twice or three times at most I said to the people whom I addressed during the campaign: "These charges are made against me, but you know me; you know the conditions that have prevailed here in Utah. You know all about the circumstances. I have been in public life before you for some twenty years. I am not driven to the necessity at this late day of undertaking to defend my moral character. I refer the question to you for an answer. You shall answer these charges." And they answered them by rolling up a plurality of 5,665 votes for the member from Utah out of a total vote of 67,805.

And here let me say that that plurality was not given by the Mormon people. You make a mistake if you suppose that I am here the representative of the Mormon Church and that it was the Mormon vote that sent me here as against the protesting gentile vote of the State. I call your attention to the figures and to some local facts that are very interesting in regard to this question. I carried every gentile stronghold in the State of Utah. Take, for instance, Salt Lake City, Ogden, and the mining camps of Utah. They are all known to be non-Mormon strongholds. Roberts carried Salt Lake City by 6,195 votes as against 4,564 for the Republican candidate and 1,165 for the Populist, making a plurality in that city of 1,631. Ogden was carried by Roberts by 2,122 votes as against 1,592 for the Republican candidate and 409 for the Populist, a plurality of 533 in Ogden. Consideration of the votes in the mining-camp counties is also of interest. First, take Tooele County, in which Mercur, Utah's great gold-mining camp is located. In Tooele City, almost exclusively Mormon, the Republican candidate received 237 votes, while the Democratic candidate, the supposed Mormon candidate, received but 213.

At Grantsville, with an almost exclusively Mormon population, the Republican candidate received 171 votes, while the Democratic candidate received but 157. But in the two districts of Mercur, a mining camp, and almost exclusively non-Mormon, the Democratic candidate received 243 votes and the Republican candidate but 203.

So it goes through the State, losing almost every Mormon stronghold, but sweeping every non-Mormon stronghold. And I stand here to-day elected by the gentile votes of Utah, rather than by the Mormon votes, and that, too, as reported here by your committee, after they knew all about Roberts in Utah. Yes, and knowing him, and knowing the conditions that had prevailed in Utah, I take it that they were better judges of the man they would have represent them here upon the floor of this House than you gentlemen can be, who do not know Roberts and who do not know the conditions that have prevailed in Utah.

They knew Roberts. Yes; perhaps many of them knew of his struggles from boyhood; knew how he came of an obscure family, without prestige, without property, himself bareheaded and barefooted when he came into the State; of his boyhood home that never consisted of more than two small log rooms. They knew how, late in his boyhood, he made every effort at acquiring something of book knowledge. They knew of him in mining camps and by the flaming forge, where upon the anvil he earned by the sweat of his brow the bread that he ate, and all the while making efforts in the midst of untoward circumstances to acquire an education. They knew how he persisted in his efforts until his anvil was left behind and he found his way into the forum of the people, becoming the editor of newspapers and of magazines.

They knew him as an advocate of his religious faith and the defender of his political principles, until every platform in the State rang with his voice in the maintenance of what he believed to be the right. You knew him, also, as a member of the constitutional convention which helped settle this vexed question of polygamy upon the basis of its settlement under that constitution.

What do you propose in the rejection of the member from Utah? Why, you propose to teach the inhabitants of the State of Utah a lesson! You propose to discipline them. You propose to summon them before the bar of this House and administer a rebuke.

These people, however, to whom you have proposed to administer this reproof are worthy of better treatment. They are the pioneers preeminent of the western half of the United States; they have redeemed a desert and given a State to civilization. It is part of the misrepresentation concerning them that when they left the confines of the United States it was for the purpose of establishing an independent government. That accusation is proven to be false from the fact that they had scarcely settled in the Salt Lake Valley and provided for themselves temporary homes than they sent delegates here knocking for admission into the Union. They asked you for the bread of statehood; you gave them the stone of Territorial government, and kept them under it until the year 1896. But in the meantime they were loyal to this Government; and I ask your attention to a time when they were invited to be otherwise than loyal. When the great States of the South were seceding from the Union, the Delegate from Utah was approached here in Washington and invited to lead Utah into participation in that secession. About this time, the fall of 1861, the transcontinental telegraph line reached Salt Lake. The first message sent out from Salt Lake City was—

> Utah has not seceded, but is firm for the Constitution and laws of our once happy country, and is interested in such useful enterprises as the one so far completed.

That is signed by Brigham Young. Here, also, is the utterance of one of the grandest men our State has known, a man at whose feet I may almost say I learned something about the institutions of our country. I refer to Daniel H. Wells. On the occasion of a public gathering at Salt Lake, at which some of the wrongs endured by the Mormon people were referred to, he said:

> It has been thought by some that this people, abused, maltreated, insulted, robbed, plundered, murdered, and finally disfranchised and expatriated, would naturally feel reluctant to again unite their destiny with the American Republic. * * * No wonder that it was thought by some that we would not again submit ourselves (even while we were yet scorned and ridiculed) to return to our allegiance to our country. Remember that it was by the act of our native country, not ours, that we were expatriated, and then consider the opportunity we had of forming other ties.
>
> Let this pass while we lift the veil and show the policy that dictated us. That country, that Constitution, those institutions were all ours; they are still ours. Our fathers were heroes of the Revolution. Under the master spirit of an Adams, a Jefferson, and a Washington they declared and maintained their independence, and under the guidance of the spirit of truth they fulfilled their mission whereunto they were sent from the presence of the Father. Because demagogues have arisen and seized the reins of power, should we relinquish our interest in that country made dear to us by every tie of association and consanguinity? * * * Those who have indulged such sentiments concerning us have not read Mormonism aright, for never, no never, will we desert our country's cause; never will we be found arrayed by the side of her enemies, although she may cherish them in her own bosom. Although she may launch forth the thunderbolts of war, which may return and spend their fury upon her own head, never, no never, will we permit the weakness of human nature to triumph over the love of country, our devotions to her institutions, handed down to us by our honored sires, made dear to us by a thousand recollections.

I challenge you from the archives of the Republic to produce language that breathes a purer sentiment of patriotism than is to be found in this passage I have read from one of Utah's grand old men; and I can fill your RECORD with such utterances as this. The Mormon people are not disloyal, but they are true to their country, and history will yet vindicate them. They do not deserve the rebuke that is proposed here in the measure pending before this House.

At whose behest are you called upon to administer this rebuke? What is the source of it? Why, three sectarian preachers from the State of Utah made a formal protest before the last Congress, and, I understand, before this House, against the admission of the member from Utah, and then took it upon themselves to run throughout the land and stir up religious prejudice against the Mormons, until a wonderful petition is rolled in on the floor of this House that makes members quake and tremble with fear in its presence—a petition gathered from Sabbath schools, sectarian churches, and societies. Much has been said about interference between church and state.

Suppose that the Mormon Church undertook to defeat the will of the people of a sovereign State, or that the Catholic Church undertook to do the same thing? There would be such warnings uttered, there would be such protests pronounced, against such interference of the church with the state in a purely political matter that we would be made to believe that the very foundation of the Government was in danger. But here, without protest, you permit the church to interfere with the state when the case of a Mormon is involved. I do not, however, refer to the worthiness of my people and the unworthiness of the assault that is made upon them for the purpose of influencing your action in the matter now pending before you. As I said in the commencement of this discussion, when last speaking upon the floor of this House, I am not here begging the question; I am not here asking for favors; I am not here on my own behalf, but on behalf of my people, to demand for myself and for them our constitutional rights. Clear your vision; look to the charter that should guide your action; find warrant in it for your proposed action of exclusion or expulsion if you can; and if you find it, I will walk out without complaint. You can not find it without adding qualifications for membership in this House not enumerated in the Constitution, and that you have no right to do.

If you can not find warrant in the Constitution for either of the proposed methods of unseating the member from Utah, then it becomes your duty, under the oath that you have taken and in order to be law-abiding people yourselves, to show respect for the highest law of the land, to say that the protecting ægis of the Constitution overshadows this man, and you can neither exclude him nor expel him without doing such violence to the Constitution as would menace representative government.

Some of the papers in discussing the Roberts case have said, "Brand this man with shame and send him back to his people." Mr. Speaker, I thank God that the power to brand me with shame is something quite beyond the power of this House, great as that power is. The power to brand with shame rests with each man and nowhere else. The Almighty God has conferred it upon no one else. I have lived up to this day in all good conscience in harmony with the moral teachings of the community in which I was reared and am sensible of no act of shame in my life. Brand me with shame! Why, if you finally determine either to exclude or expel me, I shall leave this august Chamber with head erect and brow undaunted and walk God's earth as the angels walk the clouds, with no sense of shame upon me. [Applause on the floor and hisses from the gallery.] And, if in response to the sectarian clamor that has been invoked against the member from Utah, you violate the Constitution of your country, either in excluding or expelling me, all the shame that there is in this case will be left behind me and rest with this House.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time has expired, and I thank the House for its attention. [Applause.]

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 1484. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone;

S. 2284. An act extending the time for the completion of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896; and

S. R. 52. Joint resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, with reference to the claim of the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company, a British corporation, for compensation of the expenses incurred in repairing the damage done to its cables and property by the United States forces during the war with Spain. I recommend that as an act of equity and comity provision be made by the Congress for reimbursement to the company of the actual expenses incurred by it in the repair of its lines and property.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 25, 1900.

The SPEAKER. The message is ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPALDING, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOX, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Leave was granted Mr. ESCH to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Hiram R. Tripp in the Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CIRCUIT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I present the following bill, H. R. 5076, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of an act to change the time and places for the district and circuit courts of the northern district of Texas, approved June 11, 1896, be, and the same is, so amended as to read as follows:

"That the United States district and circuit courts for the northern district of Texas shall be composed of the counties hereinafter named, and the terms of the said courts shall be held in each year at the time and places as follows: At Dallas, in the county of Dallas, on the third Monday in January and the fourth Monday in May; at Fort Worth, in the county of Tarrant, on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in November; at Abilene, in the county of Taylor, on the first Monday in April and the fourth Monday in October; at San Angelo, in the county of Tom Green, on the third Monday in April and the second Monday in November; at Waco, in the county of McLennan, on the fourth Monday in April and the fourth Monday in September."

SEC. 2. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

With the following committee amendments:

In the second line strike out the word "third" and insert "fourth."
In the fourth line strike out the word "October" and insert "September."
In the fifth line strike out the word "second" and insert "third."
In the seventh line strike out the word "fourth" and insert "second," and strike out the word "September" and insert "October."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEETING AT 11 O'CLOCK TO-MORROW.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for indemnity for clothing destroyed for sanitary reasons—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitting the claim of J. N. Bingham, collector of internal revenue for the district of Alabama—to the Committee on Claims, and order to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for rebuilding officers' quarters at Fort Leavenworth—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a memorial from the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, entering a protest against the ratification of an agreement for the cession of their lands—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5076) to amend the first section of "An act to change the time and places for the district and circuit courts of the northern district of Texas," approved June 11, 1896, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 101); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6636) to extend the time for presenting claims for additional bounties, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 108); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6272) fixing the salary of the postmaster at Washington City, D. C., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 109); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6060) to provide an American register for the steam whaler Bowhead, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 110); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 947) to create a new division in the eastern judicial district of the State of Tennessee, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 111); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. NORTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5440) granting a pension to Smith Jewell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 92); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2666) for the relief of John M. Laughlin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 93); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5509) to pension Malinda Jones, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 94); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5710) to increase the pension of Charles W. Jerome, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 95); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2169) granting a pension to Nelson B. Lutes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 96); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 524) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Davis, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 97); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RIXEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2322) for the relief of Joshua Bishop, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 98); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ROBB, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5969) for the relief of the devisees and legal representatives of D. L. Huskey, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 99); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1454) for the relief of William L. Orr, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 100); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Texas, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2357) for the relief of A. T. Hensley, survivor of Fulton & Hensley, doing business under the name of Lavaca Wharf Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 102); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5874) to pay H. P. Dyer for carrying mail, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 103); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred House bill 6889, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 113) for the relief of R. H. Shropshire, accompanied by a report (No. 104); which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2619) for the relief of Agnes and Maria De Leon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 105); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4451) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 106); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. OTJEN, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6909) authorizing the Secretary of State to pay the claim of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, for compensation on account of expenses incurred in repairing its Manila-Hongkong and Manila-Capiz cables, which were cut by United States forces during the war with Spain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 107); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3594) for the relief of E. H. Murrell—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 7026) for the relief of J. G. Odell—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4253) granting a pension to Mary F. Wollard—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6896) granting a pension to Rachel E. Edwards—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6897) granting a pension to Eliza Power—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3983) for the relief of the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company of Baltimore, Md.—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 6033) for the relief of James Bigler—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 681) authorizing and directing the repayment to Josiah B. Orbinson, of Donegal Township, Butler County, Pa., the sum of $300, with interest, that he paid to avoid the draft in 1863—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 5157) for the relief of the Propeller Towboat Company of Savannah—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 7073) to provide for purchase of a site and erection of a public building thereon at Bar Harbor, Me.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (by request): A bill (H. R. 7074) to amend an act of Congress dated June 28, 1898, so as to provide for an additional enrollment of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek Indians, now residing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 7075) to widen Fifteenth street, or Columbia avenue, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON (by request): A bill (H. R. 7076) to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts of the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7077) authorizing the construction of jails in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7078) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Elizabethtown, in the State of Kentucky—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the distribution of certain official documents of the Union and Confederate armies to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-sixth Congress—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 7080) to provide for an additional survey of an inland water route surveyed under act of Congress of March 3, 1873, along the margin of the Gulf of Mexico, from Donaldsonville, in Louisiana, to the Rio Grande, in Texas, by cuts and canals, as a means of military and naval defense, and for commercial purposes—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WACHTER: A bill (H. R. 7081) to aid in the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. William Smallwood and the soldiers of the Maryland Line in the war for American independence—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 7082) to provide for the purchase of certain buildings and grounds for the use of the United States Army Dispensary—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7083) for the purchase of a site for a hall of records—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 7084) to authorize the agricultural departments of the several States to use the frank of the experimental stations for official matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LYBRAND: A bill (H. R. 7085) to provide for the erection of a public building at Findlay, Ohio—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 7086) reducing the price of electricity in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 7087) granting post of Fort Supply (now abandoned) and certain lands to the Territory of Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 7088) to amend section 3878 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 7089) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Brooklyn, N. Y.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 7090) making an appropriation for completing the improvement of the road to the national cemetery near Pensacola, Fla.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNOX: A bill (H. R. 7091) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 7092) to provide for the punishment of the crime of larceny within the Territory of Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois (by request): A bill (H. R. 7093) to remove the tax on proprietary medicines, and so forth—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 7094) to establish a soldiers' home at or near Johnson City, Washington County, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 7095) to establish a Branch Home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Castle Pickney, in Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, or some other eligible site in or near that city, for the use of disabled officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army and Navy of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7096) entitling militiamen to pensions under certain circumstances—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON: A bill (H. R. 7097) to remodel the consular service of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 7098) for the extension of Columbia road east of Thirteenth street, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 7174) to authorize the purchase of the statue "America," by Cyrus Cobb—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BROMWELL: A bill (H. R. 7210) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works," approved August 13, 1894—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 7211) to place officers of the Army upon the same footing as regards retirement with officers of the Navy, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 7212) providing for the appointment of an assistant treasurer at Kansas City—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 7213) authorizing the construction of waterworks and other public utilities by cities and towns in the Indian Territory, and so forth—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD (by request): A bill (H. R. 7214) to provide protection for public-school buildings of the District of Columbia against dangers of conflagration, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GAMBLE: A bill (H. R. 7215) authorizing and directing the payment of certain moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation, in South Dakota, under the act of March 2, 1895, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (by request): A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) suspending proceedings in the courts of the Indian Territory and before the Indian agent, pending the enactment of legislation now before Congress, wherein the possessory rights of said Indians are involved—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CLAYTON of New York: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 132) to provide for the presentation of medals of honor to certain troops who volunteered their services in 1863, before the battle of Gettysburg, Pa.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KITCHIN: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) to authorize the President to appoint, as an additional cadet to the Naval Academy, David Bagley—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEVY: A resolution (H. Res. 111) calling for an itemized statement of receipts and expenditures of the island of Cuba under the direction of the War Department—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. JOY: A resolution (H. Res. 112) providing for an assistant bookkeeper in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. BULL: A resolution (H. Res. 114) authorizing the appointment of an additional official stenographer to committees—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. WACHTER: A resolution adopted by the Club Borinquin, Puerto Rican Society of Maryland, favoring the abolition of customs duties in the island of Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BERRY: A bill (H. R. 7099) to pay Samuel Lee for services in Forty-seventh Congress—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 7100) granting a pension to Daniel A. Stoke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7101) granting a pension to Aaron B. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7102) for the relief of William H. H. Simpkins—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7103) for the relief of John Conrad—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7104) for the relief of Henry J. Waidner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7105) granting a pension to George F. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7106) to remove the charge of desertion standing against James Magee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7107) for the relief of Ellis Williams Joy—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7108) granting an increase of pension to Alexander H. Sockman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7109) granting a pension to Hiram Wallace—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7110) granting a pension to Peter Runyan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7111) granting a pension to Horatio N. Cornell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7112) granting a pension to Joseph Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7113) granting a pension to Rachel E. Ford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCHRANE of New York: A bill (H. R. 7114) granting an increase of pension to John S. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7115) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of David Housel—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7116) granting a pension to Mrs. Laura J. Scofield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7117) for the relief of Napoleon P. Giddings—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7118) granting a pension to C. H. John, Company C, Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7119) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Edgar B. Willoughby, deceased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7120) granting a pension to Emeline B. Kerns, widow of William Kerns, late captain and acting quartermaster United States Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7121) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of William I. McAtee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7122) granting an increase of pension to John W. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7123) granting an honorable discharge to James Harrington—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7124) granting an honorable discharge to William Miers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7125) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Schreijer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7126) for the relief of Fred E. Ernst, executor of the will of Charles F. Ernst, late postmaster, St. Joseph, Mo.—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7127) granting an increase of pension to James Ewing—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7128) for the relief of William Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS: A bill (H. R. 7129) for the relief of Philip Brady—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7130) granting a pension to Nancy J. Kimball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7131) granting a pension to Isaac C. Hogue—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7132) granting a pension to Louisiana H. Delahay—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7133) granting pension to James O. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7134) for the relief of John Armstrong—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7135) for the relief of Franklin J. Robbins—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7136) for the relief of Michael McLaughlin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7137) granting a pension to James F. Shell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7138) for the relief of John Bost—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7139) granting a pension to John A. Link—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7140) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to examine and audit, according to equity, the claim of Grubb & Robinson, a firm consisting of Alfred B. Grubb and William H. Robinson, and of Alfred B. Grubb, for building material sold and delivered to members of the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas—to the Committie on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 7141) to remove charge of desertion from record of Luke O'Brien—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DINSMORE: A bill (H. R. 7142) for the relief of Samuel Choate, of Washington County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 7143) to grant Mary S. Callan, of Washington, D. C., an increase of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DE VRIES: A bill (H. R. 7144) granting an increase of pension to Agnes Capron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GASTON: A bill (H. R. 7145) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Slayton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 7146) granting a pension to Harriet E. Crozier, of Madison, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL: A bill (H. R. 7147) for the relief of John Ward—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7148) for the relief of James Willett—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 7149) granting a pension to Ellen W. Rice—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 7150) for the relief of Francesco Perna—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 7151) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINNEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 7152) for the relief of Nancy L. Donaldson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONG: A bill (H. R. 7153) granting an increase of pension to Harland H. Reagan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 7154) for the relief of the city of Americus, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MAY: A bill (H. R. 7155) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John J. Waterkeyn and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. METCALF: A bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Juliet C. Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7157) to increase the pension of William H. Dixon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7158) to increase the pension of Levi S. Parrott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7159) to increase the pension of Wesley C. Sawyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7160) to increase the pension of Frederick M. Hahn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7161) granting a pension to Henry Eastham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7162) granting a pension to Catherine C. Lay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Margaret C. Hart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7164) granting a pension to Emery Burk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7165) granting a pension to James G. Bowland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7166) granting a pension to John Rabe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 7167) to pay Sarah A. Burton the purchase price of real estate reverted to the Government—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7168) to pay Allen C. Burton the purchase price of real estate reverted to the Government—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7169) granting a pension to Frederick L. Killion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7170) granting a pension to Samuel Letzer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7171) granting a pension to Paris F. Skirvin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARSH: A bill (H. R. 7172) granting a pension to Mrs. Candace M. Reed, of Quincy, Ill., for services as army nurse during the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 7173) for the relief of J. Walter Smith, of Tracy City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 7175) granting a pension to Adelaide M. McIntosh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7176) granting a pension to John D. Powell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7177) granting a pension to John N. Breed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7178) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Robert Downing—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7179) granting a pension to Clarence S. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 7180) to increase the pension of Amelia A. Taylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 7181) for the relief of estate of John M. Malone, deceased, late of Sumner County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7182) for the relief of Richard P. Blackistone—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7183) for the relief of John Leiper—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7184) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin D. Carpenter, deceased, late of Brightwood, D. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 7185) granting a pension to Maria Stephens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHATTUC: A bill (H. R. 7186) for the relief of Sylvester Doss, alias Harry S. Doss, late pilot United States ram Lancaster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 7187) granting a pension of Joseph McComb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7188) granting a pension to Chauncey Lewis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7189) granting a pension to Warren Luce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7190) to increase the pension of George O. Cole—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7191) granting an increase of pension to Edwin A. Botsford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOMPKINS: A bill (H. R. 7192) to grant a pension to Patrick Doyle—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to David Carroll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WATERS: A bill (H. R. 7194) for the relief of Frederick B. Mallory, jr.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 7195) for the relief of Robert M. Lay, administrator of Nancy Lay, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7196) for the relief of R. R. McMullen, administratrix of Thomas J. McMullen, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7197) for the relief of Smith Summers, administrator of John Waters, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7198) for the relief of L. B. Day, administrator of Carolinus Boyd, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 7199) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Gower—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of Albert Griffeth—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7201) to increase the pension of John M. Stevens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7202) granting a pension to Wiley Causey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 7203) granting a pension to Thomas F. Walter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 7204) for the relief of William Gregory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 7205) to correct the military record of Daniel Graebes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7206) to correct the military record of Francis Remline—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7207) to correct the record of James William Harvey, who was a seaman in the United States Navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 7208) for the relief of J. R. D. Morrison—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'GRADY: A bill (H. R. 7209) to pension Daniel B. Hadley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARBER: A bill (H. R. 7216) for relief of James W. Allen—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRUMP: A bill (H. R. 7217) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Arnold P. Lane—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7218) to increase the pension of David Petu, Company A, One hundred and eighty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, now totally blind—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDGELY: A bill (H. R. 7219) for the relief of Adelbert D. Lee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of a convention of fruit growers of California, Edward Berwick, chairman, for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ADAMS: Petition of F. S. McCartney and others, of Philadelphia, Pa., for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of clerks employed in the post-office at Baltimore, Md., for the classification of clerks in post-offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELL: Petition of the publisher of the Otero County (Colo.) Democrat, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois: Petitions of John Blocki & Son and others, of Chicago, Ill., asking for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRENNER: Petition of the publisher of the Democrat, Hamilton, Ohio, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURKE of Texas: Petition of H. Galbraith, editor, of Terrell, Tex., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petitions of citizens of Bar Harbor, Me., for an appropriation for the erection of a post-office building at Bar Harbor—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of Owen Scott, publisher, Decatur, Ill., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Petition of John R. Snyder and others, for amendment of pension laws giving a pensionable status to members of the Missouri Enrolled Militiamen who performed over ninety days of military service during the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of numerous citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Missouri, for the expulsion of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. COONEY: Petition of P. W. Van Dyhn, publisher, of Marshall, Mo., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CRAWFORD: Petition of the Lanier Club, of Tryon, N. C., for the rejection or expulsion of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: Petition of 201 clerks in the New York post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351, for the reclassification of postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of post-office clerks at Pittsburg, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351, for the reclassification of postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of H. B. McKenzie, of the Times-Herald, Palatka, Fla., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: Petition of employees of the Fort Dodge (Iowa) post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of publishers of Boone County, Iowa, favoring the passage of House bill No. 5029, relative to the free entry of wood pulp imported for use in the manufacture of paper—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DRIGGS: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Luke O'Brien—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FLYNN: Petition of the publisher of the Leader, Guthrie, Okla., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GAMBLE: Paper to accompany House bill No. 3074, for the relief of Michael Ackerman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GORDON: Petition of the publisher of the Troy (Ohio) Democrat, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GROUT: Papers to accompany House bill No. 5869, granting a pension to George S. Hubbard, of Montpelier, Vt.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Rev. George E. Cooley and 53 citizens of Rutland, Vt., favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 34, for the prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of George W. Young, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., favoring the repeal of the bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Home Market Club of Boston, Mass., relative to the reciprocity interests of the country—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of Mahlon Kratz and others, of Philadelphia, Pa., asking for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petitions of W. L. McEwen and others, B. C. Barnes and others, John Gammons and others, J. N. Gean and others, D. N. Howe and others, all in the State of Iowa, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. HITT: Letter of Miss Susan B. Anthony, together with a petition from citizens of Duquoin, Ill., asking that perfect equality of rights, civil and political, shall be secured to the women of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Resolutions of the Real Estate Board of the city of Seattle, Wash., relating to beach or shore lands of Alaska, for the prohibition of mining claims by powers of attorney, and for the division of Alaska into judicial districts—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. LENTZ: Petition of Frank Harper, editor, Mount Vernon, Ohio, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCALL: Papers in support of House bill for the relief of John N. Breed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill granting Clarence S. Hall a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill for the relief of John D. Powell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Adilcide M. McIntosh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of post-office clerks of Medford, Mass., in favor of the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, urging Congress to provide better quarters for law library of Congress—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, papers to accompany bill to place officers of the Army upon the same footing as regards the retirement with officers of the Navy, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McDOWELL: Petition of the publisher of the Ohio Democrat, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MEEKISON: Petition of N. R. Webster, publisher, of Defiance, Ohio, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MERCER: Petition of the Haller Proprietary Company, of Blair, Nebr., relating to the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Paper of George D. Greene, register United States land office, Helena, Mont., relating to the claim of Sarah A. Burton—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, paper of George D. Greene, of Helena, Mont., relating to the claim of Allen C. Burton—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Frederick L. Killion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Samuel Setzer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper in support of House bill for the relief of Paris F. Skirvin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: Petition of the patrons of the public schools of the District of Columbia for provision for protection against fire by the installation therein of an adequate system of manual and automatic fire-alarm devices—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6914, granting a pension to Elliott Loomis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill No. 6915, for the relief of William C. Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Petition of clerks in the post-office at Sandusky, Ohio, in favor of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of the publishers of the Journal and Local, of Sandusky, Ohio, Spirit of Democracy, Woodsfield, Ohio, and the Ohio News, Bucyrus, Ohio, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'GRADY: Petition of E. M. Upton & Co., of Hilton, N. Y., relating to dairy and food products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. POLK: Petition of P. Gray Meek, editor, for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Petition of citizens of the town of Barton, N. Y., for legislation relating to dairy or food products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Maria Stephens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBB: Petition of Smith & Purcell, publishers, of Fredericktown, Mo., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana: Petition of H. C. Rockhill, of the Journal-Gazette, Fort Wayne, Ind., urging the passage of House bill No. 5029, to put wood pulp and printing paper on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RUCKER: Petition of J. G. Gallemore, editor, Salisbury, Mo., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: Petitions of W. E. Ginnes, of Kenton, Ky., and J. Q. Thompson & Co., publishers, Washington, D. C., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHITE: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of David Carroll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Wiley Causey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill to correct the military record of George W. Gower—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of L. A. Roberts, of Fairfield, Ill., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi: Petition of L. B. Day, administrator of Caroline Boyd, deceased, to refer claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of R. R. McMullen, administrator of the estate of Thomas J. McMullen, deceased, late of Mississippi, to refer claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Smith Summers, administrator of John Waters, deceased, late of the State of Mississippi, for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Robert M. Lay, administrator of Nancy Lay, deceased, praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ZIEGLER: Petition of the publisher of the Gazette, York, Pa., for relief from the paper trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

REPORT ON COPPER RIVER EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, the report of Capt. W. R. Abercrombie, on the Copper River exploring expedition to Alaska. As it is quite voluminous and there are charts to be printed, the Chair thinks it should go to the Committee on Printing. It will be so referred.

AGREEMENT WITH CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and one from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the agreement entered into with the Crow Indians of Montana by the commissioners appointed under the act of June 10, 1896, etc.; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1933) to provide an American register for the steam whaler Bowhead.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1806) for the relief of W. W. Riley; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone;

A bill (S. 2284) extending the time for the completion of a wagon road and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 52) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of the Live Stock Exchange of South Omaha, Nebr., praying that the tax on notes and mortgages given to secure loans on live stock be the first to be removed in the readjustment of the revenue law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented sundry papers in support of the bill (S. 2351) granting a pension to Joseph W. Skelton; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I present a petition of the mayor, the aldermen, and sundry citizens of Frederick, Md., praying that an appropriation of $200,000 be made to be paid to the mayor and aldermen of that city by way of indemnity for loss and injuries suffered by reason of ransom which that city was compelled to pay Gen. Jubal A. Early July 9, 1864. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the mayor and aldermen and the citizens of Frederick, in the State of Maryland, respectfully represents as follows:

During the late civil war the Confederate army of invasion under Gen. Jubal A. Early exacted from the municipality of Frederick, on July 9, 1864, the sum of $200,000 as a ransom of the town from pillage and burning by the invading forces. This was an extraordinary measure of reprisal and retaliation adopted in consequence of the destruction of property by the Union Army in the valley of Virginia, and it was inflicted upon Frederick as a border town of uncompromising loyalty. It constituted a grievous and excessive imposition which drained the resources of the municipality, and to which it submitted as the only means of saving the homes and property of its citizens.

At the time of the invasion the town was utterly destitute of defense. A large number of its able-bodied men were off at the front in the ranks of the Union armies. It had urgently sought, but failed to receive, Federal protection. The force specially organized by the State of Maryland for the purpose of home defense, and which would otherwise have been available in this emergency, had been appropriated by the National Government and sent beyond the borders of the State to engage in the general military operations then in progress. Having been left thus exposed and defenseless, Frederick was compelled to bear the brunt of the hostile incursion.

For more than a generation this municipality has borne the burden of the bonded debt resulting from the Confederate levy. The payments on account of interest alone have far exceeded the original exaction, while the debt itself remains as a subsisting obligation. The existence of this burden is an oppression to the citizens and an obstacle to municipal improvements. It involves a continuing sacrifice by the people of Frederick on account of their loyalty to the Union in the time of its greatest trial.

The citizens of Frederick faithfully performed their duty of defending the Union, but the Government failed to discharge its duty of protecting the town. Justice requires that reparation should be made by the Government to the municipality for the loss it has thus sustained.

Your memorialists therefore pray that a bill may be passed by your honorable bodies appropriating the sum of $200,000, to be paid to the mayor and aldermen of Frederick by way of indemnity for the loss and injury described in this memorial.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a memorial of the Jewelry Tariff Committee of Rhode Island and Massachusetts, remonstrating against the ratification of the French treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Young People's Christian Union of Chapel Corners, Cumberland, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Soldiers' Homes, immigrant stations, and all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of John W. Barrett and 20 other letter carriers of Springfield, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the pay of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut presented a petition of the Mattatuck Drug Company and sundry other druggists of Waterbury, Conn., and a petition of the Vass Chemical Company and the Argol Company, of Danbury, Conn., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHILTON presented the petition of Jesse I. Carter and sundry other railway mail clerks, of Marshall, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAFFERY presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of Mitchell F. Jamar; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCOMAS presented a petition of the mayor and city council of Annapolis, Md., praying that the United States Government acquire certain property in that city to be used as an annex to the Naval Academy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented the petition of Mrs. Jennie L. Allen and Miss Evelyn M. Chapman, secretary of Grange No. 1, Patrons of Husbandry, of Fredonia, N. Y., praying that political equality be granted to the women of Hawaii; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

WIND RIVER RESERVATION, WYO.

Mr. WARREN. I present a brief and argument in behalf of the claims of the settlers on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., for improvements made before the creation of that reservation and when the land was a part of the public domain. I move that the paper be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF NURSERY STOCK.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] presented the petition of C. L. Watrous and other scientists, entomologists, nurserymen, and orchardists of the country, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2571, to provide rules and regulations governing the importation of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, cuttings, grafts, etc., which he intended to ask to have printed. It is very short, and I move that the petition be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6237) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a written report thereon. I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to-morrow morning after the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 41) for the relief of August Bolten, of New York City, and Gustave Richelieu, of Boston, Mass., American seamen, to report it without amendment and to submit a report thereon.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to state that that is not a unanimous report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 2334) to authorize Hon. Arthur S. Hardy, at present envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Greece, Roumania, and Servia, to accept the decoration tendered to him by the Shah of Persia while he was minister of the United States to that country; and

A bill (S. 2022) to authorize Rear-Admiral William T. Sampson, United States Navy; Capt. Henry C. Taylor, United States Navy; Capt. Francis A. Cook, United States Navy; Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee, United States Navy; Capt. French E. Chadwick, United States Navy; Capt. Caspar F. Goodrich, United States Navy; Commander William W. Mead, United States Navy; Commander James H. Dayton, United States Navy; Commander Frederick M. Symonds, United States Navy, and Commander Chapman C. Todd, United States Navy, to accept orders and decorations tendered to them by the Government of Venezuela.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 630) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet D. Newson, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. DEBOE), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2505) granting an increase of pension to James C. Carlton, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. MCCUMBER), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2158) granting a pension to Joseph B. Presdee; and

A bill (S. 1548) granting a pension to James Byrne.

Mr. MCENERY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 903) authorizing the President to place on the retired list of the Navy, as chief engineer, the name of P. J. McMahon, late chief engineer in the United States Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom were referred the following joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A joint resolution (S. R. 3) granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 60) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of Gen. Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States.

ALASKA SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Fisheries, I desire to present the report of Howard M. Kutchin, special agent of the Treasury Department, on the protection of the salmon fisheries in Alaska, with an accompanying resolution for printing the report. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing. I will state that the salmon fisheries of Alaska have increased very greatly; that it is a very important industry of the country, and the report is full of interest to those who desire the development of this great fishing interest in Alaska.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of Howard M. Kutchin, special agent of the Treasury Department, for the season 1899, on the protection of the Alaska salmon fisheries, be printed and that 500 additional copies be printed and bound in paper covers for the use of the Treasury Department.

REPORT ON FORESTRY IN SWEDEN.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. NELSON December 11, 1899, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 20,000 copies of the report on forestry in Sweden, made to the Department of State by Gen. C. C. Andrews, late minister at Stockholm, be printed for the use of the Senate; the said report to be revised by the author.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2662) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Gigax (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2663) granting an increase of pension to Charles Gilman; and

A bill (S. 2664) granting an increase of pension to Sebald V. Schlessinger (with accompanying papers).

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2665) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2666) for the relief of James Broiles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2667) to establish a library post; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 2668) for the relief of Mary L. McCormick;

A bill (S. 2669) for the relief of Isaac W. Busey;

A bill (S. 2670) for the relief of Ann R. Widmayer; and

A bill (S. 2671) for the relief of Lloyd W. Emmart.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 2672) to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts of the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest that as it relates to a change in the boundaries of two judicial districts in the Indian Territory, it should go to the Judiciary Committee instead of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BAKER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 2673) for the relief of volunteer officers and soldiers who served in the Philippine Islands beyond the period of their enlistment; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2674) for the relief of Edwin S. Metcalf; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Peter H. Mosby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2676) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Sherman, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2677) for the relief of William L. Orr; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2678) to incorporate the East Washington and Bennings Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2679) declaring certain trestles of the Washington County Railroad Company to be lawful structures; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MCCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 2680) for the relief of the widow and children of John Hamilton, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $71,225 for the support of the Indian Training School at Grand Junction, Colo., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $120,000 for the construction and equipment of suitable buildings in connection with the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I give notice of an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii. I ask that it may be read, printed, and, as the bill has been reported, lie on the table.

The amendment was read, and ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Strike out section 95 and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

"That until further legislation by Congress the existing customs relations of the Hawaiian Islands with the United States shall remain unchanged."

Also strike out the following:

"SEC. 87. That a delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve during each Congress, shall be elected by the voters qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives of the legislature. The times, places, and manner of holding elections shall be as fixed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the governor duly elected, and a certificate shall be given accordingly."

GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I also give notice of an amendment I intend to propose to the bill (S. 2264) to provide a government for the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. I ask that it may be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

The amendment was read, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Strike out section 8, and in lieu thereof insert as follows:

"That on and after the passage of this act, and until further legislation by Congress, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles of merchandise, being the product of the soil or industry of the island of Puerto Rico, shipped direct from said island to ports in the customs districts of the United States a sum equivalent to 80 per cent of the customs duties levied upon like articles imported into the United States from foreign countries; and on and after the passage of this act, and until further legislation by Congress, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles of merchandise, being the product of the soil or industry of the United States, shipped direct from said ports in the customs districts of the United States to the island of Puerto Rico a sum equivalent to 80 per cent of the customs duties levied upon like articles imported into the island of Puerto Rico from foreign countries: Provided, That duties collected on such articles of merchandise shipped from the island of Puerto Rico into the United States under the provisions of this section shall be held in the Treasury of the United States as a separate fund to be used under the direction of the President of the United States for the government and benefit of the island."

Also strike out the following:

"SEC. 36. That the qualified voters of the island shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1900, and every two years thereafter, choose one Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, who shall be entitled to a seat, but not to vote, in that body, on the certificate of election of the governor of the island: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide inhabitant of the island, and who is not 30 years of age and possessed of property in his own right situated in the island of the value of at least $2,000."

ELECTION OF SENATORS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, soon after the beginning of the session I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 27) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States by a vote of the people. I asked that it might lie on the table temporarily, intending at the time to have made some remarks upon it, but I have reason to believe that the committee will make a report on the joint resolution some time during the present session, and I wish to express the hope that the committee will make a report one way or the other, so as to give the Senate an opportunity to vote on it. Therefore I have determined not to make the remarks until the report is made, and I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution, having been read twice, will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

LIST OF SPECIAL ACTS GRANTING PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, some days ago I presented a statement from the Commissioner of Pensions showing the special acts of Congress passed since March 4, 1861, granting pensions to commissioned officers and widows of commissioned officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. At the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], the document was laid on the table for the purpose of having a further statement made by the Commissioner, showing the special acts granting pensions prior to the date of March 4, 1861.

I am in receipt of a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions stating that that is a work of importance, involving an examination of all the statutes from the Revolutionary period until 1861, and it will take a considerable length of time to complete it. He expressed the wish that the statement I then presented and which was laid on the table, should be printed as a document, there being a considerable call for it from different parts of the country.

I ask that that statement may be printed as a document, with the promise that when the added information is received I will likewise ask that it shall be printed as a document.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that is exactly right, Mr. President. I think we ought to have the other statement, and then, having this one, the two will give us a complete history of the whole matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATEMENT OF PENSIONERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have likewise in my hand a communication, dated January 10, 1900, from the Commissioner of Pensions, which contains a great deal of valuable information. For instance, it shows the number of pensioners on the rolls for all of the wars, commencing with the Revolutionary war, and it gives an explanation of the laws relating to these different classes of pensioners, giving information that will be very valuable to Senators when they come to investigate the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the Senator have it printed as a Senate document.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to ask not only that, but as the communication is comparatively brief, that it be printed in the RECORD, and that it likewise be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS, OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER.
Washington, January 10, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your inquiry relative to schedule of pensioning for the several wars, I have the honor to state that for and on account of the Revolutionary war on June 30, 1899, there were borne on the pension rolls 4 widows, 7 daughters.

Pensions of $8 per month for the surviving widows of soldiers who served for fourteen days or more during the war of the Revolution or who were in any engagement during said war are provided for by the act of March 9, 1878. Disloyalty is not a bar to pension under this law.

The pension of widows was increased to $12 per month by the act of March 19, 1886.

The daughters referred to as being borne on the pension rolls were pensioned by special acts of Congress.

WAR OF 1812.

There were borne on the pension rolls on June 30, 1899, 1 survivor, 1,998 widows.

The act of February 14, 1871, now sections 4736 and 4737 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, provided a pension of $8 per month for soldiers and sailors who served sixty days or more and were honorably discharged or who are personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in that war and the surviving widows of such persons, but title would be barred in consequence of disloyalty during the civil war.

In order to secure title under this law a widow must have married soldier or sailor prior to the treaty of peace.

This law was amended by act of March 9, 1878, which removed disloyalty as a bar, as well as the time of marriage, and provided for fourteen days' service only, or engagement in any battle, and honorable discharge of soldier or sailor.

The rate of pension for widows was increased to $12 per month by the act of March 19, 1886.

For law relative to pension for disability see statement following Mexican war.

INDIAN WARS, 1832-1842.

There were borne on the rolls on June 30, 1899, 1,656 survivors, 3,889 widows.

The act of July 27, 1892, provided a pension of $8 per month for the surviving officers and enlisted men who served thirty days or more in certain designated Indian wars, and were honorably discharged, and such other officers, soldiers, and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in such wars, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, provided such widows have not remarried.

Pensions under this act are for the natural lives of the grantees, subject, however, to dropping if obtained by fraud.

Disloyalty during civil war is not a bar to pension under this law.

For law as to pensions for disability see statement following Mexican war.

MEXICAN WAR.

On June 30, 1899, there were borne on the rolls 9,204 survivors, 8,175 widows.

The act of January 29, 1887, provides a pension of $8 per month for the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who, being duly enlisted, actually served sixty days or more with the Army or Navy in Mexico or on the coasts or frontier thereof or en route thereto or were engaged in a battle and were honorably discharged, and to such other soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said war, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, provided that such widows have not remarried.

Under this act no title exists unless the officer, enlisted man, or widow is 62 years of age or upward, except in case of a survivor under the age of 62 years, who, at the date of filing claim, is disabled or dependent equivalent to some cause recognized by the pension laws.

In case of a widow under 62 years of age it must be shown that she is dependent in order to give her title.

Disloyalty is not a bar under this act, except in cases of officers and enlisted men, where the claim is made when under 62 years of age and on account of a disability contracted while in any manner voluntarily engaged in aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

The act of January 5, 1893, provided for increase of pension named in act of January 29, 1887, to $12 per month to officers and enlisted men when it is shown that they are wholly disabled for manual labor and in such destitute circumstances that $8 per month is insufficient to provide the necessaries of life. This act provides only for those persons who were on the rolls at the time of its passage—i. e., January 5, 1900.

Pensions for disabilities incurred in service and line of duty prior to March 4, 1861.

INVALID.

Soldiers and sailors who incurred disabilities in service and line of duty prior to March 4, 1861, and subsequent to the war of the Revolution, are governed, so far as rates of pension allowed, by the provisions of the general laws, and a soldier or sailor who incurred a disability in the Mexican war in the line of duty, or in any other naval or military service in the line of duty prior to March 4, 1861, and subsequent to the war of the Revolution, is entitled to the same rate as if a like disability was incurred in service and line of duty subsequent to March 4, 1861.

If disability was incurred subsequent to the war of the Revolution and prior to March 4, 1861, the rates are equalized from and after July 25, 1866. (See section 4712, Revised Statutes of United States.)

The law further provides, in cases of this character, that the pension, if allowed, shall commence from the date of discharge, if the claim is filed within three years from the time the right accrued; otherwise the pension is made to commence from the date of filing the last paper necessary to establish the claim.

Where pensions were granted in consequence of disabilities incurred in service and line of duty prior to March 4, 1861, and the pensioners were residents of States then in arms against the Government of the United States, their names were stricken from the rolls, under the provisions of the acts of February 4, 1862, and March 2, 1867, subject to the right of restoration upon showing that they had not in any manner aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, and were in favor of its suppression. For example, a soldier who lost an arm in battle during the war with Mexico and was pensioned at the rate provided for under the then existing laws, and whose name was dropped from the rolls under the provisions of the acts above cited, upon application for restoration and upon furnishing proof of loyalty would be entitled to restoration from the date of last payment of that pension, and to an increase of the rates from and after July 25, 1866, as provided for soldiers and sailors who incurred disabilities of a like character subsequent to March 4, 1861.

At the present time, if the arm had been amputated at the shoulder joint or so near the shoulder joint as to prevent the use of an artificial arm, his rate would be $45 per month; if amputated at or above the elbow, $36 per month, and if below the elbow, $30 per month. In the case herein cited, if the soldier is unable to prove his loyalty, as required by the general law, he has title to pension under the act of January 29, 1887, at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of that act, and if his name was on the rolls on January 5, 1893, he may, under the conditions set forth in the act of January 5, 1893, be entitled to $12 per month.

Pensions on account of disabilities contracted in the military or naval service of the United States subsequent to March 4, 1861.

GENERAL LAW.

There were borne on the pension rolls on June 30, 1899, 321,555 invalids, 92,901 widows and other dependents.

These figures represent many pensions which were granted by special act. The rate allowed for widows under the general law ranges from $8 to $30 per month, dependent upon the date of marriage or the rank of the soldier or sailor, and $2 per month for each child of soldier under age of 16 years.

Under the terms of the general law, pensions granted to invalid pensioners range from $6 to $100 per month, according to the nature and extent of the disability. As a basis of rating under the general law for minor disabilities, the Bureau, with the sanction of the Department, has established a rating of $8 per month for an anchylosed wrist or ankle or a disability equivalent thereto. From this basis a comparative rating is given for disabilities of a less degree, to wit, $6, $4, $2, according to the lesser degree of disability, and for disabilities in excess of this basis a higher rating is given up to $17 per month, which is the highest rating allowed by law for one or more disabilities which combined (i. e., the rating) do not produce a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot. For the latter disability the rate is fixed by law at $24 per month.

The rating for minor disabilities may be added together until they aggregate $17 per month, after which the combined disabilities must disable equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot, when the rate of $24 is given. A higher rate than $24 can not be allowed unless the combined disabilities produce incapacity for performing manual labor, when a rate of $30 is provided by law. The next rate is $50 per month, where pensioner requires periodical aid and attendance; then $72 when regular aid and attendance is required. There are also the specific ratings provided for total deafness, total disability of a hand or a foot, and the various amputations, at $30, $36, $45, and $100 per month.

Prior to March 2, 1895, pensions under the general law were granted at a less rate than $6 per month, but on that date Congress passed an act increasing all pensioners drawing less than $6 per month to $6 per month, and all pensioners who were then on the rolls at a less rate than $6 were increased to $6. Under the general law, since the passage of the act of March 2, 1895, where a pensioner had a disability of service origin which entitled him to a rating of less than $6 per month, he was granted the amount provided by the act of March 2, 1895, i. e., $6 per month.

ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890.

There were borne on the pension rolls on June 30, 1899, 420,912 invalids, 130,236 widows and other dependents.

The rate allowed widows under this act is $8 per month, with an increase of $2 for each minor child of the soldier under 16 years of age. The rate granted dependent parents is dependent upon the rank of the soldier in the service, but in no case is it less than $12 per month.

The basis of rating applicants for invalid pensions under this act is incapacity to labor, joined with incapacity to earn a support, and the grades of rating are dependent upon these two conditions. The act provides that the pension shall not exceed $12 per month, and shall not be less than $6, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support. Under this law the Bureau has fixed intermediate rates of $8 and $10 per month for intermediate degrees of inability to earn a support by manual labor.

In fixing the ratings under this act all disabilities of a permanent character not due to vicious habits are considered. The practice is to weigh each disability and determine the degree that each disability or the combined disabilities disable the claimant from earning a support by manual labor, and a rate corresponding to this degree is allowed.

A claimant who has attained the age of 65 years is deemed entitled to at least the minimum ($6) rate of pension, unless the evidence discloses an unusual vigor and ability for the performance of manual labor in one of that age. Where the claimant has reached the age of 75 years the maximum ($12) rate is granted for senility alone. Between the ages of 65 years and 75 years the age of claimant enters in as a factor in determining the rate.

To distinguish between the methods of rating under the general law and the act of June 27, 1890:

First, the general law. The ratings for each disability are added together in order to determine the rate that the claimant would be entitled to from $6 up to and including $17.

Second, under the act of June 27, 1890. All the disabilities of a permanent character, not due to vicious habits, from which the claimant is found to be suffering are taken into consideration as a whole in arriving at the degree of his inability to earn a support by manual labor. In one case, the general law, the rates are aggregated; in the other case, the act of June 27, 1890, the disabilities are aggregated and the effect of such aggregated disabilities upon his capacity to perform manual labor is the criterion.

To cite an example: A claimant who was suffering from rheumatism in a degree which under the general law would entitle him to a rate of $6 per month; diarrhea, which would entitle him to a rate of $4 per month, and the loss of a finger, entitling him to $2 per month, would be entitled, under the practice prevailing in general law claims, to have the rating for such disabilities combined, and would be granted a rate of $12 per month, while, in considering the same disabilities in a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, all of such disabilities would be considered together and their combined effect upon the claimant's ability to perform manual labor would govern this Bureau in fixing the rate to which he would be entitled.

It is deemed proper to invite attention to the fact that the rate of pension under the general law for those who are totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor is $30 per month, while under the act of June 27, 1890, for a like condition the rate is fixed at $12 per month.

There were also borne on the pension rolls on June 30, 1899, 653 nurses, who have been placed there either by special act or under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1892.

Very respectfully,

H. CLAY EVANS,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate.

COLLECTION OF REVENUE IN DEPENDENCIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate full and exact copies of all proclamations and orders that have been issued or made respecting the collection of customs, internal, and other revenues in the islands of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Archipelago since the seizure thereof by the Government of the United States, the rate of such customs, internal, and other revenues, the total amount thereof, a list of the person or persons engaged in such service, where stationed, respectively, and how such customs, internal, and other revenues have been and are being disbursed, and whether the same or any portion thereof have been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

And the Secretary of War is further hereby directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence relating to the collection of the customs, internal, and other revenues in said islands since the seizure thereof by the Government of the United States to this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not fully catch the reading of the resolution, and I do not know that I should have understood it if I had. I ask that it may go over and be printed. I do not know that there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

SEIZURE OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask that it be read and go over until to-morrow, and then I should like to have it passed.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas food products are not in their nature instruments of warfare; and

Whereas the United States is the greatest producer of such products in the world, and it is therefore essential to our prosperity that these products be freely sold and delivered wherever purchased; and

Whereas to permit such products to be declared contraband of war and subject to seizure by foreign nations at war among themselves would work irreparable injury to the great body of our agricultural population: Therefore,

Resolved, That the United States of America will not recognize the right of any nation to declare food products contraband of war or to seize such products belonging to citizens of the United States or being transported in vessels owned by citizens of the United States, and that any such seizure will be deemed by this Government an act unfriendly to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1806) for the relief of W. W. Riley, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

GEORGE W. WESTON.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 32) for the relief of George W. Weston. It is a bill that will not provoke discussion, it having passed the Senate during the Fifty-fifth Congress. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is the morning business completed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is completed, but there is a resolution offered by the Senator from South Dakota which comes over from a former day. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. The bill will be read for information, if there be no objection.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to George W. Weston, late postmaster of Exeter, N. H., $281.21, that amount being the balance due him for moneys deposited in the National Granite State Bank of Exeter, N. H., during the month of July, 1893, and immediately preceding the failure of that bank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREATY OR AGREEMENT WITH SULTAN OF SULU.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate a copy of the report and all accompanying papers of Brig. Gen. John C. Bates in relation to the negotiation of a treaty or agreement made by him with the Sultan of Sulu on the 20th day of August, 1899. Said treaty provides that the United States Government will pay the following monthly salaries:

	Per month.
To the Sultan	$250
To Dato Rajah Muda	75
To Dato Attik	60
To Dato Calbe	75
To Dato Joakanain	75
To Dato Puyo	60
To Dato Amir Haissin	60
To Hadji Butu	50
To Habid Mura	40
To Serif Saguin	15

Out of what fund are these salaries paid? What services do these people perform for the United States that entitles them to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States? And are these officers, or any of them, under the civil service?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to modify the resolution by striking out from the last paragraph the clause:

And are these officers, or any of them, under the civil service?

Then I wish to insert at the top of page 2 of the resolution the words:

And the President is further requested to inform the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify his resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Sulu group of islands are located between the island of Borneo and the island of Mindanao, of the Philippine group. They are 150 in number. These islands were conquered by the Mohammedans about eight centuries ago, and they have maintained, as long as we have any history of them, a government of their own, having an absolute monarch for a ruler. Spain claimed ownership over these islands, and has undertaken at various times to take possession of them. Her power and authority reached the distance only from the shores of the islands which could be traversed by projectiles from the cannon of her fleet. These people have been pirates and slaveholders and polygamists from the earliest record of their transactions.

In 1876 Spain undertook to conquer their islands and assert her authority over them, but the effort failed; and finally the aggressive powers entered into a treaty with the Sultan by which Spain was to keep an officer representing that Government and a small number of troops at the capital of the Sulu group. The Sultan agreed to recognize the suzerainty of the King of Spain and promised to suppress piracy. He received from Spain certain salaries as compensation for his recognition of the suzerainty of the King of Spain.

Whether or not the commissioners at Paris knew what they were buying I can not tell; but in some way we purchased the entire group, including all the Philippines; and we now find that the Sultan not only has the Sulu group under his jurisdiction and control, but also the large island of Mindanao, embracing an area as large as the State of Indiana, and also the island of Palawan. These two islands, or portions of them, nearly their whole area, are under the immediate control of a subsultan, who owes some sort of allegiance to the Sultan of the Sulu Islands.

The island of Mindanao has never been explored by the white people, and it was never under the jurisdiction of Spain, except that two or three of its coast ports were occupied by that power. In our treaty with Spain we take title to this entire group, as well as to the Philippines. Last summer we made a new agreement with these people, which I desire to read in order that it may go in the RECORD. I will read first this dispatch from Manila, dated July 12, 1899:

Manila special, July 12, 1899.

General Bates, in the capacity of agent of the United States Government, sailed for Jolo this morning to negotiate with the Sultan of Jolo regarding the future relations of the Jolo (or Sulu) Archipelago, including the Basilans, as a naval station. The Sultan assumes that the Jolos reverted to him, the evacuation of the Spaniards nullifying the treaty of 1878. General Bates will explain to the Sultan that the Americans succeeded the Spaniards in the treaty, assuming its obligations and continuing the annuities it provides for. He will also present to the Sultan $10,000 in Mexican money as an evidence of good will. The local administration of the Jolos will remain unchanged. The Sultan will enforce the law, and will also be expected to fly the American flag continuously and cooperate with America to maintain order and suppress piracy. The Sultan will retain possession of the pearl fishing and the island trade, which will be conducted in such a way as to forward the development of the resources of the islands for the mutual benefit of Americans and natives.

General Bates then entered into the following agreement:

Agreement between Brig. Gen. John C. Bates, representing the United States, of the one part, and His Highness the Sultan of Sulu, the Dato Rajah Muda, the Dato Attik, the Dato Kalki, and the Dato Joakanain, of the other part; it being understood that this agreement will be in full force only when approved by the Governor-General of the Philippine Islands and confirmed by the President of the United States and will be subjected to future modifications by the mutual consent of the parties in interest.

I deem it proper to state that this agreement has been confirmed by the President of the United States in a letter transmitting the treaty to the Senate. However, this is a treaty apparently with a quasi sovereign power, over which the Senate, according to our new doctrine of imperialism, has no other authority and no control, and it requires no ratification by the Senate and no consideration on our part.

ARTICLE 1. The sovereignty of the United States over the whole archipelago of Sulu and its dependencies is declared and acknowledged.

ART. 2. The United States flag will be used in the archipelago of Sulu and its dependencies on land and sea.

ART. 3. The rights and dignities of his highness the Sultan and his datos shall be fully respected; the Moros shall not be interfered with on account of their religion; all their religious customs shall be respected, and no one shall be persecuted on account of his religion.

ART. 4. While the United States may occupy and control such points in the archipelago of Sulu as public interests seem to demand, encroachment will not be made upon the lands immediately about the residence of his highness the Sultan unless military necessity require such occupation in case of war with a foreign power, and where the property of individuals is taken, due compensation will be made in each case.

Any person can purchase land in the archipelago of Sulu and hold the same by obtaining the consent of the Sultan and coming to a satisfactory agreement with the owner of the land, and such purchase shall immediately be registered in the proper office of the United States Government.

ART. 5. All trade in domestic products of the archipelago of Sulu, when carried on by the Sultan and his people with any part of the Philippine Islands and when conducted under the American flag, shall be free, unlimited, and undutiable.

ART. 6. The Sultan of Sulu shall be allowed to communicate direct with the Governor-General of the Philippine Islands in making complaint against the commanding officer of Sulu or against any naval commander.

ART. 7. The introduction of firearms and war material is forbidden, except under specific authority of the Governor-General of the Philippines.

ART. 8. Piracy must be suppressed, and the Sultan and his datos agree to heartily cooperate with the United States authorities to that end and to make every possible effort to arrest and bring to justice all persons engaged in piracy.

ART. 9. Where crimes and offenses are committed by Moros against Moros, the Government of the Sultan will bring to trial and punishment the criminals and offenders, who will be delivered to the Government of the Sultan by the United States authorities, if in their possession. In all other cases persons charged with crimes or offenses will be delivered to the United States authorities for trial and punishment.

ART. 10. Any slave in the archipelago of Sulu shall have the right to purchase freedom by paying to the master the usual market value.

And I will show later on that slavery exists in its worst form.

ART. 12. At present Americans or foreigners wishing to go into the country should state their wishes to the Moro authorities and ask for an escort, but it is hoped that this will become unnecessary as we know each other better.

ART. 13. The United States will give full protection to the Sultan and his subjects in case any foreign nation should attempt to impose upon them.

ART. 14. The United States will not sell the island of Sulu or any other island of the Sulu Archipelago to any foreign nation without the consent of the Sultan of Sulu.

ART. 15. The United States Government will pay the following monthly salaries:

To the Sultan	$250
To Dato Rajah Muda	75
To Dato Attik	60
To Dato Calbe	75
To Dato Joakanain	75
To Dato Puyo	60
To Dato Amir Haissin	60
To Habji Buter	50
To Habib Mura	40
To Serif Saguin	15

Signed in triplicate, in English and Sulu, at Jolo, this 20th day of August, A. D. 1899 (13th Arakuil Akil 1317).

The SULTAN SULU.
Dato RAJAH MUDA.
Dato ATTIK.
Dato CALBE.
Dato JOAKANAIN.

(Signed) J. C. BATES,
Brigadier-General, U. S. V.

The annual aggregate of these salaries is $9,120. The Spanish agreement was for $6,300 a year. This agreement was one we offered to the Sultan, not one that he insisted upon. It is our own proposition that we are to maintain slavery in the Sulu Islands.

Further than that, Mr. President, an investigation would show that, although this agreement was made on the 20th day of August, it was not possible to secure from the State Department a copy of the agreement until after the election in Ohio. More than that, the Associated Press endeavored to secure a copy of the agreement, and as a response to the application of that great news-promulgating organization, its representative was handed a copy of the agreement in Arabic—Sulu Arabic at that; and they could not find anybody in the United States who was able to translate it. The State Department had a copy in English, for the last paragraph of the treaty says, "Signed in triplicate, in English and Sulu, at Jolo, this 20th day of August, 1899."

From this it would appear that the State Department does not hesitate to withhold information or mislead and deceive the public. I therefore expect but little in the way of the real facts in answer to our resolutions.

I wonder if our State Department has two branches, as the English state department has—one that is secret, where secret matter is concealed forever from the public and never published in the Blue Book, and one which is given to the people in order to justify English robbery, English plunder, and English annexation, in which is filed the information that goes in the Blue Book to silence the conscience of the English people. Have we adopted the same policy of concealment, the same policy of refusal to let the public know what exists?

I say this agreement, when the Associated Press tried to get a copy of it before the Senate convened, was furnished in Arabic, and an Arabic used in the Sulu Islands. Therefore it was not possible to have it translated in the United States, and we only got this copy which I have read after Congress convened and after the elections last fall were over. This is on a par and in line with the whole business of concealing from the American people the facts in regard to our maiden foreign venture. We are unable to procure the truth through General Otis. Mr. Collins, of the Associated Press, says the censor told him he was to send nothing and they were going to allow nothing to be sent that would injure the Administration or help Mr. Bryan.

Here is an agreement by which we are to maintain not only slavery, but polygamy in the Sulu Islands. Here is an agreement by which our flag is made to float over two crimes; and we further solemnly agree that no nation in the world shall be permitted to interfere. It is the chief part of the business of the Sultan of Sulu to get into quarrels with the natives of the interior in the island of Mindanao; then to declare that they are in revolt against his authority. Upon this pretext he takes prisoners and sells them into slavery, the planters of Borneo being the purchasers. That has been his business heretofore whenever he needed money. We now propose to maintain that sort of thing under the flag of the United States, and we stipulate, and the stipulation is approved by the President, that no foreign nation shall be permitted to interfere.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator wish to be understood as asserting that the President approved article 10 of this agreement, which refers to slavery in the archipelago of Sulu?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, the President says in his message—and if the Senator will permit me I will read it—

> I have confirmed said agreement, subject to the action of the Congress, and with the reservation, which I have directed shall be communicated to the Sultan of Jolo, that this agreement is not to be deemed in any way to authorize or give the consent of the United States to the existence of slavery in the Sulu Archipelago. I communicate these facts to the Congress for its information and action.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The President approves of an agreement which provides that the slave may purchase his liberty at the usual market price, and according to the first paragraph of the agreement it goes in full force upon the approval of the President and can not after that be altered except by another agreement. This transaction is on a par with all the other inconsistencies attached to this miserable business. He then says that he wants the Sultan to understand that he does not authorize slavery; though he has approved the agreement which ratifies slavery. How could he transmit the agreement to us with his approval and then send word back to the Sultan that he did not wish to be understood as approving slavery? Who knows whether or not the word will ever get to the Sultan? It is merely an effort at double dealing and can not be otherwise construed, in my opinion.

The President sends a proclamation to Mr. Otis to be announced to the people of the Philippines, and Mr. Otis edits it, censors it, and then inserts other matter in the place of that taken out, so as to convey a wrong impression to the people of the Philippines. After it has been sufficiently doctored he publishes the revised proclamation. After this sort of deception he still continues to hold his office. He is still maintained there with the approval of the President, and now we are told that word has been sent to the Sultan of Sulu that the Administration does not mean that which it has approved. I say it is in line with the whole policy from the beginning to the end. Almost everything we receive here in regard to this matter is on a par with the transmittal to the Associated Press of a copy of the Sulu agreement in Sulu Arabic to conceal the infamy until after the elections were over last fall. It is on a par with the statement of the commissioners who made this agreement, which I shall proceed to read. Mr. Schurman in an interview says:

> It seems to me that were it not for the ignorance displayed the present hue and cry about polygamy and slavery in these islands would be absolutely criminal.

If it were not for the ignorance displayed, the present hue and cry about polygamy and slavery would be absolutely criminal! I suppose the hue and cry about slavery before our civil war was criminal. Many people so asserted, many people honestly so believed, and I presume that Mr. Schurman honestly believes that the hue and cry about polygamy and slavery again existing under the flag of the United States would be criminal but for the ignorance of the people who cause it.

> In taking over the Sulu group we have acquired no rights of any sort there except those bequeathed us by Spain.

And yet the President, time and again during last fall in his speeches everywhere made to the people, asserted that the flag meant the same thing everywhere, meant the same here, in the Sulu group, and in Hawaii; that it meant in every place the same, and that its presence conferred liberty and happiness upon the people under it.

> She was bound by her agreement with the Sultan not to interfere with the religion or customs of the islands, and it would be most unwise for us to attempt this by force when it can be ultimately accomplished by the slower method of civilization and education.

Mr. President, we tried the slower method of disposing of slavery and polygamy in the United States, also the slower method of civilization and education, but finally we resorted to war—the greatest war in modern times—and thereby succeeded in destroying slavery under our flag. It has been restored by the act of a President elected by the Republican party. How will it strike the veterans of that war to annex slavery after all these sacrifices and then propose to abolish it when the slaveholders conclude it is wrong and give their consent?

> The Sulu group proper contains about 100,000 inhabitants. They are all Mohammedans. To attempt to interfere with the religion of these people would precipitate one of the bloodiest wars in which this country has ever been engaged. They are religious fanatics of the most pronounced type, who care nothing for death and believe that the road to heaven can be attained by killing Christians. Polygamy is a part of their religion, and slavery, about which so much is being said just now, is a mild type of feudal homage. The Sultan believes from what he has seen of Americans that they are ready to be friendly and deal honestly by him.

Mr. President, I will show what kind of feudal homage this slavery in the Philippines is. Owing to the fact that those people will fight, we prefer to indorse slavery and polygamy, and we attack the Christians in the island of Luzon and compel them to surrender—what? Surrender their desire for a government of their own. We prefer to turn from polygamy and slavery and indorse them, put our flag over them, and declare that nobody shall interfere with them, and then turn our armies and our navies to the destruction of the independence and freedom of a Christian population, which we also purchased from Spain.

I will read from the second edition of Mr. Foreman's book, which was published in 1899, and brought up to date. He says:

> The Sultanate is hereditary under the Salic law. The Sultan is supported by three ministers, one of whom acts as regent in his absence (for he might have to go to Mecca, if he had not previously done so), the other is minister of war, and the third is minister of justice and master of the ceremonies.
>
> Slavery exists in a most ample sense. There are slaves by birth and others by conquest, such as prisoners of war, insolvent debtors, and those seized by piratical expeditions to other islands. A creole friend of mine, Don A. M., was one of these last. He had commenced clearing an estate for cane growing on the Negros coast some years ago, when he was seized and carried off to Sulu Island. In a few years he was ransomed and returned to Negros, where he formed one of the finest sugar haciendas and factories in the colony.

I now read from Social History of the Races of Mankind, by Featherman:

> Slavery exists on Sulu Island, and the slaves, who were formerly brought from the Philippines, are not well treated, for their masters exercise the power of life and death over them, and sometimes kill them for trifling offenses. The datus frequently punish a disobedient or fugitive slave by drawing their campilan or kris and cutting off his head at one stroke without process of law.

And this is the mild form of feudal homage Schurman would have us believe should enjoy the protection of our flag until we can persuade the slaveholders that it is wrong.

Why did Schurman make this statement? The reason is plain. He did it just before the elections—about the time the State Department gave out the Sulu copy of the treaty for the information of the people of the United States. I contend that after this statement, made at the time it was, made by Mr. Schurman with an evident purpose to deceive, he has forfeited all right to be believed by anybody hereafter, and that his statements on all subjects in relation to the Philippines are not worthy of credence.

I read also from St. John's Far East, volume 2, page 192, as follows:

> The slaves are collected from all parts of the archipelago, from Acheen Head to New Guinea, and from the south of Siam to the most northern parts of the Philippines. It is a regular slave market.

Then he describes the people. Not only have the slaveholders the right of life and death over their slaves, but the monarch himself has complete and full right to take the life of any of his subjects whenever he so chooses. There is no restraint upon him. In Senate Document No. 62, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, there is printed from the Contemporary Review of June, 1898, by Claes Ericsson, what I shall read upon this subject. It is a description of a visit by Mr. Ericsson to the subsultan of the island of Palawan in 1894. It appears he went there for the purpose of gathering orchids, and he thus describes his visit to the Sultan of Palawan:

The Sultan was not in state attire; at least there was no suggestion of the imperial yellow in his close-fitting white trousers and vest, slippers embroidered with seed pearls, and scarlet fez. The two attendant nobles were much more gaily clad. Both wore tight jackets of blue silk, decked with gold buttons, and trousers of salmon red, ornamented with buttons of gold or gilt from the knee downward.

His Highness, who appeared to be about 50 years of age, had rather a pleasant expression, with a twinkle in his eye that reminded me of Arabi Pasha. A chair was brought, also vermouth and chocolate. With a cup of the last in my hand, I explained the purpose of my visit, which was to crave the Sultan's assistance in exploring Marangas Mountain. Smiling, he promised as many coolies as I needed, and I took my leave.

After visiting the mountains Mr. Ericsson returned for the purpose of securing another escort. He says:

Leaving men to collect the plants, I returned with the Sulus to the coast and embarked for Marangas. Wanting coolies for a journey to Datu Guah's village and an ascent of Panilingan Mountain, I paid the Sultan another visit; but the master of the ceremonies whispered that the moment was unfavorable. His highness was susa—that is, he had been vexed or troubled.

By means of discreet inquiries I learned the nature of his susa. It is a rather common story in the far east. Unable to lodge the whole of his wives in the "palace," His Highness boarded a few of them—not the prettiest, I suspect—in the houses of his followers. One of these peris, an outcast from the Palawan paradise through want of room, consoled herself in the usual way—quite innocently, I was assured. The news reaching the Sultan, he sent for the venturesome lover and smilingly bade him be seated opposite himself. Not being altogether an idiot, the man had come armed. From his sarong the jeweled handle of his kris protruded, plain to see. After a few complimentary commonplaces had been exchanged His Highness remarked the weapon.

"Allah has been good to you, S'Ali," said he. "Those emeralds are very fine, and the diamonds are as stars in the heavens. If the blade match the hilt, you have a treasure. Show it to me."

Thrown off his guard, S'Ali drew the kris from its sheath and, holding it by the wavy blade, presented it to the Sultan. Instantly half a dozen of His Highness's attendants threw themselves upon the unfortunate fellow. He was overpowered in a moment and his hands securely tied behind his back.

"Take him out," said the Sultan, still smiling.

S'Ali was led away and lowered to the ground. Not a word did he utter. It was kismet. Why waste his breath? I did not learn the manner of his end, but it would be either by kris or bowstring. Let us hope it was the first. In the hands of a skillful executioner the kris is a merciful weapon. He was buried in the jungle behind the Sultan's "palace." Such was the susa of Muhammad Harum Narrasid, lang de per-Tuan—"he who ruleth"—in the year of our Lord 1894. And the Spaniards were supposed to govern the island of Palawan!

And so are we supposed to govern these islands, and Old Glory floats over the throne.

I could understand why the Sultan did not care to see a European so soon after his crime. However, I obtained the coolies and sent them on.

I do not care, Mr. President, to delve deeper into the character of those people. I simply desire to show what we have secured by this purchase. It has developed that we have bought about 6,000,000 Christian people who are members of the Catholic Church, occupying the northern islands of the Philippine Archipelago; that we have purchased from one to two hundred thousand Mohammedan slaveholders, polygamists, who live by prosecuting the slave trade against the native population of the southern islands of the group; that we have agreed to maintain this condition of affairs; and the treaty is so arranged that it goes into force without the legislative bodies of this Government having anything to say about it.

It seems to me, under these circumstances, that it is incumbent upon the Senate and upon the House of Representatives to take up this matter at once, and take such action upon it as will blot out the stain upon our flag placed there by the Administration. I therefore desire the information called for by the resolution, so that we may act, and act intelligently and promptly, upon this subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota is covered by a previous resolution which has been adopted, but I see no possible objection to this resolution going through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota as it has been modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate a copy of the report, and all accompanying papers, of Brig. Gen. John C. Bates, in relation to the negotiations of a treaty or agreement made by him with the Sultan of Sulu on the 20th day of August, 1899. Said treaty provides that the United States Government will pay the following monthly salaries:

To the Sultan, $250 per month; to Dato Rajah Muda, $75 per month; to Dato Attik, $60 per month; to Dato Calbe, $75 per month; to Dato Joakanain, $75 per month; to Dato Puyo, $60 per month; to Dato Amir Haissin, $60 per month; to Hadji Butu, $50 per month; to Habid Mura, $40 per month; to Serif Saguin, $15 per month.

And the President is requested to further inform the Senate out of what fund are these salaries paid? What service do these people perform for the United States that entitles them to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

JETTY WORK AT CUMBERLAND SOUND.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 70) diverting and setting apart $50,000 out of the sums heretofore appropriated for jetty work at Cumberland Sound, in the States of Florida and Georgia, for sluicing and dredging at the entrance of said sound, and ask that it may be put upon its passage at this time. It is important that it should go through at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution indicated by the Senator from Georgia will be read for information, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas a project has been heretofore adopted for the improvement of Cumberland Sound, in the States of Florida and Georgia, known as the "Revised project of improvement of 1895," and appropriations have been made therefor; and

Whereas in said project and the plans and specifications therefor no provision has been made for dredging and sluicing; and

Whereas pending the construction of the jetties therein provided the harbor is liable to be obstructed by the filling of the bar, it is deemed advisable to provide against a contingency of that sort: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, diverted, set aside, and apportioned out of the sums of money heretofore appropriated and now standing to the credit of the existing project for jetty work in Cumberland Sound, in the States of Florida and Georgia, to be used for sluicing and dredging at the mouth of said sound or elsewhere in said sound, and belonging to said project, where sluicing and dredging may be needed or required; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to increase the limit of cost of said project or improvement beyond the amount fixed by the acts making appropriation for said project and fixing the ultimate sum which may finally be devoted to said project: And provided further, That the said $50,000 so diverted and set apart shall be expended under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Has it been before the Committee on Commerce?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has been reported from the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. CARTER. From the committee of conference between the two Houses upon the disagreeing votes on Senate bill 2179, relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, I ask leave to make the report which I send to the desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2179) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, and giving to the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 3, fixing limit of expenditures for law books, etc., and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "five" in the amended bill insert the word "three."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 4, regarding payment to heirs of deceased supervisor or enumerator.

As to amendment numbered 1, relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and amendment numbered 2, relating to mines, mining, and minerals, the conferees have been unable to agree, and ask for further instructions.

THOMAS H. CARTER,
EUGENE HALE,
S. D. McENERY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. HOPKINS,
CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I see the House of Representatives have amended the Senate bill by providing that we shall immediately take the census of the deaf, dumb, and blind, and also the census with regard to mines and mining. It seems to me that the Senate ought to agree to those amendments. In the first place, the deaf, dumb, and blind number less than 200,000 in the United States, and I understand that less than 10,000 of those are in public institutions. Therefore, the enumerators are the only persons who can gather these necessary statistics, and it certainly can not delay the work.

As to mines and mining, it is exceedingly important that this information should be secured, and not delayed until three years from now. Heretofore the information with regard to mines and mining has been had at ten-year periods, and, now, if we do not agree to this House amendment, this period will be about thirteen years, because none of the work of securing the statistics with regard to mines and mining can be commenced until after the enumeration of the population, as provided in section 7 of the bill, has all been accomplished.

Agreeing to this amendment will not delay the taking of the census a day. The last census of mines and mining was made by the Geological Survey, and there is no reason why the same Bureau should not take the coming census with regard to mines and mining, and do it at once, while the Census Bureau is going on with its work of enumerating the population. The Geological Survey is a branch of the Interior Department, and so is the Census Office, and therefore there can be no possible trouble in providing that they shall do this work, and they undoubtedly will provide that they shall do it, because they have the knowledge and the data and know exactly how to proceed, having taken the last census upon this subject. Therefore I hope the Senate will agree to these two House amendments, so important, and agree to them without a contest.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the Census Committee. I have not the act before me, but referring to section 8, according to my recollection, it says that the special work is to be done after the population, manufacturing, and some other schedules have been completed. I wish to know what is the construction placed upon that language by the chairman of the committee; whether the new work, the special work, can not be taken up until all the work is done in the Census Office of the tabulation of the returns of the enumerators, or whether it can be taken up immediately after the returns of the enumerators are received at the Census Office? There has been some question as to what that language means. If the Senator has the act in his hand and will read it, I will be glad to know what construction he puts upon it.

Mr. CARTER. The langauge referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, in section 8, reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture, and so forth, certain things shall be done. I think this language, Mr. President, is open to but one construction, and that is that the schedules in the hands of the enumerators and also the clerical work upon the schedules in the Census Office at the national capital must be completed before the supplemental work can be taken up. The purpose of this was to avoid hampering the rapid disposition of the regular decennial census work by an accumulation of supplemental work prior to the completion of the work upon the quick census which is contemplated.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. PROCTOR. I have a word to say about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On that question?

Mr. PROCTOR. On that question.

Mr. CARTER. On the question of consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I heartily agree——

Mr. CARTER. I assume that the Senator from Vermont does not understand the present parliamentary situation. It is important that the conference report be considered at this time, whatsoever the disposition of the Senate may be with reference to the amendments. The only question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Proceed to its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the report is a privileged one and can be made at any time; but the question following the presentation of the report is, Will the Senate proceed to its consideration? That is the question before the Senate. [Putting the question]. The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I heartily agree for once with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] in regard to the statistics as to mining. I do not see how it can delay the enumeration a day. In my vicinity it is so mixed up with the manufacture that the whole can be taken as easily as one. It is in the hands of a different set of men, and if it is not to be printed until after the enumeration I do not see how it can delay that work, and it will certainly be a matter of economy to have it done in connection with the statistics in regard to manufacturing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the disagreements read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again report the disagreements.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

As to amendment No. 1, relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and amendment No. 2, relating to mines, mining, and minerals, the conferees have been unable to agree, and ask for further instructions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment in regard to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and agree to the same.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire how that will leave the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. That will leave that part of it settled. Then the question will come up in regard to mines. If those two amendments are agreed to, the bill is passed.

Mr. TELLER. I desire particularly to keep in mining. We are anxious about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. The mining item will come up next. There are two disagreements. Everything has been agreed to except two items.

Mr. CARTER. That is correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we we recede from our disagreement to those two items and agree to the report, the whole thing is passed just as it comes from the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask a question? I agree with what my colleague says as to the importance of procuring at once statistics as to the mining industry. I should like to ask, for information, if by some amendment or by some new action the investigation as to mineral resources is to be given into the hands of the Geological Survey?

I am torn with doubts as to whether or not it should be left there, from the fact that so useless and so expensive an attachment to the Federal Government might as well be intrusted with something if they can do it with credit to the Government. But I am interested in knowing whether we are putting new duties upon an underworked body.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that the Geological Survey is not so entirely without work lately as perhaps he may suppose. It has taken upon itself the work of crowding this amendment through.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Ah!

Mr. HALE. And is very busy about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is eminently fitted for that work, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. The indications are that it is fitted for it. Early and late the Geological Survey has pushed this amendment. The committee in its original proposition of a narrowed census, what I called a quick census, left it out; and from that day to this the Geological Survey has been very earnest and night and day has been at work in keeping this thing back, and the pressure has come from there, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to make an inquiry. A conference report is rather a difficult thing to understand when you do not have anything before you. I understand there is nothing here that throws this work as to mines and mining to the Geological Bureau.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will my colleague kindly inform me as to that point? If I do not interrupt him, I am very much interested, as he is, in having it done, but it does seem to me that it might go into competent hands, perhaps.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Colorado will indulge me, I will read the amendment to which remarks are now being directed.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose you do.

Mr. CARTER. It reads as follows:

And the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect statistics, required by section 8 of said act, in regard to mines, mining, and minerals at the time fixed for the enumeration of the population, agriculture, and manufactures, notwithstanding any restrictions or limitations contained in section 8 of said act.

Mr. TELLER. That seems to leave it to the Director of the Census. That is where I suppose it ought to go.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is there anything in the original bill which puts it in the Geological Survey?

Mr. CARTER. There is nothing in the original bill which puts it in the Geological Survey.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that action may be had on the motion which I have made, and that is, that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment in regard to the deaf, dumb, and blind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator that the vote ought first to be taken upon agreeing to the report and authorizing a new conference. After that the motion properly should come, I think, to move to recede, but not before any action upon the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not particular as to which motion is put first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that is the usual and proper way.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] makes a motion, which will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that brings us to an agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it is always in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand from the Senator in charge of the conference report, this amendment will not delay the taking of the census at all. It is a very small work comparatively; it is an important work, and it will not delay the taking of the census or the publication of the census an hour, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in reference to the deaf, dumb, and blind, I will say to the Senate that it is the view of the Census Office that an additional schedule will be required in order to secure the information sought by this amendment. It has been stated by the gentleman in charge of the population schedule that only about 60,000 of these additional schedules would be necessary in order to supply each enumerator with one, and that as a matter of fact the inquiries are so brief and confined to people so few in number that there would not be any appreciable waste of time in connection with the matter.

The committee of conference on the part of this body, however, did not feel authorized, in view of the policy that has been repeatedly adopted by the Senate of confining the census to narrow limits, to agree to this amendment of the House. It rests with the Senate to dispose of the proposition relative to the deaf, dumb, and blind as in its judgment may seem proper and right. It is alleged that there are about 5,000 people in the United States to whom this amendment would apply. It is insisted that the statistics relating to this defective and unfortunate class can not be acquired save through the enumerators who go from house to house. It is that fact which has caused the institutions, or those in charge of them, to insist upon a special schedule being prepared upon this subject, to be carried about by the enumerators.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 1, relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and agree to the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read now.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

Mr. CARTER. It reads as follows:

And the Director of the Census is authorized and directed to collect statistics relating to all of the deaf, dumb, and blind, notwithstanding the restrictions and limitations contained in section 8 of said act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses."

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator from Montana the original census act?

Mr. CARTER. I have the original census act.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is a case of sheer importunity. The original census bill, which was fully discussed in the Senate, narrowed the scope of the work of the enumerators and provided that it should be confined to certain designated subjects, and that the volumes relating to those subjects, being few, should be issued at such a date as was named in the bill, two years from the time. It covered a proposition that would give to the people what the people are entitled to every ten years, a quick census, so that time should not elapse and interest grow dull and everybody lose concern in the census matter, and at last an immense work of twenty-odd volumes or more should appear which nobody would care anything about.

The committee and the Senate and the House and presumably the President, when he signed the bill, were not without consciousness that certain things that were desired to be put in the original enumeration were left out; and by section 8, recognizing the value of certain things to be put in afterwards, to be gathered by the Census Office and to appear for the people perhaps in subsequent volumes, they drew and there was put through the provisions of section 8, in which were included all these classes. There Congress provided for statistics as to the deaf and dumb, blind, and insane, and all the defective classes; criminals; pauperism; benevolence; reformatory institutions; deaths and births in registration areas; public indebtedness; taxation; electric light and power; telegraph and telephone business; transportation by water; express business; mining, placer and vein, number of men, average daily wages—all interesting subjects.

Every one of these interests is of importance to those engaged in them, just as important as it is to the professors and officials and managers of deaf and dumb asylums and institutions throughout the country to have statistics as to their constituency; just as important in respect to electrical work, transportation, all these things, as it is to the mining industry. But the committee and Congress provided for those in section 8, and made a clear, distinct, delineated bill that everybody could understand. At once, after Congress adjourned and the vacation had passed and we came back again, we began to be beset, not simply by deaf and dumb professors and the men who manage those institutions and by letters from them, but from all parts of the country for almost every one of these particular things that had been put into section 8, asking us to put them into the first enumeration. They laid in wait for us. They beset our doors. They clamored early and late that we should take each one of them and put it in here with the others, and our committee in the Senate declined to do it. We said, "We will hold fast to the original proposition of a clean-cut census as provided in the last Congress," and we refused. When they left us they went over to the House and made the point there, and they began to besiege Representatives' doors, and left them no peace, to get somebody to go in and change this.

Now, the Senate may change it. The Senate did, on full discussion, stick to the old proposition, and I can find no fault that a benevolent and generous-hearted man like my friend the Senator from Missouri has been overpersuaded to move to recede from our disagreement to this amendment and add to the act these provisions. But when that is done other things will come in. Why has not he or somebody else cared for the interest as to which I have just got the resolution of an important society, declaring that if we do anything for the deaf, dumb, and blind, we should take in the insane and put them in, and they say there should be in this first enumeration an enumeration of every insane person in the United States. They make the same appeal that the others did, and there is no end to it.

If you begin, Mr. President, you have got to satisfy all these people. You have got to change the scope and the range of the census bill, which we meant and determined should be narrow, but for the general benefit of the whole people. If you put on any of these amendments, if you put on this amendment for the deaf, the dumb, and the blind, and leave off the insane, the next thing the insane will come in. The miners want to come in. If you put that in, why not put in electrical work, telephone and telegraph, and all these things? You can do it, Mr. President; the Senate can do it; we can submit to it; but I notify the Senate that you will have the same thing that occurred in 1890 and in 1880—a census drawing out its long work, its weary length, until everybody is tired of it and everybody loses all interest in it and it ceases to be a decennial census.

The Senate may do as it pleases about it, but it has got to do it with open eyes. When we begin, I say if I listen to the appeal of the deaf and dumb I have got to listen to the appeal of the insane, who send here and declare that they should be put in, and that it is not right that we should have an enumeration that does not include them. I do not see why they should not be included as well as the deaf and dumb. Then the idiotic are pressing us also, and the feeble-minded. Then another set of statisticians say we ought to take testimony and have an enumeration as to the criminal classes and as to pauperism. The Senator from South Dakota wants statistics as to the distribution of wealth. They are all interesting, Mr. President, but we did not pass a census bill of that kind, and the Senate must now deliberately decide if it chooses to add to and change the scope of this work. The committee can stand it if the Senate can, but it will delay. It is said it will not delay. Everything will delay. The census schedules are already made out, based on the original proposition. Put on other things and it adds to the burden, it adds to the volume, it adds to everything, and you can not stop after you favor one class if you do not put the others on.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adhere to its resolution and confine the census to narrow limits, so that we may have an early report as to population. We are compelled to have that every ten years, and it is important to carry on the Government that it should be done promptly. Representation depends upon it. It is a part of the machinery of the Government. Every other matter should be inquired into at any time during the decade with equal care. The great benefit of statistics is to have them fresh, and in order to have fresh results, to know what is going on at the time, it is necessary to attend to one thing at a time. If we know only what occurred ten years ago in regard to manufactures, or five or six years ago, it is not very useful at the present time. The country ought to have these statistics before it while they are fresh. It should have them immediately. The people ought to get them the following year, so that business men can arrange their business accordingly. An old census on industrial pursuits becomes obsolete. Let us have once in ten years, and it does not matter at what time, fresh information on the different subjects. The enumeration must come out each decade. It ought to come promptly, because the administration of the Government depends upon it. I hope the Senate will adhere to the position it has taken.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, when this bill, which originated in the Senate, came before this body an effort was made to increase it, and I was the first Senator who protested against it. If it were in the Senate again I would not favor extending it, because if you open the door you do not know where it may end, when the matter is still open. But now this bill has been passed by the Senate; it has gone to the House, and certain amendments, only two, have been put upon it. The only question is whether we will agree to one or both of those amendments and settle it. That ends it. There will be no more changes or modifications in it unless it is done by an independent bill, and that will not be done.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that if you put these amendments on it will not be three days before these other amendments will come in by bills, and the committee will be obliged to consider them and obliged to report to the Senate, and the Senators who are in favor of special and particular amendments in addition to these will be arrayed upon it, and we will have to pass them all.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will see.

Mr. HALE. This bill does not limit legislation. We can legislate at any time, and that is what we are going to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course, we can legislate at any time, but the Senate is a sensible body and will only legislate what is sensible. Of course we can legislate whenever we choose. We have legislated, and we restricted that legislation, and when an attempt was made in this body to amend it we prevented it; but the matter went to a coordinate and coequal branch and they insisted upon two points only, and those two points are before us now, and neither one of them will delay the publication of the census half a second. No man can say it will. It is only a question now as to whether we will yield to a technical amendment of the existing law, and yield to it in order to get the bill through, because this settles it; and I will join with the Senator and resist any influence on this earth that can be brought to add to it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. How can he be entirely certain that the next proposition that is made will not be just as meritorious as this one, and why does he say he will oppose any other if he can only get this?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because I have some knowledge of what the census ought to be and what ought to be taken, and have some judgment as to what is important and what is not important.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me ask the Senator whether he has such a thorough knowledge of this whole question that he is prepared to say that the census bill needs this one amendment and by no possibility needs any other?

Mr. COCKRELL. The only questions before the Senate are these two amendments. I have moved to recede from the disagreement to the first House amendment, and that leaves it passed if the motion prevails. I suppose a motion will be made to recede from the disagreement to the second amendment; and as that amendment will not delay the publication and distribution of the census one-tenth part of a second, I shall vote for it in order to come to an agreement and get a law.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now will the Senator let me ask him why he is able to say that these amendments are the only ones that ought to be made and pledges himself to resist all others?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because they are the only ones before the Senate——

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh!

Mr. COCKRELL. And there is no necessity for originating any more——

Mr. CHANDLER. That is most extraordinary.

Mr. COCKRELL. And they are the only ones that can come before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I feel bound to say that if there is any legislation changing existing law as to the subjects to be embraced within the next census it ought to be by reducing the work of the enumerators next summer. I understand that those enumerators have thirty days in which to do their work, and I ask the chairman of the committee how many questions the enumerators are obliged to ask to-day upon the existing schedules at every house in the country and in the villages where they go to take the census—how many questions have to be asked by the enumerator when he goes to a village house or a farmhouse?

Mr. CARTER. I will state, in reply to the Senator's question, that the number of interrogatories will, of course, vary. In the case of a farmer, the head of the house or the man in charge of the farm will be required to respond to all the questions propounded upon the agricultural schedule. In the case of a person engaged in manufacturing to some extent in a section of country where a special agent is not charged with manufacturing work, but that work is given to the enumerator, a great addition will be made in the interrogatories contained in the manufacturing schedule. I should say that on a general average the enumerator will be required to propound between one and two hundred questions at each residence he visits during his round.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator has understated it. Judging from the investigation I made when this bill was being framed, and judging from the schedules which the Senator had here the other day, I came to the conclusion that at least 150 questions would have to be put by every enumerator, and that it would go on up from 150 to over 200 in some cases.

Mr. President, the best thing we could do for this census to-day would be to reduce those inquiries down to not more than 10 or 15. The enumeration of the population of this country is what the census originally was, and that is what it ought to be. It has gone on from an enumeration that would require 10 or 15 inquiries in every house to an enumeration that requires from 150 to 250, and now the Senator from Missouri, who stood up here the other day to prevent the destruction of the good work which he had helped to accomplish, of limiting this census, says—I suppose because he has been importuned about them—that we ought to take these things on, and then he pledges himself to stop all others.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has shown us that if we are to open this door there should be many other subjects as to which the enumerators ought to get information, and I take the liberty, from a partial knowledge of this subject, to warn the Senate that it must stand by the law as it is now upon the statute book or else we shall undo all the good work of restriction and limitation that we have done in connection with this census, and we shall have just as bulky a census, a census just as long delayed, and a census a large portion of which will be utterly worthless and useless to the people of the country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have taken occasion before, as a member of the Census Committee that framed the law prior to the reorganization of that committee, to signify my approval of the position taken by the chairman and the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine.

The only point in regard to the blind, the deaf, and the dumb to which this amendment applies (and I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to this particular point) is that section 8 does not permit the enumeration of those classes in any other places except those who are confined or who live in institutions. I am informed that that is not 10 per cent of them; that it is not 5 per cent of them; and therefore the census would be defective in a particular branch of inquiry that is very much desired by scientific and medical men. As the Senator from Montana has pointed out, with an additional schedule or special book for these classes, in which they would be enumerated and put down and nobody else go in that book except these defective persons, it would really save time, because in trying to assort out from among the seventy odd million, one, perhaps, in five hundred or a thousand, the clerk who would have to look up the blind and defective classes in the general schedule, who would have to add up this work and tabulate it at the Census Bureau, would consume more time than it would take to put them in a special schedule to themselves.

Mr. HALE. Then why not put in the insane, as the very respectable memorialists who are now at our doors desire?

Mr. TILLMAN. Just add the insane.

Mr. HALE. And the idiotic?

Mr. TILLMAN. The deaf, the dumb, the blind, and the insane.

Mr. HALE. And the idiotic.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, I want to stop somewhere, and you want to go on.

Mr. HALE. I will say that the argument for one is just as good as the argument for the other.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am satisfied that the idiotic and insane are not easy to get at, because people are sensitive of the fact that they have relatives who are in that unfortunate condition. Therefore there will be no objection to at least leaving the idiots out. There is some scientific value in obtaining a knowledge of the increase of insanity in our population, and the scientific men who are pressing this amendment I presume had reference to the statistics of these defective classes as being really of value to the medical profession, and that is the reason why they are pressing it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate to the population schedule. I have all the schedules that the enumerators will be required to use now, as I understand.

Mr. CARTER. All that are printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. All that are printed up to date. This is the population schedule, the first one. There are 28 requirements in connection with the population schedule, and I want them considered by Senators who think they ought to be added to.

The location of the house; the street; the house number; the number of the dwelling house, in the order of visitation; the number of the family, in the order of visitation; the name of the person; the relationship of each person to the head of the family; personal description—color or race; sex; date of birth; age at last birthday; whether single, married, widowed, or divorced; number of years married; mother of how many children; number of children living; place of nativity—place of birth of this person; place of birth of father; place of birth of mother; citizenship—year of immigration; number of years in the United States; naturalization; occupation; months not employed; education—attended school (in months); can read; can write; can speak English; and as to the ownership of the home—owned or rented, owned free or mortgaged; farm or house; number of farm schedule.

Now, there, Mr. President, is the initial step which the enumerators have to take, and with any reasonable districts that can be created for them, it is all they ought to do in the month of June. The best legislation we could adopt for this census for the use of the people of the United States would be to tear off this population schedule and use that alone and throw all the others away.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that about half those questions, or rather the limitations there that the enumerator must observe, are put there for his own guidance and for the checking of the Department down here as to whether he has not skipped somebody. At least half of those instructions there are not put there to be enumerated and added up and published.

Mr. CHANDLER. The enumerator has to make a record for every one of those 28.

Mr. TILLMAN. He does not have to ask those questions. They are there for his guidance in taking the census, so that he shall not skip around some house.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has to write down the name of every person in the family, and against each one of them he has to make a statement—not 28 as to each, because, of course, he will not put down the number of months that the father has attended school—but 28 entries; 28 inquiries have to be made and the result set down upon this schedule; and after that is done this whole other list of 100 to 125 or 150 is to be gone through with. The Senator from South Carolina could not in thirty days, under these schedules, take the census of one school district in South Carolina and get it right.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly not, Mr. President, because I do not happen to be quite so nervous and so much like a grasshopper as my friend from New Hampshire. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to say to the Senator that a pitchfork seldom touches a grasshopper. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I happen to have had a little experience in this way: In 1880 a neighbor of mine was appointed enumerator in the township in which I reside, and in order to get himself together and familiarize himself with his work he brought all his instructions to me and asked me to go over them with him and carefully examine and try to get him started off so that he would make no blunder. Well, he took the population of the township, amounting to about 4,000 people, and did it as well as it was ever done by the Senator from New Hampshire or any man in the State of New Hampshire, and he got through in less than twenty days.

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 7 of the census act approved March 3, 1899, provides:

That the Twelfth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to the population, to mortality, to the products of agriculture and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments. The schedules relating to the population shall comprehend for each inhabitant the name, age, color, sex, conjugal condition, place of birth, and place of birth of parents, whether alien or naturalized, number of years in the United States, occupation, months unemployed, literacy, school attendance, and ownership of farms and homes.

Now, if this amendment is agreed to, it will simply include deaf, dumb, and blind. I hope the motion will be agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. The advantage which the Senator from Missouri has not mentioned is that we get rid of this business, and the bill will not have to go back to a committee of conference and bring about another fight between the House and the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. And we get the law through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 17, noes 18; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no quorum present. Let the Secretary call the roll.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. I think the roll is now to be called to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The suggestion having been made that there is not a quorum present, the roll must be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Simon,
Allen,	Foster,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Money,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Hale,	Nelson,	Teller,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Tillman,
Butler,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Turner,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Vest,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.	Warren,
Chilton,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wellington,
Clay,	Kenney,	Proctor,	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Quarles,	Wolcott.
Culberson,	Lindsay,	Ross,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Scott,
Davis,	McBride,	Shoup,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the roll call 61 Senators have answered. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to allow the vote to be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the pending question? Let it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The SECRETARY. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when Mr. BACON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BACON] is providentially detained from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not understand this to be a partisan or political question, and I take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent, so as to permit the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD], but as this is not a political question I shall take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. As I do not see him present in the Hall, I shall not vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. I am informed that if that Senator were present he would vote "yea." I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire what is the precise form of this question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The motion made by the Senator from Missouri, the Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts, was that the Senate should recede from its disagreement and agree to the amendment made by the House.

Mr. HOAR. My vote stands "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Bate,	Hansbrough,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Berry,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Taliaferro,
Chilton,	Hoar,	Money,	Teller,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Tillman,
Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Culberson,	Kyle,	Pettus,	Warren.
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Platt, Conn.
Elkins,	McEnery,	Proctor,

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Kenney,	Ross,
Allen,	Foster,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	McBride,	Simon,
Baker,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hale,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Platt, N. Y.	Turner,
Clark, Wyo.	Harris,	Pritchard,	Wellington,
Davis,	Kean,	Quarles,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—24.

Bacon,	Daniel,	McCumber,	Rawlins,
Beveridge,	Deboe,	Mallory,	Scott,
Burrows,	Depew,	Martin,	Sewell,
Butler,	Foraker,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Caffery,	Gear,	Morgan,	Turley,
Clark, Mont.	Heitfeld,	Penrose,	Wolcott.

So the Senate refused to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House in regard to mines and mining, and agree to the same.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it seems to me a very unnatural classification to provide for taking the statistics of agricultural, manufacturing, and mechanical affairs and leave out mining. It appears to me that the first thing should be to provide for the natural productions of the country, the basis of manufacturing and mechanical affairs. Now, under the measure as it stands we are to take the statistics of manufacturing, of the products of the mines, but not of the mines themselves. It seems to me the very first thing should be to take the productions of the country, and then show by statistics what we do with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the adoption of this amendment will delay the census at all. The trouble with the census bill is that we provide for certain information and then declare that no other information shall be had until this is finished, thus delaying for two years at least the time of taking the census on other matters. The statistics of mines and mining have heretofore been taken each ten years. Now, we propose to have a period of twelve years under the bill as it stands, and therefore we shall be unable to draw from the information and statistics which we receive the conclusions that we would otherwise acquire. I suggested that this census of mines and mining was taken the last time by the Geological Survey and that they might take it again. There is nothing in the amendment which requires that they shall take it, but they could take it, and thus not delay the enumeration of the population a single hour, and give us this important information at once.

Some Senators have attacked the Geological Survey—no, not attacked it, Mr. President, but complained of it. My observation, from an examination of their work extending over a period of several years, is that there is no more efficient and competent bureau of this Government, and that there is no better work done by any branch of this Government than is done by the Geological Survey.

I want to say, further, that I am not prompted by any personal desire to have the census of mines and mining taken by the officers of the Geological Survey; but the State which I in part represent on this floor produces about $8,000,000 of gold per year, as well as many other very valuable and important minerals; one-third of our population is engaged in mining, and they are interested in the data concerning the subject. I am therefore prompted in my effort by their interest in urging that this should be done.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the amendment be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect statistics required by section 8 of said act, in regard to mines, mining, and minerals, at the time fixed for the enumeration of the population, agriculture, and manufactures, notwithstanding any restrictions or limitations contained in section 8 of said act.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the amendment contemplates the collation of data with reference to mines, mining, and mineral production at the time the enumeration is in progress. It is objectionable; it is unnecessary for the collection of the figures and facts contemplated by the Senator from South Dakota.

In the first place, the attempt to collect facts, figures, and reliable statistics relating to mines, mining, and minerals through enumerators to be appointed to perform this census work would be, to a person familiar with the conditions surrounding mines and mining, practically a ridiculous proposition.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to know if the statistics are to be taken by the enumerators? I do not so understand it.

Mr. CARTER. I assume the purpose of this amendment is to charge the enumerators with the collection of statistics on this subject. That must be the purpose in view of the direction in the amendment that the statistics shall be gathered at the time of the enumeration.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Montana for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will yield to the honorable Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The Geological Survey has been taking such statistics each year and making reports, and I regard those reports as quite valuable. It is now proposed that this work shall be taken out of their hands. I think we ought to have the information which they are giving to the public annually with regard to the mining industries. It is apart from the general work of the Geological Survey. It has been done by a special division, which has a very competent gentleman at its head.

I should dislike very much to have the valuable work of that division interfered with. I do not think that the enumerators can get the character of information we are now annually receiving from the Geological Survey in the reports which give information which those engaged in the mining business require. I hope that work will not be stopped. The bill might be so modified in conference as to continue that work. It seems to me all that is necessary in regard to mining is to have the statistical information given to us which is now given to us annually. There is a special appropriation made for it. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON], can tell the Senate what is being done annually in that regard.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the remarks of the Senator from Nevada I will state that, as a matter of course, with the books annually issued under and by authority of the Geological Survey, emanating from that branch of the Bureau presided over by a very competent man, Dr. Day, there comes a book known as the Mineral Resources of the United States. It is a publication which has been issued from that Bureau for many years past, I think for over fifteen years, and constitutes a valuable library, or addition to a library, of persons interested in mines and mining.

Mr. HALE. And a book which is very much in demand.

Mr. CARTER. And a book very much in demand, and supplied for distribution to members of Congress to a limited extent.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to know—I am almost ashamed to display my ignorance, but there are so many things I do not know about this Government that I am not so very much ashamed after all—whether that book embraces statistics of coal mining?

Mr. CARTER. Of course—iron, coal, copper, lead, cinnabar, etc., would be included.

Mr. TILLMAN. How does the Geological Survey get statistics relating to coal and iron? I thought that the Geological Survey was confined in its scope and work almost entirely to the Western part of the country, in the mountains and other similar regions.

Mr. CARTER. There is no law confining its operation to any particular section of the country.

Mr. HALE. The Geological Survey is engaged in work in other sections.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if I may answer the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the Geological Survey gets millions of dollars each year for preparing maps of the whole United States, which are exact duplicates on an entirely different scale of the maps of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; so that this great country from ocean to ocean is being platted by the Geological Survey with maps which will never have the slightest value. The Geological Survey finds its way into every hamlet and every cabin, and especially finds its way into the lobbies of the Senate and the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] The Geological Survey is all-pervading and universal.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to disclaim any familiarity or introduction to that honorable body. [Laughter.]

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. CARTER. I will assume that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] has answered the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and therefore I will yield to the question of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Montana stated that the statistics were to be taken by enumerators. I want to ask him if the Census Office has not within a few days issued a circular providing for a distinct set of officers for taking the statistics on manufactures?

Mr. CARTER. The amendment under consideration reads as follows:

And the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect statistics required by section 8 of said act, in regard to mines, mining, and minerals, at the time fixed for the enumeration of the population, agriculture, and manufactures, notwithstanding any restrictions or limitations contained in section 8 of said act.

I concede to the Senator, in reply to his question, that this does not require that this work shall be intrusted to enumerators, but the fact that it is to be accomplished at the time the enumeration is in progress seems to inferentially lead us to the conclusion that the enumerators are to do the work.

Mr. PROCTOR. But, Mr. President, the Director of the Census is under no restriction except that the census is to be taken at the same time. In fact, he has recently issued a circular, covering the whole country, providing for a separate set of men for taking the statistics of manufactures. I can say for my own State that there is not a solitary place in it where there is any manufacturing of any amount and no place where there is any quarrying or mining which is not included in that order and a separate set of officials provided for taking that census. They can, while they are engaged in collecting the statistics of manufactures, take the statistics of mining and quarrying without any additional expense.

Mr. CARTER. That can not be done under this amendment. The law provides that the Director of the Census may employ special agents to collect statistics relating to manufactures, and certain other special agents may be employed with reference to the collection of statistics concerning range stock and live stock in cities and on farms; but this amendment does not provide for the employment of special agents to collect statistics relating to mines, mining, and minerals. It provides no agency for the collection of statistics, unless the enumerators referred to in the amendment be employed for the purpose. That leads me to make the observation.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Nevada will indulge me a moment, I wish to add that this collection of statistics through enumerators—and this amendment leaves no other means for the collection of statistics—would lead to the collection of the most unreliable and misleading line of statistics anyone can conceive of. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] well knows, as does the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], that in our own highly favored Rocky Mountain region you would find an optimistic enumerator who would go through a mining district in one case and see, like Sellers, there were "millions in it," and another man who had just been unfortunate in the development of a prospect would say there was nothing in the adjoining district, and would set the whole country down as a barren rock. This would lead to a mere expression of opinion by enumerators, and the height of the estimate would depend on the condition of the digestion of the enumerator from day to day or his experience in mining operations.

Mr. President, collecting statistics relating to mining and minerals is a serious work. They have been, as the Senator from Nevada suggests, for more than fifteen years collected by competent agents of the Government, trained in the collection of statistics on this subject, so as to discriminate between wild rumor and substantial fact. When we depart from this method of collecting statistics we but trifle with public information.

I shall be glad now to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has pretty much answered the question I was about to ask, which was, if the information that is now collected does not answer every purpose, and if it is likely to be improved by statistics obtained by the enumerators. I do not think it would be improved at all. If there is not work enough done, it is very easy to require more by the making of a small appropriation. It is important that we should secure accurate information which the whole country demands. I get frequent requests for copies of this work, and have been sending them out for years. I had a consultation with Dr. Day about it. He has come to me at times with proof sheets to consult me about getting the kind of information which would be useful to persons engaged in the mining business. If any other information is required, he can procure it in the course of the investigations he is now making with very little additional expense.

I do not think we need the Census Bureau to interfere with collecting this information. Whatever may be said of the Geological Survey in other respects, Dr. Day's work is correct, scientific, and logical, and furnishes valuable information. There is a great demand for it among the miners. I do not believe in taking the matter out of his hands, for untrained men can not do the work he has been doing. It may be when the appropriation is made by the Committee on Appropriations there may be suggestions as to enlarging the scope of his duties; but I do not see why we should confuse this matter by putting it in the Census Bureau.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this will not interfere in the slightest degree with the work of the Geological Bureau. It seems to me, considering the great interest in the mining regions and the great production of minerals, that we are entitled to have a census if any other branch of national industry is entitled to it.

If the enumerators are to be appointed from a class of men who can only enumerate persons and who know nothing else, all the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] said is true; but it would be within the power of the Director of the Census to send to every mining camp the right kind of man to take the census of mining productions, the number of people who are engaged in mining, the amount of money which has been invested in it, and all such matters. It ought to be made and it can be made more in detail in this census than it has been made in any other. I do not see why we should not have that information furnished to us regarding one great industry, which is not secondary to very many others, which are to be looked to specifically when the census is being taken.

The most unimportant and inconsequential part of the entire census is that as to population. There are thousands of subjects as to which statistics ought to be taken in the census which are more valuable in an economic point than those relating to population.

Mr. HOAR. A population census is necessary for the purpose of apportionment.

Mr. TELLER. It is required for the apportionment of Representatives, and in that sense, and in that only, it becomes important; but I think the Treasury Department make every month an estimate of population. They make the estimate on the statistics of immigration and upon the well-known rule of the growth of the people, considering our past history. I have no doubt they come near enough to the actual facts for all practical purposes.

The census ought to contain satistics on a great many other subjects. Our census has been the most elaborate and perhaps the most useful of any census ever made by any government, and it is so recognized. It has had at its head men who understood their business, and under them have been taken censuses which the world considers very valuable. I know myself, from comments which have been made upon late censuses in Europe, that our censuses are regarded as more valuable than anything that is being done on the Continent. Why should we wait for statistics on this subject any more than we should wait for the statistics of manufactures? If we were to confine this census simply to the population, I would not complain; but that is not done. It is proposed to single out and select certain industries, which it is said must be reported with the population, and that certain others are not of sufficient consequence to be included.

I believe that the mineral census can be taken without any delay, and that the Director has authority to select the right kind of people to take it. I should myself be glad to see it taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, in regard to mines, mining, and minerals, and agree to the same. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]; but that pair has been transferred to my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER], and I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD], and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. I do not know how he would vote if present. I therefore withhold my vote; but if at liberty I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Hawley,	Money,	Shoup,
Berry,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Teller,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Tillman,
Hansbrough,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,	Warren.

NAYS—35.

Allen,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Allison,	Frye,	McBride,	Simon,
Carter,	Gallinger,	McEnery,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hale,	McLaurin,	Taliaferro,
Chilton,	Harris,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Clark, Wyo.	Kean,	Pettus,	Turner,
Culberson,	Kenney,	Platt, Conn.	Vest,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Pritchard,	Wellington.
Davis,	Lindsay,	Ross,

NOT VOTING—35.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	McComas,	Quarles,
Bacon,	Deboe,	McCumber,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Depew,	Mallory,	Sewell,
Beveridge,	Elkins,	Martin,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Foster,	Morgan,	Turley,
Caffery,	Gear,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Clark, Mont.	Hanna,	Penrose,	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Platt, N. Y.

So the Senate refused to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, before this subject passes away, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the work in this direction which is being annually done by the Geological Survey. Here are two volumes [exhibiting] which are devoted to minerals, mineral resources, and statistics on these subjects. These reports come out annually. The work gives more valuable and accurate information than can possibly be obtained in any other industrial department in the United States. So for that reason, and not because I am opposed to mines and mining, I voted to disagree with the action of the other House turning the work over to the other department. If Senators will examine these volumes they will obtain information regarding the mineral resources of their own States which they can not get in any other way.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CARTER, Mr. HALE, and Mr. MCENERY were appointed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 25, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 24, 1900.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAM WHALER BOWHEAD.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1933) to provide an American register for the steam whaler Bowhead, which bill is now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steam whaler Bowhead, owned by John A. Cook, Preston B. Keith, F. B. Howard, E. T. Packard, D. W. Field, A. W. Barrows, George Bickford, W. H. Bryant, and H. B. Madison, citizens of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] will yield to me——

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill, and the Chair understands that a similar bill has been reported by the House committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A similar bill.

The SPEAKER. If the House report is here, let it be read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The House report is a copy of the Senate report, which I have.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to the gentleman from Ohio, who is chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, making a statement of the facts.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this is a small whaling vessel which has been bought at a cost of $11,500 up in the whaling region by a number of gentlemen engaged in the whaling business, from Brocton, Mass. All the owners reside there except one, who is in San Francisco. It is proposed that this vessel shall be repaired, and a specific statement is filed with the report as to the character of the changes and improvements which are to be made, and which involve an expenditure of $12,500 and an outfitting of $16,000 in San Francisco. The bill provides that when that work is completed and proof is made to the Commissioner of Navigation that the amount of $12,500 has been expended, then an American register may be granted to this little ship.

Mr. DE VRIES. What is the capacity of the vessel?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a ship of 240 tons burden.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask if the House Committee has unanimously reported this measure?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have reported a similar bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. GROSVENOR. A unanimous report.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. And now the proposition is to pass the Senate bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Exactly in the words of the House bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only wanted to know if the proper committee have agreed to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, the corresponding House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls up the unfinished business, and recognizes the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the House and the country are to be congratulated that this great question which now engages our attention has been submitted to an able, painstaking committee, who have searched through all the precedents that are to be found in the records of Congress, have explored all the decisions of the courts, and examined the text of all the commentators upon this subject, and have presented to us an exhaustive analysis of this great fund of information in the reports which they have laid upon our desks.

They have been unable to agree. Their disagreement is not upon the facts upon which our action is to be based, but upon the conclusion to which those facts point. The majority of the committee say that the remedy to be applied to the wrong which they insist has been done is to exclude Mr. Roberts from his seat in the House, to prevent even his being sworn in as a member of the House.

On the other hand, the minority of the committee say that that remedy can not be applied, but that the proper one is to first admit and swear him, and then expel him. Well, now, this presents, therefore, the only question for the consideration of the House at this time: Which of these two remedies, upon an agreed statement of facts, is the proper one for the House to adopt?

It was said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] on yesterday, in his very able and exhaustive argument, that the precedents point to expulsion as the proper remedy. But if I may be allowed to criticise the gentleman's logic, I should say that he runs right up against the very precedents which he cites, because it is a universal rule, so far as the committee has given us information upon the subject, that you can not expel a member from the House for any offense committed prior to his election; and it is a confessed fact in this case that the crime of polygamous marriage that was committed by Mr. Roberts was committed long before the people of Utah elected him as their Representative on this floor, and that it was well known to the people of Utah when they cast their ballots that he had committed that crime.

I am aware, sir, that the gentleman may reply to this and say that polygamy is a continuing status, and that I shall insist to be the fact; but, nevertheless, the crime itself, the initial steps that made him guilty and answerable before the bar of public justice, were taken long before he was elected to Congress.

So that, Mr. Speaker, the minority of this committee, however ingeniously they may argue the question, are confronted with this obstacle in their pathway. The conclusion which they reach is one which can not be carried out if we are to follow the precedents that have been established for many years in this behalf.

The House to-day is sitting in the capacity of a judge. Its jurisdiction is conferred by that clause in the Constitution which declares that each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members.

The power to judge is a plenary one. We are not told in the Constitution when we shall judge or how we shall judge, but the broad grant of power to sit in judgment is given, and the method that shall be adopted to accomplish that judgment is left, and necessarily left, to the discretion of the House itself. It is a fundamental principle in the law that where there is a grant of power given that the very grant itself, ex vi termini, carries with it every incidental power necessary to make the grant effective. And so in this case, where the House is authorized to judge of the elections and qualifications of its members, it may judge in its own way. It may judge at such time and in such manner as it sees fit. It is just as permissible to judge at the time that a member presents himself to take the oath as it is after he has taken it. If the House in its wisdom and discretion sees fit to pass its judgment at that stage in the proceedings, it has the right so to do.

We are not restrained by this provision of the Constitution, we are not restrained by any other provision of the Constitution, and without any language whatever giving us the right to determine the time and the manner in which he shall judge of these qualifications this general grant of power carries with it the incidental one to determine the method.

But, sir, there is another clause in the Constitution which declares that each House shall make its rules and regulations, and that would justify the House in proceeding under any regulation or rule that it might prescribe in determining when and how it shall sit in judgment on this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. POWERS. I should prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to break the line of your argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont declines to be interrupted.

Mr. POWERS. I have but a very short time accorded to me, and if I yield to interruptions I will say to my friend that he will lose the spell of my argument.

Mr. RICHARDSON. All right; I will not interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. POWERS. The House, then, having the right to determine when and the method by which it will decide this question, the inquiry arises, May it not determine it before the member takes his oath? It seems to me to be entirely unanswerable to say that the House may do so at that time.

Now, sir, much has been said on the floor in the debate thus far as to the guilt of Mr. Roberts. I think, sir, there is another party that is guilty in this matter, and that is, the people of the State of Utah are responsible for this condition of things that we are confronted with here to-day. The people of the State of Utah came to the doors of Congress three or four years since with an application for admission to statehood. They came protesting that polygamy was a dead issue in that Territory, and they came with a manifesto from the chief executive officer of the Mormon Church, in which he had said to his people that polygamy must cease.

They came, by their Representative on this floor, and declared that public sentiment in Utah was against this practice; and, listening to this appeal that was made by the people of the Territory, this House and Congress consented to take them in after prescribing certain conditions that never before had been prescribed in the case of the admission of a new State into the Union. This House originated a proposition to this effect: That the State of Utah when they adopted their constitution should put into it a clause of their own making, by their own free will, forever prohibiting polygamous or plural marriages. No such restriction as that was ever before incorporated in the enabling act admitting a new State into the Union. But in this case, in view of the pledges that were made by that people, and in order to bind them to the utmost good faith for the redemption of those pledges, Congress said to them: "Gentlemen, you must incorporate that into your organic law as the condition precedent to your admission into the sisterhood of States."

Now, sir, they did what they were told; but we were told that that prohibition was prospective in its operation; that it merely prohibited polygamous or plural marriages thereafter. I beg to differ from that construction of the language. I insist that it was a prohibition against the status of a polygamous marriage. What is a polygamous marriage in the sense in which it was used in that instrument, in the constitution of their own State? Was it limited to the mere celebration of the marriage ceremony? Was that the mischief this House of Congress intended to remedy? Not at all. A man may marry two or twenty wives if that is all there is to it. It works no harm to the public good. It is all very true that a man may be prosecuted successfully for being a bigamist by the mere proof of the celebration of the second ceremony, but that was not the question pending before the House. The House was trying to protect the people against what is called the institution of polygamy.

We were trying to strike a blow against the status thus assumed by the party guilty of the offense. Congress was not trying to deny the right of the celebration of repeated ceremonies, but trying to prevent the setting up of polygamous households and the institution of more families than might be lawfully supported by one man. That was the mischief, and that is the force and the scope, by any legal or common-sense construction, that could be given to the language that was put in the very organic law of the State.

It is true, as the gentleman from Maine said on yesterday, that there is no such thing as a contract between the State and the General Government. If you please to limit it to that language, that is undoubtedly right; but, sir, there is such a thing as a contract of good faith on the part of the people of a State when it comes to the doors of Congress and asks admission. We have the right to hold them to an observance of plighted faith; and that is the point that I insist we should do to-day by repudiating the Representative they have sent here, sending him back to them, asking them in some more positive way to show their faith in the promise which they made to us when they were admitted into the Union.

Now, then, the remedy which the minority propose is expulsion. Expulsion is a matter that is wholly connected with and relates to the Representative himself. It is personal to him and does not touch the constituency. You can not expel a man for anything except, in the language of the Constitution, for misbehavior. "Disorderly behavior" are the very words adopted by the Constitution. Therefore it has been held repeatedly, and, I think, almost universally, that there must be some disorderly behavior on the part of the Representative after he becomes clothed with the trust, not necessarily after he is sworn in, but after he has been selected. He must do something within the comprehension of the words "disorderly behavior" in order to warrant the House in taking notice of it.

Why, sir, a man may commit the crime of murder, that crime may be known to all men in his State, and yet if afterwards they, knowing these facts, proceed and send him here as their Representative, this House is absolutely powerless to deal with the matter for that crime. And, as suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] who sits beside me, a fortiori is this so if they once admit him to a seat on this floor. But, sir, we are not seeking to punish this man for disorderly behavior, and therefore we do not bring the case within the range of that clause of the Constitution that gives the House a right to expel. It must be lodged somewhere else, and I propose, in the brief time I have, to attempt to show that it is lodged not under the clause judging of this man's qualifications—that is to say, the constitutional qualifications of age, residence, citizenship, and inhabitancy—but it reaches back to the original election of the man.

It is there that you are to plant your ground for excluding him from taking the oath. The constituency that sends him here are the ones we should criticise; their action is the action we call in question, and not the disorderly behavior of Roberts, under the other clause of the Constitution giving the House the right to expel.

So that, Mr. Speaker, the result in this case must, by force of this reasoning, be exclusion or nothing. We are confronted with just that dire necessity. We must say either this man may be sworn in and stay in, because we have no right to expel for a cause that existed long before, or we must exclude him now and accomplish what the people of this Union are demanding at our hands.

But we are told by the gentleman from Utah especially, and it has been hinted from other sources, that if we construe this enabling act to mean something more than the celebration of an illegal marriage, we are breaking up family households, we are tearing away the wife from the husband. I deny it, sir; we are not breaking up a household; we are not tearing away the wife from her husband. Polygamy has never been legal in Utah, either as a Territory or as a State. Even before she became a Territory, the common law of England, that was in force there as everywhere, made polygamy illegal. It has never been legalized on the American continent, and therefore the moment Roberts took wife No. 2 he had a marriage that was, under the law as it then stood, absolutely and unqualifiedly void. When he took wife No 3, that marriage was absolutely and unqualifiedly void. Both of them were contrary to the law of the land under which he lives.

Now, then, we are not breaking up a family, because no legal family existed; no illegal marriage could make a legal family, and so the dire consequences, which are portrayed by the gentleman from Utah, cease to exist. We are simply breaking up an illegal relation; nothing more, nothing less. It is not, therefore, a question of sentiment; it is a question of strict law and of stern justice. But, sir, Mr. Roberts is entitled to no consideration, because he knew what the law was. Every man is bound to know the law under which he lives. He can not come here, therefore, and plead the baby act by saying that he acted in good faith, and he does not do that. He comes here and pleads that he acted under the high behest of the church to whose creed he subscribed. He puts it on the ground of a religious ceremony, of a religious institution, and justifies his action on that ground and that alone.

Now, then, I have already said that the people of the State of Utah have broken their plighted faith when they assured us at the time of the passage of the enabling act and by the adoption of their own State constitution that this institution should cease. They were admitted into the Union, and when they were admitted into the Union, Mr. Speaker, they pledged themselves within that sweeping language in the preamble to the Constitution, "We, the people, in order to form a more perfect union, etc., adopt this Constitution." They stand precisely to-day as though they had been one of the thirteen States that originally adopted that Constitution. They are a part of the people, and as a part of the people the constituency of that State are bound to the utmost good faith in the observance of their constitutional duties.

Why, sir, every American citizen that lived in the State of Utah and voted for Roberts was under oath to support the Constitution of the United States. What do you mean by supporting a constitution? Do you mean to subvert it, or do you mean to yield a willing allegiance under it, to support it and defend it in its workings, of ministering to the highest good of all the people? They promised to support the Constitution. Now, then, they must support that Constitution in the spirit in which it was adopted, and for the high ends for which it was adopted. What are the high ends? Among other things, to promote the public welfare.

It is true my friend from Maine yesterday rather flippantly alluded to the general-welfare clause in the Constitution. But I beg to say to him that, under that clause promoting the general welfare, there has been more legislation that has uplifted the people, that has accomplished the public welfare, than under any other clause in that sacred instrument. And when the people of Utah were called upon to act under the Constitution by electing a Representative to Congress, they owed a duty to all the other people in the country to elect a man, to inaugurate a policy that would minister to the public welfare, and not send a man here that would imperil the very Constitution under which we are living.

It was therefore a breach of faith on their part to elect such a Representative. By their action in sending Mr. Roberts here as their Representative they have imperiled the very Constitution that they are sworn to support. They have attempted to make this institution, which is nothing but a relic of barbarism, respectable. They have given it a standing and a status in the halls of legislation that had been rejected by the legislature when they were admitted into the Union.

But we are told by the gentleman from Utah that if we adopt the policy of excluding him from a seat in the House, we threaten the very existence of the Constitution itself; that we break down the bulwarks that the fathers set up for the protection of public liberties. Well, if that sermon had been preached to us by somebody who was not himself trying to break down those bulwarks, it would have a great deal more force. Breaking down the bulwarks of the Constitution by excluding a Representative who comes here pledged to support the Constitution, comes here pledged to work for the public interests of our people, and still justifies his belief in an institution that Congress has once condemned—is that the way that the bulwarks of the Constitution are threatened?

For one I am perfectly willing to risk the ship of state. I think she can sail on safely enough, notwithstanding the dangerous assault which the gentleman says this House is about to make upon those bulwarks. It is true, sir, that in sailing over these troublesome waters the timbers of the old ship may creak, the cordage may in some parts of it snap, the crew may murmur, but of one thing I feel well assured, that the old ship of state will never be swallowed up in the miry waters of Salt Lake. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, we are told that over the doors of the legislative chambers in ancient Rome was written an inscription in Latin, which translated means "See to it that no harm comes to the Republic." That injunction was written in large letters on the very portals of their capitol building, so that every member of their legislative body as he marched up to the capitol each morning to discharge his responsible duties in legislating for the welfare of a free people should be reminded that it was his duty to see that no harm came to the Republic.

Now, sir, that same injunction is resting upon us. It is not written in letters over the doors of our Capitol, but it is written in spirit in the very Constitution under which we live. It is written in the very pledge which every man makes when he takes an oath to conduct himself here for the best interests of the people. It is written in the very atmosphere of every one of our legislative halls and it is our duty to-day, obeying this injunction, to see to it that no harm comes to the Republic.

The American people only a few months ago rose to a level high enough and to a plane broad enough to write into the code of international law a new dogma, which was that the uncivilized methods of three centuries ago must not be practiced in the conduct of a modern war. And so we declared that on grounds of humanity the United States was justified in preventing in Cuba the perpetration of those wrongs under Weylerism that had been practiced three centuries before under the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands. And no nation on the face of the globe has as yet called in question the propriety of that doctrine thus newly announced.

It remains for us to-day, Mr. Speaker, to write another maxim in the parliamentary law of our country, and that is that no one of the relics of barbarism that have come down to us from long-ago centuries shall longer vex and disturb the deliberations of an American Congress. We can say to the people of Utah, "Take your man back. Return us a Representative who is in accord with the spirit of our institutions and we will welcome him to a seat on this floor. But if you insist upon sending us a man who represents an idea that threatens the very happiness of our people, if you undertake to popularize and make respectable such an idea in our autonomy, we say to you, 'No.'" We say that it is proper that we record to-day, if never before in the legislative history of this House, the principle that no man shall be permitted to hold a seat here who is not in perfect accord with the very spirit of our institutions and in accord with the high aims and purposes of American civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time which has been allotted to me in this debate I shall of course not have opportunity to make an exhaustive argument, and therefore I will condense my remarks as much as possible in discussing this case.

To the principle of condemning a man without a hearing—and to deny or arrest privileges primarily secured and enjoyed without the necessity of our sanction is such condemnation—I am utterly and forever opposed as a crime against liberty, possessing all the indicia of despotism. No one can deny that at the time the Representative from Utah was stopped at the bar of this House he possessed all the prima facie right to office that any of us had, and in pursuance thereof had the right to take upon himself and assume all its mandatory incidents, at least to the point where our discretionary powers could be moved and the results of investigation made known. And no one can affirm that at that time any investigation of the charges had been made. The allegation that in the opinion of eminent counsel the record of his naturalization might be held to be defective is not a charge that he was not a citizen. At least it merely suggested a doubt which was immediately dispelled by the production of his certificate of naturalization issuing by a court of competent jurisdiction, which is certainly conclusive unless we are to assume that the legislative branch of the Government can exercise a revisory control over the judicial branch, which, it seems to me, is subversive of their distinct and sovereign equality. It may be that upon investigation properly had, if there appears an entire lack of jurisdiction on the face of the proceedings, it would be in the power of Congress to so declare and thus defeat his election. At any rate, we are not to assume its void character until it does appear.

Why need we scoff at the administration of justice in the French Republic, where evidently the presumption of innocence does not obtain and where a pleading and helpless prisoner is made to prove his innocence of crime founded only in well-drawn accusation, if the representatives of the people of the United States are themselves to encompass the reversal of our order and become the chief exponents of the French system upon a mere suggestion of delinquency.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], in support of his resolution, used this language:

> If, upon investigation, it shall develop that the claimant is entitled to his seat, then an injustice will be done him by keeping him out. But that injustice is not comparable to the injustice and wrong that will result to the House and country if, being ineligible in the respects charged, he should sit for one hour as a member of this body.

My answer to this language is brief, that we are not authorized to thus incur the danger of possible injustice. To guard against it we have enshrined presumption of innocence, a principle as old as the Government and as sacred as the Constitution.

Secondly. If contamination is what was to be apprehended, we had already been inoculated in the exercise by the Representative from Utah of the functions of an office given him by the Constitution operating on the actions of the people of his State.

I abhor polygamy in any form. But a large number of Representatives, who are not governed by the strict construction of the Constitution, which is an old and sacred creed of the Democratic faith, and which is the only safe and sure anchor of constitutional liberty, sought to so mix up a question of constitutional right touching the oath of office with questions of propriety involving a high moral standard as not to permit a fair expression of the sentiment of the House.

Entertaining the views which they do with reference to the Constitution, they could well do so without violating their conscience. Their position upon the constitutional question is well stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], the mover of the resolution, in his speech, which reads as follows:

> Finally, upon this subject of ineligibility, and I ask the attention of the House to these measured words, if we consider the great powers of Congress unrestricted save by the Constitution, we shall see that it can impose qualifications and declare ineligibilities probably sufficient where crimes or offenses against civilization are concerned to justify it, and in some instances to command it, to refuse admission to persons thus tainted.

The Democratic position on this question, and albeit the proper construction thereof, is as directly antagonistic to this view as it is possible to conceive.

We do not consider the Constitution as a limitation on the powers of Congress, but, on the contrary, we consider the Constitution as a grant of the only and limited powers it possesses. The other theory, therefore, is to presuppose in Congress all authority upon which is imposed by the Constitution only certain limits, while the Democratic theory is to deny all authority except the limited powers authorized by the Constitution.

Passing over the question of the dangers incurred by the establishment of the precedent, whereby majorities elected may be reduced to minorities in a preliminary skirmish, and where a President or Speaker may be declared or constituted a Chief Executive or presiding officer who was never elected, it would not be difficult to harmonize the position of the majority on the Tayler resolution with their known views with regard to the particular case of Roberts in declaring disqualifications were it not for some other provisions of the Constitution, which even according to their view impose limits. In Article V of the amendments to the Constitution it is provided that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

Due process of law has been held to include notice, trial, and judgment by regularly constituted jurisdictions in advance of such deprivation.

Again, in subsection 3 of section 9, it is provided that—

> No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

Public office and the right to the salary and to enjoy its privileges has been held to be property. Therefore Roberts's present right to take the oath must be considered in the light of the laws now existing, and the passage at this time of any resolution or act, which is done by a majority vote, could not constitutionally operate so as to deprive him of his office, because its operation would be ex post facto, and its decree would not be in accordance with due process of law, involving notice, trial, and judgment.

It is idle now to refer to the legislation of Congress respecting polygamy in the Territories. Those laws operated under a distinct grant or authority of subsection 2 of section 3 in Article IV of the Constitution, which gave to Congress full power to—

Dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories, etc.

They were abrogated in so far as the General Government is concerned when a sovereign State was subsequently erected out of the discordant elements of the old Territory of Utah, and their last and lingering effects faded away in the amnesty proclamation which followed them. They can not penetrate the royal shield of a sovereign State.

Neither does it affect the question that these laws are referred to and some of their provisions incorporated in the organic laws of Utah. They impose no disqualification for office; and if they did, a single State thus operating alone can not effect an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Article V of the Constitution provides a way in which such amendments can be secured, as follows:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

In thus providing it excludes every other method. In considering this question it must not be forgotten that it is the matter of the status quo in which no latitude is allowed. It is not a question of what the Constitution ought to be, but a question of what it is. And we are bound to give it effect, whatever may be the consequence, because of the following oath which we have taken:

I, —— ——, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I take this oath freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

May those of us who disapprove the majority resolution and advocate a different procedure beg the indulgence of this House and the country while we modestly state that the exclusion of the Representative from Utah in this particular way may not be that vindication of virtue which the country demands? And may it not also involve a lapse from another standard by which the rectitude of our intentions is to be gauged?

"Thou shalt not bear false witness," etc., is as much of a command thundered from Mount Sinai as the one couched in the terms, "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

On all matters involving questions of policy or propriety members of Congress should be controlled by and reflect the will of their constituents. But on all questions touching the oath of office and their eternal responsibility they should be left without coercion or denunciation, as they will have to answer for their actions in the great day of accounts, where the secrets of all hearts are to be made known, and where all pleas of expediency will be stricken from the record in consequence of the warning that no evil shall be done in order that good may abound. We may reason with each other, however, and if an agreement is not reached the causes thereof may appear. Let us consider the status of the Representative from Utah involved in his prima facie case.

In the first place, I take the position that he is a State officer, elected by the people of his State to represent them in Congress, which body is composed of the sum total of the number elected in all the States. It is true that the effects of such representation may become national in character, but nevertheless the choice of office is locally controlled. His resignation is made to the governor, and his place can not be filled except at the pleasure of the State authorities.

The highest and the only evidence of his election that can be considered up to a certain time is the certificate of election issued to him under the laws provided by the State, by which the result of his being chosen was made known. The Constitution operates independently of aid or formality, but automatically, to constitute the collective body so chosen—the House of Representatives—as the following paragraph shows. Section 2 of Article I states:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Now, the effect of this paragraph, operating before the Congress came together and organized for business, was to give the Representative from Utah certain rights, among which were the right to draw his salary, to exercise the franking privilege, to receive and distribute Government publications, to journey to Washington under the special protection of the laws, to participate in the caucus, and to help elect or defeat a candidate for Speaker.

All the privileges which a member enjoys before he takes the oath of office do not now occur to me, but enough have been stated to convince me that there is virtue and power enough in the Constitution, even before we have a chance to experimentally interpret it, to make it worth while for us to strive for the office, though we may not be permitted to take the oath, and to convince me further that it is not the taking of the oath of office that constitutes an individual "chosen" by the people of a State a member of the House of Representatives. This view is supported by section 3 of Article VI, which provides as follows:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

This section, therefore, again recognizes the fact that the Representatives chosen are the Congress primarily, and makes it mandatory, not discretionary, that they be bound by oath.

It is admitted by everyone that the Representative from Utah was chosen by the people of his State. He therefore is entitled upon this showing not only by authority of the Constitution, but by its positive commands, to take the oath of office. This appears also from other considerations. The House can not transact any business save the election of a Speaker until it is organized and a quorum sworn. Suppose the objection had come from the Speaker to a member from Alabama, the first State called, to whom could he have appealed from an adverse ruling of the Chair? To no one certainly who is entitled to vote. It is no answer to this to say that such a thing may not be done or will not be done. The question is one of power. Can it be done? If it can not be done in the first instance, then the reason holds good through the whole list of those who present certificates from the States.

I challenge the statement in the majority report that we can dispose of all such questions in advance of being obligated with the oath, because such questions constitute business or procedure which affects constitutional rights and are determined under constitutional directions and limitations, in view of which it was certainly never intended that the members should be thus relieved and invited to render partisan judgment. I believe that the election of a Speaker before members are sworn is without constitutional warrant, for I think all the mandatory provisions of the Constitution respecting the obligations of members to do the right thing should be fastened upon their conscience before they act, and I think this is why the Constitution was made to say that "Members so chosen shall be bound by oath."

The statement thus challenged is about upon a par with another statement made in the majority report, that those who do not believe that a majority can exclude can reserve the right to make the point of order that the resolution is not carried if two-thirds do not vote for it.

Suppose such a point of order were made and the Speaker should rule one way or the other upon the question and there should be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, how many votes under the rules does it take to sustain the Chair? So at last it is seen that a majority will control in any event the disposition of the resolution reported by the majority.

It does not follow from this that if the member presenting the certificate does not possess the constitutional qualifications, his seat can not be declared vacant by a majority vote, under section 5, Article I, which provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. The point I make is that the member "chosen" is primarily, by the ipse dixit of law, a member of the House of Representatives, whether qualified or not, until that fact is ascertained and declared by an investigation, which can not be had until after organization, pending which he has the right to vote on all questions that may come before the House; that the oath of office is as much an incident of his having been chosen by the people of the State as the salary, franking privilege, etc.—no more and no less.

Again, the Representative from Utah, if Justice is the blind goddess which she is represented to be, and if he is to be given the equal protection of the law, whatever may be his moral character, is entitled to have the scope of that investigation confined to the subjects of qualifications written in the Constitution, and if he is then able to run the gantlet of a majority vote which the Constitution provides for in that particular, he is entitled to invoke and demand the two-thirds vote provided for by subsection 2 of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution, which controls the discretion of Congress in expelling a member. To say otherwise would be to deny the equal protection of the law, and disgrace and discredit the instrument which we are sworn to uphold, protect, and defend. I say that polygamy is at present no constitutional disqualification to a seat in Congress. But I say, with all the emphasis that I can command, it ought to be, and I here pledge you my cooperation to secure an amendment to the Constitution of our country making it a disqualification.

But if we are willing to measure up to that high standard of virtue which animates the people and which has found expression in the huge pyramid of petitions that blockaded for a while the corridors of this Capitol, we are not left powerless. Subsection 2 of section 5 of Article I provides as follows:

Each House may determine the rule of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the consent of two-thirds expel a member.

Under this section let us write the people's indictment. Let us say that he be expelled, not because he is a Mormon, not because he is not a citizen and therefore ineligible. To say this begs the question, confuses the issue, and gives away the people's cause. But let us say that because the Representative from the State of Utah is a polygamist at present, maintaining unholy, unlawful, and open relations with a plurality of women to the evident demoralization of the common standard of virtue, therefore it does not comport with the dignity of this House to sit with him, and that he be expelled, expressing a verdict that is responsive to the issue drawn by the people, unclouded by any doubtful supplementary pleading superimposed to bolster an expediency that is itself grounded in a misconception and is both dangerous and revolutionary.

The people themselves have conceded possible difficulties in the way of ousting the Representative from Utah and have demanded no circumlocution or sacrifice of good faith at our hands. Nor will they be satisfied with a victory purchased at a loss of security, especially as a previous poll of this House has demonstrated that their will can be accomplished in an admittedly constitutional way.

A sample of what the people have demanded is contained in the copy of one of the petitions, which is as follows:

To the Hon. —— ——, Representative-elect of the —— Congressional district of the State of —— to the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, legally qualified voters of the said —— Congressional district of the State of ——, do hereby most respectfully and most earnestly call upon you as our Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure the prompt expulsion of Mr. B. H. Roberts, of Utah, the avowed polygamist and covenant breaker, from the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of the national Constitution in Article I, section 5, paragraph 2, which reads as follows: "Each House of Congress may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member."

We also do most earnestly and most respectfully call upon you to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure action by the Fifty-sixth Congress proposing an amendment to the national Constitution, and submitting the same to the legislatures of the several States, defining legal marriage to be monogamic, and making polygamy, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States punishable by severe penalties, including disfranchisement and disqualification to vote or to hold any office of honor or emolument under the United States or any State or Territory therein.

This does not undertake to commit us to any doubtful expediency. Then why is it necessary to force those of us who conscientiously hold opinions against the manner of procedure recommended by the majority report to vote against a resolution that he be not sworn, when a resolution of expulsion would command our support?

As the Representative from Utah is made a member of the House of Representatives by the Constitution, as a result of his being chosen by the people of his State, and as the oath of office is a mandatory incident thereto, a resolution to expel him after he is sworn would be constitutional and proper. Any other procedure is in my judgment a violation of the fundamental law which my oath constrains me to oppose.

With respect to the gentleman from Utah personally, I have nothing to say, except that in these trying hours he has conducted himself with ability and dignity. I only deplore the fact that his own acts have put him without the pale of political ambition, in which his great talents would otherwise so justly enable him to shine. But he is not the only man whose folly has overtaken him. Nor will he, perhaps, be the last. His case long hence will illustrate the fact that he who would be safe must obey the moral laws laid down by the Master which measure the common standard of virtue in a Christian Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, there was universal rejoicing throughout the length and breadth of the Union in January, 1896, when the announcement was made that Utah had been admitted into the American Union. Why this rejoicing? Because it was universally conceded that the birth of this new State marked the death of a system that had plagued our people for over half a century, a system that in the history of mankind had been sanctioned by half-civilized tribes and nations, but abandoned even by barbarians after they had tasted of the first fruits of civilization.

There were those who opposed clothing Utah with statehood, who contended that polygamy was not dead, who stoutly maintained that the people of Utah were practicing deception upon the Government and were desirous of changing their political status in order that they might, practically unhindered, "live their religion." But bitter as was the opposition to the admission of that State, none of the opponents of statehood were ever so bold as to charge that in less than three years after the Territory was admitted her people would go to the polls in the sovereign capacity of electors and commission a polygamist as their sole Representative on the floor of this House. Yet Utah did that very thing, and in 1898 the whole country was aroused by the announcement that a polygamist had been elected to the American Congress and was getting ready to move on Washington with a plurality of wives and a multiplicity of children.

That was the first proposition that met the members of this body when they assembled; appeared even before we had effected an organization.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that it is with some embarrassment that I speak on this question, following the distinguished members of the committee who have already been heard. They are both lawyers, men learned and eloquent in their profession, and it seems to be taken for granted, at least by many who have given this question consideration, that none except those who have been accustomed to threading the intricate and devious windings that finally lead up to the headquarters of some legal technicality are equipped to form an opinion or arrive at a logical conclusion.

I am no lawyer. It was the ambition of my early life to be a criminal lawyer. I started in and worked at it just three days, and at the end of the third day ascertained that after all, in criminal cases the jury is the exclusive judge of both law and fact, and I thought that that was an unwarranted reflection upon the profession, and so I decided to join the jury. [Laughter and applause.] And thus to-day, not as a lawyer, but as a layman who has given earnest consideration to this question, I desire to speak. It seems to me that there are just three questions arising in this case: First, is Brigham H. Roberts a polygamist? Second, if Brigham H. Roberts is a polygamist, is he entitled to a seat on the floor of this House? Third, if Brigham H. Roberts is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House, how shall we part company with him? [Laughter.]

The first question is answered in the affirmative—is not even combatted by the gentleman from Utah himself. He is a polygamist, an open and acknowledged and admitted polygamist. Is he, then, entitled to a seat on the floor of this House?

The committee to whom this question was referred answer that unanimously in the negative.

Then, how shall we part company with him? There is a dispute on that proposition, and I must admit that there is some precedent and some constitutional interpretation along both lines. I believe, however, that the constitutional right of this House to exclude Mr. Roberts is as clear as a line of light, and that the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], based upon the committee report, is incontrovertible.

I shall not worry over the contention between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. I am willing to let them settle these intricate questions among themselves. This dispute concerning constitutional interpretation reminds me, however, of a definition that I once heard given of law in the midst of just such a contention as this. A young man asked his father, who was one of those engaged in the discussion, "Father, what is law?" And the father looked at the son, and after a little hesitation replied, "Son, law is the last guess of the Supreme Court." [Laughter.] And I am inclined to agree with that definition, and I now address the court that has the last guess.

I claim and shall contend that Mr. Brigham H. Roberts is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House and should be stopped at yon threshold, because he has violated the condition predicated upon which Utah was admitted into the American Union.

The gentleman from Maine may call that a "consideration," an "agreement," a "condition," a "compact," or whatever he will, and he may laugh and sneer at it; still that condition precedent is there. That is the highway Utah traveled into the Union, and on that same highway we will send her Representative from the door of this House. That compact or agreement was made only a few years ago, and to it I desire to call your attention.

Utah had made six unsuccessful attempts to change her status from that of a Territory to that of a State. No one objected to her admission on the ground that she did not have sufficient population; no one objected because she did not possess material wealth; no one contended that her future was not hopeful, but each time the head of the serpent of polygamy lifted itself in her pathway, and finally Utah concluded that she could never secure statehood until she had purged herself of that plague and had thrown off her scarlet mantle. The church realized that, and in 1890 issued this manifesto:

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent, for political purposes, from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June, or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy, or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice; and I deny that either forty or any number of plural marriages have during that period been solemnized in our temples or in any other places in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage was performed in the endowment house, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1888.

But I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony. Whatever was done in the matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the endowment house was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence over the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teaching he has been promptly reproved; and I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the laws of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the last two paragraphs of this manifesto.

In the proceedings by which the Mormon Church secured the return of certain church property escheated to the United States an interpretation of that was made by Mr. Wilford Woodruff, the president of the church, who signed it, and several of the leading apostles, who, under oath, testified that that manifesto was a pledge not only against the contraction of future polygamous marriages, but that it covered all marriages already contracted, and prohibited polygamous or unlawful cohabitation with prior acquired wives.

President Harrison, noted not only for his ability and splendid patriotism but for his caution and candor, seeing the way things were drifting, took alarm and sounded this warning in his annual message of December 9, 1891:

The legislation of Congress for the repression of polygamy has, after years of resistance on the part of the Mormons, at last brought them to the conclusion that resistance is unprofitable and unavailing. The power of Congress over this subject should not be surrendered until we have satisfactory evidence that the people of the State to be created would exercise the exclusive power of the State over this subject in the same way. The question is not whether these people now obey the laws of Congress against polygamy, but, rather, would they make, enforce, and maintain such laws themselves if absolutely free to regulate the subject? We can not afford to experiment with this subject, for when a State is once constituted the act is final and any mistake irretrievable.

That warning brought from the heads of the Utah church a petition for amnesty. They began to be alarmed and desired to give additional assurances of their good faith. A petition praying that by proclamation the President would relieve them of certain disabilities was presented. This petition recited that polygamy, formerly taught as commanded by God and honestly and sincerely practiced by the people, had been abandoned, and that they were now weary in body and mind, their people were scattered, their homes were made desolate, many of them were in prison, while others were banished or in hiding, and concluded with these words:

This being the true situation, and believing that the object of the Government was simply the vindication of its own authority and to compel obedience to its laws, * * * we respectfully pray that full amnesty be extended, * * * and as shepherds of a patient and suffering people we ask amnesty for them, and pledge our faith and honor for their future.

This prayer was granted, based upon the manifesto of 1890, the petition for amnesty, and the sworn statements that unlawful cohabitation had ceased. Aye, the Government went further. Previously, by reason of the polygamous practice of this people, certain church property had been escheated to the Government. Having convinced the people of the country and the President of the United States that they were obeying the law, they were given back their church property, the joint resolution dated October 25, 1893, restoring it to them containing these words:

Whereas said church has discontinued the practice of polygamy and no longer encourages or gives countenance in manner to practices in violation of law or contrary to good morals or public policy.

Upon this "whereas" their property was restored.

About this time a movement was made looking toward statehood, and an enabling act was introduced, referred to a committee, and that committee reported favorably.

And I want this House to note the words of the committee presenting that report. The report was presented May 17, 1894, and reads, in part, as follows:

While your committee condemn the doctrine of polygamy and hold that so long as the Mormons constituted the larger part of the population of the Territory of Utah, and personally, or as a matter of faith, with or without the practice, believed in the doctrine of polygamy, then it was proper and right for the Federal Government to use all of its vast powers to secure the overthrow and destruction of that practice; yet in view of the foregoing facts set forth in this report, as well as the concurrent testimony of all parties interested in the welfare of Utah who have appeared before your committee at its hearings upon this subject during the present Congress, as well as the vast amount of testimony submitted to your committee during the Fiftieth Congress upon the same topics, compel your committee to believe, without doubt or hesitation, that the institution of polygamy as taught by the Mormon Church, whether of faith or of practice, is now absolutely stamped out and exterminated.

That committee's report concluded with these words:

In view of the foregoing, political reasons alone can no longer be urged to delay the admission of Utah as a State.

All mouths should be hushed and all opposition silenced after the President has amnestied all past offenses; after both political parties in national convention assembled have declared that the time has come for the admission of all the Territories, of which Utah is one; after the Territorial conventions of 1892, wherein both of said great parties declared for statehood and that the hour is ripe for the admission of Utah; after the legislature of Utah has declared unanimously for statehood; after the governor of the Territory, all of its Territorial officers, and its judiciary, all of whom are Republicans in politics, have declared that in their opinion polygamy is abolished and at an end; after all the members of the Utah Commission, a commission created expressly to crush and obliterate polygamy, have declared their work practically accomplished; after the Mormon Church, through all of its heads and officials, publicly, privately, and in every way possible for mortals to do and proclaim, have, with bowed heads, if not in anguish, pledged their faith and honor that never more in the future shall polygamy within the Mormon Church be either a doctrine of faith or of practice, there certainly can be but one sentiment, but one opinion, among all just-minded legislators in Congress upon the question of duty, and that is, to admit Utah as a State into the Federal Union.

Upon the report of that committee that enabling act came before this House. Notwithstanding that report there was opposition to Utah's admission. Debate was exhaustive, the chief advocate of statehood being Mr. RAWLINS, then a Delegate from Utah to this House. His assurances were absolutely complete. He left no doubt in the minds of the members of this House as to the conditions then prevailing in Utah. Polygamy was dead. Polygamy and its practice, according to his statements, had not only been abandoned as a practice, but eradicated as a belief, and he pledged the faith and honor of all his people, gentiles and Mormons, infidels and churchmen, to the solemn keeping of that pledge.

I want to read to this House a few extracts from that address:

Mr. MORSE. Is it not a fact that prior to the election of the gentlemen the Territory of Utah sent here as their representative Mr. Cannon, a man who had six wives?

Mr. RAWLINS. No, sir.

Mr. MORSE. How many wives did he have?

Mr. RAWLINS. You mean George Q. Cannon?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir; he was a polygamist, was he not?

Mr. RAWLINS. That is ancient history, my friend. Mr. Caine has represented Utah here; he was my predecessor as a Delegate from the Territory. He served here ten years. Mr. Caine is not a polygamist. In 1882 Mr. Cannon, the polygamist you speak of, was excluded from his seat in Congress on account of his polygamy.

Mr. MORSE. But he represented the sentiments of those people all the same, because they elected and sent him here.

Mr. RAWLINS. They elected him in years gone by. I am not denying, my dear friends, that in 1853 or in 1860 or 1875 or 1890 polygamy was practiced in Utah. I am not denying that the people of that Territory elected polygamists to office in those old days. But the gentleman does not seem to know that the world does progress. There is nothing under the sun that is not changeable and subject to alteration.

Again:

As I stated before, I believe there is absolutely no peril, so far as any apprehension entertained by anybody on the subject of polygamy, that that practice will ever under any circumstances be revived in that Territory.

Again:

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that a change has taken place in Utah. How that change has been brought about may be interesting to gentlemen who are not familiar with its history. The making and the enforcement of laws by Congress has had something to do with it. There is no question about that. But there has also been developing for many years past in the Territory of Utah a sentiment among the people who have been born and brought up there which has had a great deal to do with this change. The eradication or discontinuance of polygamy is perhaps due first to external pressure, but still more largely to the efforts of people within the Mormon Church itself to bring about the reform of the organization in that respect.

It should be borne in mind that but a very small proportion of the Mormon people have ever practiced polygamy. Those who did not practice it saw the evil consequences which flowed from its practice, the unhappiness which it caused in families, and that it rendered the people of Utah obnoxious to the prevailing sentiment of the age. Its practice disturbed the tranquillity, impeded the progress, retarded the growth, darkened the character, and destroyed the prosperity and happiness of the people.

Thousands of non-Mormons have come into Utah and made their homes there. Our schools are free; attendance is required; they are nonsectarian. Education has been freely disseminated. Under such conditions, polygamy, having once been suppressed or extirpated, is not likely to be revived.

And further:

The elders of the Mormon Church got up and said that this came to the people with all the force of a revelation, and was binding upon them; and many of the Mormon people have testified in court when occasion has arisen when such testimony would be relevant, that they regard that as a revelation from Almighty God; that they no longer believe polygamy and its practice to be right; and in effect it is not only discontinued as a practice, but so far as the great mass of the Mormon people is concerned it is eradicated as a belief. But the people of Utah—I think I can speak for them on this question—mean, I believe, what they say. They are engaged in no scheme of fraud or treachery by which to deceive the nation. Having made this pledge and on this pledge asked this action by the American Congress, I think I can say for them that they will stand by it though the heavens fall.

Those are the words of Mr. RAWLINS, the sole representative from the Territory of Utah on the floor of this House when Utah asked to be admitted into the American Union. I was very much surprised a few weeks ago, having read that speech, to see in the press of this city a statement authorized and prepared by this same gentleman. Referring to the statement that the people of Utah have elected polygamists or persons in that status to office, he said:

This is true in some instances, and it is equally true that the United States, acting by the President, with the consent of the Senate, has appointed polygamists to office, and under such appointments for almost three years these polygamists have held and are now holding important Federal offices in the State of Utah. If this be a violation of the compact, both parties have violated it, the President on the one hand and the electors of the State on the other. No more have the people of Utah than the President sought to cram polygamy down the throat of the nation or the State. Such a motive can not be justly ascribed to either.

The then Delegate from the State of Utah making that speech, conditioned upon which Utah was admitted to the Union, now uttering these words printed by his own authority!

Polygamists appointed to office in the State of Utah!

We thought there were no polygamists in the State of Utah.

That State came into the Union on condition that polygamy and polygamous practices had been absolutely abandoned; and yet the then Delegate in the United States House of Representatives now charges the President of the United States with being equally guilty of attempting to "cram polygamy down the throats of the American people." That is not an arraignment of the President of the United States, but it is an arraignment of the then Delegate from Utah. That is an arraignment of the people of Utah who pledged their faith and honor to the solemn keeping of their pledge and covenant. [Applause.] No man who knows the President of the United States would think for a moment that he would knowingly appoint a notorious polygamist to a Federal office in Utah or any other State. No one would believe that for an instant.

Mr. RAWLINS could have gone further in that statement. He could have charged that the Speaker of this House had indorsed polygamy and had attempted to "cram it down the throats of the American people." He could have charged that the leader of the minority had indorsed polygamy and had attempted to "cram it down the throats of the American people." He could as well have charged that this House and the coordinate branch of this National Legislature had done the same thing. Why? Because there passed through this House at the last session of Congress a bill appropriating $40,000 for the agricultural college at Logan, Utah. The president of that college—and I make this charge on my honor as a Representative—the president of that college is a polygamist, living in open and notorious polygamy with three wives. One of his leading professors is a polygamist, living in open and notorious polygamy with two wives. A trustee, who guides and directs the business interests of that college, is a polygamist, living in open and notorious polygamy with seven wives [laughter], and they have blessed him with thirty-nine children. [Laughter.]

Did the President of the United States indorse polygamy? If he did, then both branches of this Congress have indorsed polygamy. He is innocent and we are innocent—innocent because we put faith in the pledge and promise of those pious covenant breakers. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS, when he published that statement in the newspapers, could also have published some other things with reference to Utah, and to these other things I want at this time to call the attention of this House. He might have stated that three of the members of the first presidency and ten of the twelve apostles were in Utah and affixed their signatures to this petition for amnesty upon which they railroaded their State into this Union. Two others would have signed it had they not been absent from the country at the time.

Mr. RAWLINS could have stated truthfully that of these fifteen leaders who solemnly pledged their honor and faith for future obedience to the law on the part of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, three have probably kept their pledge, namely Wilfred Woodruff, Franklin D. Richards, and Anthon H. Lund. The first two named were at the time of the signing of the petition for amnesty over eighty years of age, and hence for all practical purposes barred by the statute of limitation. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS could have stated that of the other members of the first presidency and twelve apostles eleven have been guilty of the violation of the letter of the law and their pledges, while one other is at least morally guilty, namely, George Q. Cannon, first counselor to the president of the church. He could have stated that on the death of Elizabeth Hoagland Cannon, his lawful wife, and after taking unto himself as additional wives Sarah Jane Cannon, Martha Tulley Cannon, and Eliza T. Cannon, and after having pleaded guilty and having been a fugitive from justice, having forfeited his bail and "served a term honorably in the penitentiary" [laughter], Mr. CANNON now claims to be legally married to one Caroline Croxall, a fifth wife, by whom he has had two children, and he and all his wives live in a suburb near Salt Lake City, having no neighbors, and it is known as Cannonville. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS might have said that Joseph F. Smith, second counselor to the presidency, has three women among whom he distributes the title of wife, Julina and Edna, who are sisters, and Mary, all of whom have children born to him since 1890, since the issuance of that manifesto; that said children are acknowledged by Smith as his offspring, and that at this time both Mary and Edna have young children of whom Smith is the recognized father. Mr. RAWLINS could stand upon solid ground in the open and bold declaration that Joseph F. Smith, second counselor to the presidency, is a defiant polygamist.

Mr. RAWLINS might have stated that Lorenzo Snow, now president, prophet, seer, and revelator, called "the literal mouthpiece of God," and by others of the church the "boss of Jehovah's buckler" [laughter], and at the time of the signing of the petition for amnesty president of the quorum of apostles, is also trampling under foot the solemn compact made with the Government. It will be remembered that President Snow was one of those who under oath interpreted the manifesto and declared that the manifesto of 1890 prohibited unlawful cohabitation with polygamous wives as well as the ceremony of taking additional wives. Snow had participated in nine matrimonial ventures. He was first married over forty years ago, in Nauvoo, Ill., to two women, Adaline and Carlotta. He took these two wives by one and the same ceremony—in a block of two, as it were. [Laughter.] The elder of the two women has since died, and he has since married, in order named, Sarah, Harriet, Elinor, Mary, Phœbe, Minnie, and Caroline. [Laughter.] Would you not like to sit down to breakfast in that family? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Was any of that evidence before your committee?

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. RAWLINS appeared before our committee voluntarily and gave evidence touching the matters at issue in this investigation.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Are you reading from evidence taken before your committee?

Mr. LANDIS. I am not required to read from evidence taken before the committee. As I stated before, I am one of the jury and have found some facts. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. You avoid the answer.

Mr. LANDIS. You will see whether I avoid the issue by the time I get through with this. [Laughter.] I can not yield further now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. The gentleman declines now to answer my question.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield further.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I am not hairsplitting now. I am not chasing legal technicalities now. I am a layman. I am after facts. [Laughter.] I want to know whether or not these pious apostles have kept their pledge. I want to know whether or not these conditions based upon which they brought their State into the Union have been trampled under foot. And if the gentleman will permit I will give some light on this question.

Now, referring again to Mr. Snow. The supreme court of Utah, having Snow's matrimonial puzzle under consideration, decided that marriages in blocks of two are void, and that therefore Sarah, who is still alive, the third member of his polygamous household, is the legal wife of Lorenzo Snow. Notwithstanding this decision of the supreme court, and notwithstanding the manifesto and his sworn interpretation of it, and notwithstanding the petition for amnesty signed by Snow, he is living with the youngest and last wife to whom he was married when he was in his sixtieth year, and she a mere lass of 15 years.

By this last and youngest polygamous wife, although the president, prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, Snow has five children, the youngest being born during the winter of 1896–97, three years after that petition for amnesty pledging the faith and honor of the church had been issued. A sworn complaint charging Prophet Snow with adultery with his ninth wife was made within the past six months. The county attorney of Salt Lake County refused to prosecute him on the ground that he was not satisfied with the decision of the supreme court that Sarah was the legal wife. Here we have the inspiring spectacle of a "Jack-Mormon" county attorney overruling the supreme court of Utah, doubtless to secure some political favors from that polygamous hierarchy.

Mr. RAWLINS could have stated that Moses Thatcher, at that time one of the apostles who signed the petition for amnesty, had plural wives—Lydia Thatcher, Anne Clayton Thatcher, and Anne Snow Thatcher—two of whom had borne him children, one of them on January 8, 1899, and the other on January 11, 1899. They lacked just three days of being twins. [Great laughter.] Mr. RAWLINS could have made a great impression on the country by calling attention to the fact that within sixty days after the birth of these children by these polygamous wives Moses Thatcher was, by a majority of the members of the legislature of Utah, tendered a seat in the United States Senate, and that Moses Thatcher, having more discretion than Mr. Roberts or the people of Utah, declined the honor, stating that he would not add fuel to the flames already kindled by Mr. Roberts's election. So you see we had a narrow escape from having trouble in both ends of this Capitol. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS could have also stated that at the date of the signing of this petition for amnesty Francis M. Lyman, an apostle whose name was affixed thereto, had three wives—Rhoda Lyman, Clara Calister Lyman, and Susan Calister Lyman. In 1898 one of those wives died, and now Rhoda lives at Tooele and Susan at Fillmore, Utah; that Susan, the last polygamous wife, has given birth to two children since 1896.

Mr. RAWLINS could also have stated that in 1890 Heber J. Grant, another apostle who signed the petition for amnesty, had three wives, distributed as follows: One in Salt Lake, one in Colorado, and one in Idaho. The apostle Heber was evidently getting in shape to hold an interstate family reunion. [Laughter.] In 1892 his legal wife, who resided in Utah, died, and his then second wife was promoted and became his recognized lawful wife and made her home with him in Salt Lake City. The apostle Heber evidently subscribed to the merit system, and was adopting the civil-service rule in the matter of matrimonial promotion. [Laughter.]

In 1896, subsequent to statehood, the other wife, Emily Wells, moved to the city of Salt Lake and in a short time presented happy Heber with a child; in September of the year 1899 she presented the holy apostle Heber with another child; and when sworn information charging him with adultery was filed in July, 1899, it was rejected by the "Jack-Mormon" county attorney for Salt Lake County on the ground that it could not be proved that Heber had any legal wife. [Laughter.] Subsequently the charge of unlawful cohabitation was lodged against this saintly apostle, to which charge he pleaded guilty and was fined $100.

Mr. RAWLINS could also have stated that John Henry Smith, another apostle who signed the petition for amnesty and who stated before a Congressional committee that polygamy was as dead as slavery and could not even be restored by a mandate of the church, has a plural wife who goes under the name and style of Mrs. Josephine G. Smith and lives at No. 80 West First North street, Salt Lake City, on the same block with John Henry, and is his acknowledged wife. In 1895, during the time when John Henry Smith was sitting as presiding officer of the constitutional convention which drafted the constitution of the coming State of Utah, Josephine G. Smith, his plural wife, bore him a child; and again in 1898, when John Henry Smith was preparing to run as a candidate for the United States Senate, she gladdened his heart with another, both of them children by a plural wife. [Laughter.]

These are but a few of the violations of the "compact," or "agreement," or "consideration," or "provision," which even the astute gentleman from Maine desires to label it, based upon which Utah was given a star. Ah, Mr. Speaker, that star is a false star; it does not shine with the brilliancy and luster of its sister stars. Its glitter is that of cunning and deceit, of treachery and fraud. It stands for crime and for a violation of the most solemn covenant ever made between a Territory and the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. RAWLINS could have stated that John W. Taylor, another apostle who signed the petition for amnesty, had a legal wife, formerly May Rich. He evidently liked the family and gave it his indorsement by taking as his fifth wife a woman by the name of Todd, an aunt of May Rich. His third investment in matrimonial stock was Rachael Wooley, and in January, 1896, Minnie Christiensen, residing at Gunnison, suddenly assumed the name and style of Mrs. John Taylor. I wish the gentleman from Maine were here; I would like to ask him if he thought we ought to split on technicalities much longer. I would like to ask him if in the face of this record of broken pledges he can find much consolation in legal quibbling.

On June 17, 1896, Minnie Christensen provided John with a child, and in a few days thereafter he appeared at the "blessing ceremony" and officiated as its father. Now, listen. At the present moment, Nellie Cobb, the second wife of this apostle, who pawned all the faith and honor he had in stock with the National Government when petitioning for amnesty, has a baby about four months old, and the third wife, Rachel, has one about two months old. With great vehemence Mr. RAWLINS could have testified that if Nellie Todd and Rachel Wooley and Minnie Christensen had been joined to Taylor prior to 1890, the date when the manifesto was issued, none but this sanctified apostle, his three plural wives, and a limited number of the brethren and "sistern" on the inside of the charmed circle knew anything about it until long after that date. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS could also have charged that Mariner Merrill, another apostle who signed the petition, is the proud possessor of no less than seven wives, living at Logan, Richmond, and Lewiston, in Utah, and in Franklin, Idaho, and by these various wives Merrill has 39 children, a number of whom are polygamists themselves. The wife at Franklin, Idaho, was known as Mrs. Toronto until 1898. When the returns next came in from Idaho the announcement was made that a child had been born to Merrill and is known by his name. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS could also have stated that Abraham H. Cannon, who signed the petition for amnesty, was at the time of the signing the fond husband of Sarah Cannon, Wilhelmina Cannon, Rachael Cooley Cannon, and, notwithstanding all this connubial bliss, in 1896 he took another in the person of a Miss Hamlin, then a school-teacher in Salt Lake City. Soon after Abraham Cannon died. Lilian was with him when he died, and received a part of his estate. At his funeral all his wives were present, three of them with infants in their arms. Lilian H. Hamlin subsequently became a mother, and took her offspring with her to New York, where she attended a normal school under the name of Mrs. Abraham H. Cannon, and she is now employed as a teacher in a church academy at Provo, Utah, as the widow of this good apostle.

Mr. RAWLINS could also have called the attention of the country to the two other apostles who, through absence from the country, were prevented from signing the amnesty petition, namely, Brigham Young, jr., and George Teasdale, and that, though absent, they were not idle; that Brigham Young, jr., while he was a fugitive from justice took unto himself wives until he now has five, namely, Catherine Young, Jane M. Carrington Young, Lizzie Fenton Young, Helen Armstrong Young, and Abbie Stevens Young, and that he undoubtedly married the latter subsequent to the signing and issuance of the amnesty of 1890.

Mr. RAWLINS could also have stated that George Teasdale for the past twenty years or more has been known as the lawful husband of Lillian Hook Teasdale; that, in addition to Lillian Hook Teasdale, he married in days past two sisters, Pixton by name; that for this deft touch of matrimonial coquetry [laughter] he was indicted and fled the country; that both of these women died leaving small children, and that in 1893 a young woman by the name of Mary E. Scoles accompanied her mother from England to Utah as Mormon converts; that in May, 1896, this second woman went to Nephi, Utah, to take charge of the children born to Teasdale by the Pixton sisters and then in charge of Lillian Hook Teasdale; that on the 10th of December, 1898, she became a mother; that the poor woman died in childbirth; that Apostle George Teasdale was present at her funeral in the capacity of chief mourner, and subsequently erected over her grave a tombstone, of which I have a photograph, upon which tombstone appears this legend: "Sacred to the memory of Meriam E. Scoles, wife of Apostle George Teasdale, born in London, England, April 8, 1868; died December 17, 1898."

And thus, Mr. Speaker, had Mr. RAWLINS, at present Senator from Utah, gone into this matter he would have shown that of the three members of the first presidency and twelve apostles, whose faith and honor were solemnly pledged to the keeping of the solemn covenant against polygamous practices, eleven have been open, notorious violators of the law against unlawful cohabitation, and three of them undoubtedly have taken new wives since the issuance of the manifesto of 1890.

Mr. Speaker, we have two penitentiaries in Indiana. I am more or less familiar with both of them, for, as Bob Ingersoll would say, I have friends at both places. [Laughter.] We have in that State what is known as the parole system. Prisoners are put out on their good behavior. I say deliberately that you will search the records of these two penal institutions in vain to find a parallel for such open, willful, deliberate, wicked violation of a compact as we find here. [Applause.] In addition, we have as a Representative from Utah a man with three wives, the last one taken, as near as can be ascertained, about 1896 or 1897. It is in evidence that he did not hold her out as his wife nor she him as her husband until 1897. Up to 1895 she lived under the name of Mrs. Shipp, and until 1893 under the roof of Mr. Shipp, whose polygamous wife she was still supposed to be. For it must be remembered that Mr. Shipp is still living.

I do not believe that if any marriage ceremony was ever solemnized between the gentleman from Utah and Mrs. Maggie Shipp, that it was solemnized prior to 1896. I believe, and he did not deny, that that woman became his plural wife after Utah was taken into the American Union.

I charge here that a reading of the debates and the committee reports leading up to the admission of that State into the American Union will bear out the charge that Utah came in as the result of a deliberate fraud, the object being to free that people from the heavy hand of Federal authority and thus enable them to "live their religion." Why do I make that charge? Because in 1895 Mr. Roberts was a candidate for Congress. Yes, he was; and the church disciplined him for being such candidate. In my judgment Mr. Roberts was defeated because the polygamous leaders deemed the time not then ripe for Utah to be represented by one of their number in the American Congress.

He became a candidate in 1898, and the man who placed him before the convention stated that he ran by permission of the church leaders. He had done penance and now was permitted to run, permitted to make the race in 1898. Why did they give them their consent? I will tell you why. The time seems to have been considered peculiarly appropriate and the circumstances in every way favorable for the dominant element in Utah to drag forth their cherished institution and ask this Government to dignify it and give it national sanction. Note the particular time—the summer and fall of 1898. Just then this nation was engaged in war with a foreign foe; our Treasury and the blood of our best sons had been dedicated to the cause that another people, oppressed for centuries, should be free.

It was a period when manhood was away from home or all absorbed in country; when valor was at war and virtue was at prayer; when adversity and opulence had become brothers and capital and labor had marshaled for a common fight against a common foe. It was a time when the people of all the States were eagerly waiting for messages from those fighting an insidious foe under tropical skies or wasting with disease on polluted tented fields. Animosity had vanished; talk of sections and classes had ceased; all was merged in a common brotherhood for country; everybody seemed willing to forgive and anxious to forget. It was then, just then, this perjured cheat crawled back. It hoped at least to be tolerated in the midst of every evidence of national magnanimity.

It came by stealth. Sir, it came by stealth, but it will be hurled back boldly and in the open day by the righteous indignation of the American people. [Applause.] And across yon threshold will be written in letters large enough to be read from the National Capitol to the Mormon temple, "No polygamist shall ever sit as a member of the American Congress." [Applause.]

In this connection I recall that the gentleman from Utah, Mr. Roberts, has been especially severe on the missionary. The missionary appears to be the chief object of the wrath of the aiders and comforters of polygamy. The missionary is branded as a "sectarian bigot," a "spy," an "informer."

I admit that the Christian missionary has stood in the way of the polygamist—has scattered thorns along his path. It is a matter of history that although the priests and apostles of this fanaticism, with their deluded followers, placed 1,500 miles of trackless territory infested with savages between civilization and their camp of bigotry and crime, the distance was not too great nor the hardships too severe to daunt the missionary of the Christian Church; he tracked polygamy to its lair. At times he was not diplomatic; I admit that all missionaries are not at all times diplomats, but he was bold, he was daring, he was defiant.

The "Danites," as pitiless a band of cutthroats as ever handled the glittering steel, carried on their murderous work of the church, but the missionary battled on; the "Blood Atoners" silenced in death the voice of apostasy, but the missionary worked on; the Government practically withdrew from that valley of sighs and tears, admitting its inability to cope with a monster so thoroughly intrenched amidst those mountains, but the missionary, with a courage that now seems sublime and a fidelity that to this day is an inspiration, battled on in the fear of God and for the love of humanity; and for this, in the American Congress, in the twentieth century, he is designated as a "spotter," he is pilloried as a "spy and an informer." But he can contemplate it all with serenity; the day of his triumph is at hand, and the missionary of the future, as he journeys westward for embarkation for the islands of the eastern sea, may well pause on the mountain top overlooking the valley of the American Jordan, that matchless sweep of beauty and fertility, of domestic peace and purity, and survey it as a conqueror. For that, in my judgment, is the field where in anguish and prayer he has won his greatest victory. [Great applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman from Utah called attention to the fact that the gentile communities all gave him an overwhelming majority. They did, but he did not tell you why. Brigham H. Roberts was nominated as a Democrat, was a polygamist, and stood on the Chicago platform, declaring for "the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without the aid or consent of any other nation on earth." [Laughter.] Alma Eldredge was nominated as a Republican, presumably upon the St. Louis platform, representing, as our friends on the other side would say, "vast aggregations of consolidated wealth." [Laughter.] Mr. Eldredge was not a polygamist, but Mr. Eldredge was a Danite. Mr. Eldredge was a Blood Atoner.

Mr. Eldredge had murdered his man as a member of that infamous instrument of the church for the extirpation of apostasy, was indicted, arraigned for trial, and escaped conviction simply because the witness against him had in the meantime been killed. Is it any wonder the gentleman carried the gentile communities in Utah and the mining camps? I would not have voted for Eldredge, nor I would not have voted for Brigham H. Roberts. The Populist candidate was an infidel without possible chance for election. [Laughter.] Under the circumstances is it at all remarkable that Mr. Roberts should have received gentile votes?

In the face of all the facts here recited it surely can not be said that the people of Utah have kept faith with the people of the nation. Those who have not the courage to defend openly this pledge breaking are now making technical arguments to demonstrate that the State of Utah could not make a compact limiting its sovereign power over the subject of polygamy. Gentlemen on this floor have even contended that Utah could amend the anti-polygamy provision of its constitution without the consent of the United States, notwithstanding a provision contained therein that that consent was necessary to repeal the constitutional inhibition against polygamy. Why, sir, State after State has come into this Union with limitations put upon their sovereign power by their enabling acts other than the limitations prescribed by the Federal Constitution.

I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to the enabling acts of Wisconsin, California, Texas, Oregon, Illinois, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Missouri. If he will search diligently and without prejudice, he will doubtless find that other States, in addition to those I have named, have had limitations imposed upon their sovereignty as a condition to statehood—have, as a matter of fact, entered into a compact with the National Government, just as Utah entered into a compact.

Congress has the power to grant or withhold statehood. From this the power to grant upon condition is necessarily implied. Congress having the power to impose a condition and the State having power to accept or reject the condition, by its acceptance the contract is complete. Congress, having the power to impose the accepted condition, has by necessary implication the power to enforce its performance.

When Utah sought admission to the Union in 1888 it offered such a condition as is now incorporated in the enabling act and also incorporated in Utah's constitution. The Hon. Jeremiah M. Wilson was then employed by the dominant church of Utah and made an argument upon this subject which is instructive in the present case. While urging statehood before a Congressional committee he said:

> Nebraska was admitted into the Union, and Nebraska was required to enter into a compact that slavery should never exist in that State without the consent of Congress. Nobody has ever doubted the propriety of entering into such compact, nor has anybody ever doubted the binding character of that compact. Congress has never asked for guaranties that the compact would be kept by the State.
>
> There can not be any doubt as to the right to enter into such a compact. Congress has been acting upon such a right for more than three-fourths of a century; has admitted many States upon compacts precisely similar in principle. It is too late to dispute it now.
>
> But that is not the objection here urged. The question I am now considering is whether Congress can enforce it if made.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> If it may be made, then the right to enforce it follows by necessary implication. It is idle to say that such a compact may be made and that when the considerations have been mutually received, statehood on the one side and the pledge not to do a particular thing on the other, either party can violate it without remedy to the other.
>
> But you ask me what is the remedy, and I answer that there are plenty of remedies, and in your own hands.
>
> Suppose they violated this compact; suppose that after they put this into the constitution, and thereby induced you to grant them the high privilege and political right of statehood, they should turn right around and exercise the bad faith which is attributed to them here; what would you do? You could shut the doors of the Senate and House of Representatives against them; you could deny them a voice in the councils of this nation, because they have acted in bad faith and violated their solemn agreement by which they succeeded in getting themselves into the condition of statehood.
>
> You could deny them the Federal judiciary; you could deny them the right to use the mails, that indispensable thing in the matter of trade and commerce of this country. There are many ways in which peaceably, but all powerfully, you could compel the performance of that compact. Congress could reach such a case and not put a tithe of the strain on the Constitution that it was subjected to when the act was passed authorizing the attachment and arrest of a witness who had not been subpœnaed, and forfeiting the property of this church and commanding the courts what kind of a judgment to render. After these, Congress can not doubt its ability to devise means to meet the emergencies, or its courage to grapple with troublesome questions.

Mr. Speaker, all that the majority of your committee is now demanding is that the people of Utah shall be required to pay the penalty which they pledged should they be guilty of violating such a compact.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Utah attempts to belittle the opposition to Utah's covenant breaking by referring to it as an illustration of woman's hysteria, and he says that all would be serene in Utah to-day were it not for this hysteria.

It is true that woman, the American woman, is the head and front of this uprising, and I believe the gentleman from Utah has unconsciously paid the womanhood of America the highest tribute it has received. And why should she not be the head and front of this movement? Whom does it concern more than woman? The home is her world, and whatever menaces the peace or the security or the sanctity of that home is a war upon her. This is the reason she waged such relentless warfare against human slavery. This is the reason she hates whisky, and, whatever the shortcomings of the American man, he knows that woman is right, and his love and affection for her are in proportion as her standard is high and her rule inflexible.

"The hysteria of women!" Had the gentleman been on Sinai with Moses when he received the Ten Commandments he would have pronounced the Decalogue as evidence of the "hysteria" of God. This is not the "hysteria of women." It is the voice of sober, settled, womanly conviction. It is the cry of threatened honor. It is the plea for the home and the protest against the harem. To the everlasting honor and glory of American manhood be it said that at this time the voice of woman does not fall on deaf ears. It has been heard and will be heeded. The Representative from Utah will be sent back to his church and his people, and following him should be sent an amendment to the Federal Constitution that will settle for all time the question of polygamy.

And in this connection I want to say that there have been some sneering allusions made to the gentle and refined and womanly woman who organized this movement. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Utah that she had better give her attention to sin and wickedness nearer home. She is giving her attention to sin and wickedness nearer home. Her work is and always has been practical, but her field is limitless, and her resources, thank God, apparently inexhaustible. [Applause.] As a practical business woman she saw how futile it would be to grapple with vice in the slums of New York while the same vice was permitted to flourish as the dogma of an alleged religion in the new States of the West and at the same time receive the tacit indorsement of the American Congress. Hence her organization of this force, which organization has aroused the nation and attracted the attention of the civilized world. And in this connection I know the House will pardon me if I relate an incident.

Last year it was my pleasure, in company with Mr. LACEY, of Iowa, to visit Santiago, Cuba. The day we left that place we were detained several hours by the trouble and confusion incident to the placing on our transport of a steam launch, a weather-beaten steam launch. Next day, as we were steaming along the southern coast of San Domingo, I saw a bronzed gentleman leaning over the rail and looking down on that launch. I approached him and suggested that it was too bad that we had been delayed by loading such an unsightly craft, to which he replied, "You do not know its history or you would not say that." He then stated that he was a physician, that his name was Ducker, and that he was from Louisville, Ky.; that he had accompanied our Army to Cuba as the representative of a national medical association; that he remained with the Army throughout the campaign, and when yellow fever broke out volunteered to take charge of the yellow-fever hospital. This hospital was situated across the bay from Santiago. I can see it now, its yellow outline contrasting with the green of the mountain foliage that formed the background, suggestive in its isolation.

The physician explained to me that the poor equipment of the hospital was emphasized by lack of means of rapid communication with the city and the transports, an old scow being the only method of communication and transportation. He said he had appealed to the General in charge of the Army for a launch, but none was to be had. He then cabled the War Department in Washington, with the same result. "Then," said he, "as a last resort I wrote a letter to Helen Gould." [Applause.] "The day she received my letter she cabled me, 'I will send you my own steam launch; keep it as long as you have any use for it and then return it.' This is the launch." And then he reverently said, "God bless Helen Gould." [Applause.]

And so I say to-day, "God bless Helen Gould." [Loud applause.] From the day our flag was menaced her wealth became the shield of our country. Our boys fell from wounds and disease and her millions wept, and who knows but that to-day the name that was spoken so reverently at Santiago and Montauk Point is not also on the lips of whispered prayer among those women in Utah who by brutal bigots have been forced to believe that their celestial exaltation will be in proportion as they choke down the instinctive attributes of refined womanhood and minister to the rotten and depraved notions of a corrupt and lustful priesthood? [Applause.]

I call attention to the fact that this alleged Representative from Utah is the first man in this American Republic who has ever sneered at her Christian deeds and at her charitable ministrations.

But I have spoken already too long. I will not trespass longer on the patience of the House. The question upon which the committee is divided is as to how this thing shall be done. How shall we part company with the Representative from Utah? The situation has to be operated on. How shall we operate? The majority says "shut the door against him." The minority says "let him in and then throw him out." I presume that they have decided to do that for the same reason that out in Indiana we always give a man condemned to death a square meal before we hang him. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen of the minority say we should knight him and then decapitate him with the same hand and the same sword with which we knight him. They say that this must be done in the interest of consistency. If their programme represents consistency, then I have never had a proper appreciation of the word. If the men who framed this Constitution ever had in mind such a circuitous method of transacting public business, then we have falsely paid tribute to their straightforwardness and ability. [Laughter.] I have read something of the lives and character of the men who framed this instrument, along whose devious windings the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] spent many happy hours during the past three weeks, and I have never received the impression from my reading of their lives that they ever wore gum boots for the purpose of concealing their whereabouts or that they ever traveled the two sides of an isosceles triangle when they could reach the same point by taking a single straight line. [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen who represent the minority proclaim we must go through this farcical performance in order to satisfy the law. If we were to enter upon such a proceeding we might expect while in the midst of it to hear shrieks of laughter coming from the statues in yonder hall, where in stone we have immortalized the men many of whom assisted in framing that instrument. I would not be surprised upon leaving this Chamber, should we do that, to find that the statue of John Marshall had jumped from its stone pedestal and was running up and down Pennsylvania avenue shrieking, "Maine and Missouri, the intricate and devious, have come together on their interpretation of the Constitution; has it come to this!" [Great laughter.] "Has it come to this!" [Great laughter.] The distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is a great reasoner; he is a great dodger. [Laughter.] How magnificently he glided around the expulsion proposition, knowing full well that he could find neither in the law nor in the Constitution any warrant for expelling a member except for some act committed by the member as such.

He knows that just as well as we do, but he is a lawyer, a devious, winding follower of intricacies, and he does it well. [Laughter.] But his proposition is not only a burlesque on law and on precedents, but it is an outrage on common sense. Should this House indulge in such a performance as he suggests, the people of the country, at whom some gentlemen sneer when they are not candidates for office [laughter], would deride us when we returned to our homes, and rightly so, too. We should stop the gentleman from Utah at yonder threshold. Turn him back because he and his people have violated the condition predicated upon which Utah was admitted into the American Union. Turn him back alone? No; but turn Utah back. He is a mere incident in this discussion. This will not be a rebuke alone to him, but to the people who sent him here, the people who in January, 1896, solemnly lied to the greatest nation on earth. [Applause.]

I protest against his being taken in and then immediately thrown out, because I do not want to make a spectacle of myself [laughter], because I do not want the boys who live during the evening in the corner grocery, who are the exclusive judges of the law and the facts, to laugh at me. [Laughter.]

This may do very well for the law offices in Maine, but it would not stand much show in the logging camps of that State. And if I were required to rest my case either with the gentleman whose mind is filled with these subtle, infinitesimal, occult, legal distinctions or with the men in the logging camps, for God's sake take me to the logging camp! [Laughter.]

I say that the people of this country expect us to turn him back, expect us to prohibit his coming in even for an instant, and I protest against his coming in. I protest on behalf of a constituency that has read the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount. I protest on behalf of the American homes, made beautiful by love and devotion and holy by the virtue of its women. I protest on behalf of the American mother and her child, and the American father who will never consent to the enthronement and deification of human passion. I protest on behalf of those doomed to illegitimacy, that pitiless brand of helplessness and shame that licentiousness writes upon the forehead of the innocent unborn.

I protest on behalf of the honest Mormons, those who believe in keeping inviolate the agreements of that instrument upon which Utah was admitted to the American Union. The people of this country are waiting for us to act; they want us to act in a straight line, not in a circle. They are waiting in New England, whose homes have been made a pattern for this continent. They are waiting in the broad sweep of the Mississippi Valley, a section of this country purged of this very infamy a half century ago. They are waiting in the new States of the West, States whose territory has been invaded and whose atmosphere has been poisoned by this very plague. And away down South in Dixie, where honor is religion, where gallantry is law, and virtue is the high ideal of beautiful womanhood, States are waiting to-day, waiting for American chivalry to speak. [Loud applause].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I attempted to offer an amendment to the resolution of the majority, which has been pending before the House for the last two days. I will not avail myself of this present recognition to reoffer this amendment, because of an agreement had with parties representing the committee that the question should be passed over for further consideration before the final hour for action arrives. But I want now to discuss the proposition involved in that or some similar amendment.

When Louis XVI was on trial before the French convention and the vote was called for, Abbe Sieyes, a member of that convention, voted very laconically. He said, "Death without talk." He proposed directly to come to the very root of the matter before the convention. He was humane. We are more cruel. We punish by a long debate. We impose the talk, to be followed certainly by the sentence which will deprive the gentleman from Utah of the seat which he holds in this House.

The question to which I want to call the attention, especially the lawyers, of this House is this: The agreement on the facts is unanimous, although the committee is divided as to methods. The agreement is also well-nigh unanimous on both sides of this Chamber that the gentleman from Utah ought not to be permitted to retain a seat in this House, and therefore I shall not weary the patience of the House by discussion of questions upon which the minds of its membership are united; but I do want to call their attention to the proposition that seems to be laid down by both the majority and minority in their reports, that expulsion can not take place until the member is first sworn in.

The proposition is laid down by the minority that a man must be led up by one hand to the bar of the House and there sworn in, and then led out of the House with the other hand. Such a march and countermarch in the presence of the House would be almost ludicrous.

The question is whether this House is ready to part with the essential provision of the Constitution which enables it at any time, for reasons deemed sufficient, to expel a member. I want to read on the threshold of what I may say what Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitation, page 133, says as to the power of this House as to expulsion:

> Each House has also the power to punish members for disorderly behavior and other contempts of its authority, and also to expel a member for any cause which seems to the body to render it unfit that he continue to occupy one of its seats.
>
> This power is sometimes conferred in the Constitution, but it exists whether expressly conferred or not. It is a necessary and incidental power, to enable the House to perform its high functions, and is a necessary power to the safety of the state. It is a power of protection. A member may be physically, mentally, or morally unfit; he may be affected with a contagious disease, or insane, or noisy, violent, and disorderly, or in the habit of using profane, obscene, and abusive language. And, independently of parliamentary customs and usages, our legislative houses have the power to protect themselves by the punishment and expulsion of a member, and the courts can not inquire into the justice of the decision or look into the proceedings to see whether opportunity for defense was furnished or not.

There is the doctrine laid down by the learned Justice Cooley, that they have power to expel for any cause that in their opinion renders the member unfit to occupy a seat.

Now, this is an elementary principle of law, and I prefer, Mr. Speaker, to read from these discussions of elementary principles rather than to read from precedents of practice of the House in cases involving the right of a member to his seat, where partisanship usually wields too much influence. We are substantially unanimous in this House to-day on the question as to whether this member should be permitted to remain in his seat. But suppose that the parties were equally divided, and that unseating him would give to one side or the other the majority and control of the House. I would have some lack of confidence in what this House might do. Thaddeus Stevens once came into the House when a vote was about to be cast in a contested-election case, and he said, "Which one of these men is our rascal?" He proposed to vote for his side of the proposition.

But they tell us that the gentleman from Utah is not a member and that we can not expel him because he is not a member. He appeared on the 4th day of last December and answered the roll call, and is noted present in the Journal and record of this House. On the same day he voted for Mr. RICHARDSON for Speaker. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], who prepared the majority report, voted for the present Speaker of the House, and the vote of the member from Utah killed the vote of the member from Ohio. And yet they tell us he is not a member. Suppose that on that day, the 4th of December, there had been 162 votes for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and 162 votes for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] without the vote of the member from Utah and that gentleman had voted for one or the other, and suppose, after all, we now declare him ineligible, would the Speaker elected by his vote lose his seat? Is there any more powerful act of membership than that upon which the very organization and control of the House depends?

Now, let us turn to the Constitution for a moment. The word "member" and its equivalent, "Representative," frequently occur. Gentlemen tell us that a man is not a member of this House until he stands at the bar of the House and takes the oath of office, that he can not be expelled because he is not a member. Section 5 of Article I says that—

> Each House shall be the judge of the elections and qualifications of its members. A majority shall constitute a quorum, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day and may be authorized to compel the attendance—> of members.

Of whom?—

Suppose on the 4th day of December there had only been 25 members in their seats. We could not have elected a Speaker, because there was no quorum present. We could not, if these gentlemen are right, have compelled the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Maine, and the gentleman from Utah to come to the bar of the House and help to organize it, because they are not members. Now, this is drawing too fine a bead upon the term "member;" and yet the same word member is used there that is used in the other part of the Constitution which authorizes the expulsion of "a member."

An absent member, not sworn in, can be brought here by the order of the House when not a single one of them has been sworn in. If that is not true, then it would be in the power of recalcitrant members of the House to refuse to permit it to be organized. This is essential to the very organization of the House itself. Again:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, and punish its members for disorderly conduct and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Now, what is a "member?" Suppose that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Roberts], instead of violating the organic rules of civilized society, instead of violating the laws of his own State and the laws of the United States, had come into this body and without being sworn in had commenced to disturb the House, could he have been expelled? No. Some learned constitutional lawyer would have arisen and said that he can not be expelled, because he is not a member. Now, I say that that is drawing entirely too fine a point.

The Constitution says "Representatives shall receive compensation for their services"—that members shall receive compensation for their services. Had they been sworn in on the 4th of December? No; but they have drawn their pay. And suppose some one attempted to satisfy my friends who say that they are not members; that they are drawing their salary in violation of the Constitution? The Constitution authorizes "members" to draw their salaries. They are not sworn in. Therefore they are not members. You would say that that was too finespun; that that was putting a mere technical thing above the purpose of the Constitution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The statute authorizes them to draw pay.

Mr. LACEY. I know, but the statute is founded on the Constitution. The Constitution gives power to pay members, and it was put in there so as to settle the question that the members of the Congress of the United States, unlike members of the House of Commons, shall be salaried officers, and that the membership of this House should not be limited to men of such wealth as would enable them to occupy their seats at their own expense. Therefore the proposition was put in that members should receive compensation. How do you construe that? Before they are sworn in? Certainly. A man might be so poor that he could not pay the expense of going to the capital; that it would be necessary for him to receive salary in order to bring him to this House, and a fair construction of the Constitution has been that that compensation may precede the oath of office.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the gentleman allow me to propound an inquiry?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. BROSIUS. I understand you to say that the House can compel the attendance of its members.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; whether they are sworn in or not.

Mr. BROSIUS. I understand you to say that a member is a member just as much before he is sworn in as he is after.

Mr. LACEY. For that purpose he is.

Mr. BROSIUS. Can this House compel the attendance of a member before he has been sworn in?

Mr. LACEY. Undoubtedly; I have just been endeavoring to make that plain. If it can not and the members do not attend, then the minority present would be powerless to take any proceedings by which the House could ultimately be organized. The provision is that less than a quorum can adjourn from day to day and may "send for members," but under that construction they could not send for members who had not been sworn in, although the Constitution says they can. Any House would make very short work of a proposition like that.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me finish my inquiry. I think my friend will find it to be a fact that the theory has never been recognized or indorsed by the Congress of the United States in a hundred years, and the First Congress met and delayed organization for thirty days before they could organize, because they could not send for members who had not been sworn in.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. They delayed because the members were coming by canal, because men were riding on horseback from South Carolina. When Andrew Jackson came to this Congress the first time he rode on horseback to the Senate of the United States from Tennessee, and camped out at night and forded the rivers all the way; and when the first House met the members were not here, and it was necessary to wait for them. They could not come in Pullman cars; they did not come in trains traveling at the rate of 40 miles an hour.

But let me ask my friend, suppose that more than a majority, enough to prevent a quorum, should refuse to appear. Would you say that this section of the Constitution is nugatory which provides that a minority may meet and "adjourn from day to day and send for members," and that the absentees might say, "You can not send for us, because we are not sworn in?"

Members shall be privileged from arrest going to and returning from the Congress. That is in section 6 of the same article. A man starts from Pennsylvania to Washington. He has not yet been sworn in. Before a justice of the peace on the road some one swears out a warrant in order to prevent him from coming here. If he does not arrive, the House might be organized by another political party while he is on the road from Pennsylvania. The arrest might be made expressly to influence the organization of the House. Suppose that he had started from home and was not yet sworn in and was arrested and he pleads his privilege. How short work would the courts make of that proposition. They would say he was a member of Congress, though it was not yet an organized body and was not yet engaged in the transaction of the business of the House. That member should have freedom from arrest until he arrives here, and after coming here the privilege remains during the session.

Now, let me suppose another case, and I am surprised that the sitting member, Mr. Roberts, has not had the matter tested. They were wiser up in Massachusetts in the Hiss case. The member who had been turned out went out and had himself arrested and appealed to the courts. Why did not the gentleman from Utah have himself arrested in this city for some trifling offense and then plead his privilege and have the court determine whether or not he was a member of the House of Representatives? How short work the court would have made of it. They would have said, "You are a member of Congress. You have not been sworn in, but you participated in the election of the Speaker, you answered the roll call, and the question as to whether you have been so lost to decency as to be unfit to sit in that body is now before a committee of the House of which you are a member."

Suppose he had been arrested yesterday and could not now appear before this House. The House itself would have resisted the breach of its privileges. It would have been a question of the rights of the House, so that there is no question that he is a member in the meaning of the Constitution. Now, that being so, why should he not be expelled if he has been guilty of the offenses which the committee find him to have been guilty of? And if we are standing now upon the mere order of his going, why bring him to the bar and swear him in and then turn him out again?

Suppose the gentleman did not want to be sworn in after we passed the minority resolution, but should take the first train to Utah, and on the last day of the Fifty-sixth Congress he should come up and offer to take the oath of office? He would be sworn in, and then he would be immediately expelled, drawing his salary up to the last hour. The mere statement of the proposition, it seems to me, is sufficient to refute the idea that we should go in this circuitous route in order to accomplish the constitutional purpose. We have the right to expel him, and he ought to be expelled.

Now, let me read from the majority report a moment, because I want to say here and now, in order that my position may not be misunderstood, that I shall, if necessary, vote for the majority proposition, and shall so vote on the ground that it is expulsion. But I prefer that the purpose of expulsion should be made clear in the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me just there to ask him a question? I am listening to his argument with a great deal of interest. Would there be any difficulty even if the views of the minority were to obtain or prevail, or how could there be any difficulty if the member took the train and went to Utah, as you suggest? Why could he not then be expelled just as well after he left as if he remained?

Mr. LACEY. Because it would be held by the House, perhaps, that he can not be expelled if the minority resolution should prevail—that he be seated and then expelled.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the difficulty? I do not see where there would be any more difficulty in expelling him then than there would be in the beginning.

Mr. LACEY. The difficulty is simply this: The minority say that he ought to be expelled, but that he can not be expelled until brought to the bar and sworn. Should we adopt that resolution now, from my standpoint, he could be expelled, but the House would have resolved that he could be expelled only after he had been sworn in. The difficulty is that he could be expelled after having voted for Speaker, and where that vote might have changed the organization of the House. He voted for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] for Speaker. Now, would my friend have any conscientious scruples about holding the office if that vote had elected him? I venture to say that he would have slept as soundly at night as does the present occupant of the chair, against whom the member from Utah cast that vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not finding fault with your argument.

Mr. LACEY. I understand; but my friend is making suggestions of difficulties; and I am trying to show how easily they can be swept away. Now, in order to make my own vote understood clearly, I want to say that I think this majority resolution, as was said by the gentleman from Ohio, is susceptible of being construed as one to expel. But I think there should be some provision in it recognizing the fact that the resolution is one of expulsion. It should be stated more clearly and not left to inference.

The opinion of the majority in their report is based almost wholly upon the idea of ineligibility, but the resolution itself says nothing about ineligibility; it simply says that "he ought not to have or hold a seat" here and "his seat is declared vacant." That would be a good resolution of expulsion if it were not for the fact that the majority report insists that he can not be expelled.

Let me read what the gentleman from Ohio and the members of the committee with him say:

> Nor are those who assert that expulsion is the remedy necessarily barred from voting for the resolution declaring the seat vacant. He must, indeed, be technical and narrow in his construction of the Constitution who will not admit that if a vote to declare the seat vacant is sustained by a two-thirds majority the Constitution is substantially complied with. He may not agree with the committee that a mere majority can exclude, but he can reserve the right to make the point of order that the resolution is not carried if two-thirds do not vote for it.

Now, it is claimed that an unorganized House has the power of expulsion simply by calling it "exclusion;" that a majority of an unorganized House can exclude a member, expel him, and call it "exclusion;" but when he gets into full membership it takes a two-thirds vote to get him out. A man has less rights in one case than in the other. The constitutional right depends upon how far he has progressed.

The Herbert case is cited. Herbert committed a murder in Willard's Hotel. The majority say, having committed a crime after election to Congress, he can be excluded from Congress, even after being sworn in, by the majority vote. I suppose, on the other hand, if he had committed some crime that "affected his relation to Congress," then it would take a two-thirds vote. If he had murdered a bartender at Willard's he could be put out by a majority vote; if he had murdered a member on the floor of the House it would take a two-thirds vote to expel him. See the absurdity of the extreme position taken that a man can not be expelled until the transaction is coupled with his duties in the House.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. LINNEY. I am with the gentleman; but here is a trouble to my mind. I do not think a rule of procedure ought to be adopted that can not apply to all the States. Let me mention this state of facts. Here Utah is low down on the alphabetical line in the call of States. When the States were called, at the time Utah was reached it would be evident that there was a quorum present. Suppose Alabama or any one of the first States sent a member here who was a polygamist. How could you have applied that rule as against a polygamist from Alabama or North Carolina by holding him up at the bar before a quorum was present?

Mr. LACEY. The roll is called and a quorum is determined to be present before the swearing in begins. Every man, whether sworn in or not, has a right to vote on the organization of the House, and anyone has a right to object who has filed with the Clerk the certificate of his election.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the Clerk makes up the roll of the House, has not every man whose name is on the roll, even before he is sworn in, a right to object to any other member being sworn in?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; and the right is frequently exercised. An objection was made that the member from Utah was not naturalized—a good objection if true, unquestionably a sound objection, and one that ought to halt him at the threshold of the House. While that matter is being investigated it is found that he is living in violation of the compact between Utah and the United States. And now, in further answer to the gentleman from Missouri, I want to say that one member can object to the swearing in of another member, but how can he object if he is not a member?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He is a member from the very day that he gets his certificate, or from the 4th of March; he is as much a member as he ever can be a member.

Mr. LACEY. I agree with my friend from Missouri. A suggestion is made that it is remarkable that Maine and Missouri have come together. Why, they were admitted into the Union, by a contract or a compromise, at the same time, and although they have not heretofore often been together, they are united now on the position that this man ought to be expelled, and they are united on the proposition that the formality of taking an oath, a mere technical thing, must be performed first. Let us get rid of this mere technical proposition and expel the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I want to say that I have no sympathy with the gentleman from Utah, but if I had been his legal adviser I would have advised him, the day that we were sworn in, to commence objecting to the first man called, and object clear down through, and he would have had the whole concern in a hole. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, he would not, because the House has to pass on the objection.

Mr. LACEY. When the first man from Alabama was called to be sworn, the member from Utah would rise and make the objection, and the House, whose roll had been called by the Clerk and whose names were on the roll, would have voted down the objection of the gentleman from Utah. And then, when you took up the next State and ran down to Iowa and Illinois, and objection after objection had been voted down by the House, the members of that body, when they got to Utah, and it was stated that this member was a polygamist, that he was not naturalized, that he was an open violator of the law, and that there was some question under the Edmunds law as to whether he was eligible as a member of this House—the House would say, "Now, here is something that seems to be worthy of consideration. This is not a technicality. We will have the question examined first, and then decide afterwards what to do with him."

That is the safe thing to do when a question of eligibility is injected into the proposition that the member ought not to be sworn in, and that is just what the House did in this case.

Now, let me read another part of the Constitution, Article II:

No Representative shall be appointed an elector.

The law authorizes States to appoint electors in any way they may see fit. They can do it by districts; they can do it by States. South Carolina for many years selected her electors by the legislature. Suppose a member of Congress had been chosen as an elector who had not yet taken the oath of office, but who was on the roll, drawing his pay, exercising every act of membership except that of voting in the House of Representatives. Would he not be ineligible under the Constitution of the United States? Certainly so. And now why shall we deprive the House of the salutary power of expulsion of a member who has not yet taken the oath? Does not the greater include the less?

The Constitution says we can "expel a member." Can we expel a member who lacks some element of qualification? Could we expel a member who was insane? Could we expel a member who was so grossly and wickedly immoral and disorderly on the floor of the House that he had not yet been permitted to take the oath of office? Could we expel him? Certainly not, they say, because he is not a "full member." We can expel a full member, but we can not expel half a one. We can put a man out of the House when he is wholly in; but if he has but a part of his body inside, we can not lay a finger upon him. If the camel gets into the tent, hump and all, you can put him out; but if his head only is in the tent, you may not smite him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this on the face of it is an attempt to take away from the House one of the most salutary and necessary restraints upon the actions of its members at every stage of the proceedings.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] argues, as I understand him, that as soon as the 4th of March arrives after the election every member-elect becomes a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. There is no interregnum. Nature abhors a vacuum, especially a vacuum in the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. Very good. I have not finished my question. Now, when we come together and start in to legislate, here is a man who absolutely refuses, either by oath or affirmation, to take the prescribed oath. Although he has drawn his pay and franked his letters, he refuses to take the oath. We come to vote on the enactment of laws. Is that man entitled to vote?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly not, and he is not entitled to vote if he is not here, either. He is not entitled to vote if he does not come from his hotel in time in the morning. He must answer in the roll call.

Mr. RAY of New York. If he is here and claims his right to vote as a member of this House, why is not that man entitled to vote?

Mr. LACEY. Because he has not yet taken the oath of office. That is a very simple proposition. The Constitution says that members shall "be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States." It is their duty to support the Constitution after they take the oath; and if they do not, they can be expelled, and the power of the House is unlimited, except that there shall be a two-thirds vote. The House of Commons in Great Britain could expel a man for anything, and this House is founded upon the House of Commons. When the Constitution was prepared the proposition to expel a member was inserted just as it was construed in the unwritten constitution of Great Britain, and but one limitation was put upon it, an absolutely safe one, namely, that before a member can be expelled there must be a two-thirds vote. No party having a two-thirds majority in the House will ever attempt to strengthen that majority by simply putting a member out of the House. So it is safe to trust the question of expulsion without any other limit than the two-thirds vote required to accomplish that result.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. The gentleman from Iowa says that the member, after the 4th of March, is a member as distinguished from a member-elect. Is it not a fact that all of the statutes enacted by Congress referring to him, to wit, the statute authorizing him to draw his pay, the statute giving him the franking privilege, the statute authorizing him to have a clerk, and all of the other statutes refer to him not as a member, but as a member-elect?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. A member-elect, after November, after he is elected, has the franking privilege before his predecessor goes out. You exercised that privilege from last November until the 4th of March. You had no other privilege, but you had that privilege as a member-elect.

Now, let me put a case. The statute says a member of Congress who receives a bribe shall be punished. Will you say that a member of Congress elected, and whose term of office began on the 4th of March, and who on the 5th of March, nearly nine months before he takes his seat in the House, accepts a bribe can not be punished because he has not yet been sworn in? The courts would make short work of a plea like that. They would say, "This defendant is a member of Congress. He has violated the laws of the land. He has accepted a bribe, and the plea that he has not gone through the formality of taking an oath will not permit him to escape."

Suppose a man wants to get out of Congress before the 4th day of December? A member of this body was elected governor of Maryland. He was not inaugurated until some time in January. Suppose the laws of Maryland required that the inauguration should be in October, or the first Monday in December. How would he have got out of Congress? By tendering his resignation. Why? Because he is a member, and tendered his resignation as such, and the place to which he was elected then becomes vacant; and without waiting for this body to organize, the governor of the State of Maryland can go on and call a special election to fill the place vacated by him.

Mr. SIMS. Did not the Hon. Thomas B. Reed do that very thing this last summer?

Mr. LACEY. I thank my friend for the suggestion. There was a notable instance. There was a vacancy made, a big vacancy, a vacancy that the whole country appreciated, when one of the greatest men who ever lived in this country went out of this House. We filled that vacancy well; but when Thomas B. Reed went out he did not wait to be sworn in. He tendered his resignation, and the governor of the State of Maine called a special election and the place was filled by the estimable and able gentleman who now occupies that seat. So, treat it as you may, everywhere the word "member" means a man who has been elected to a seat in the House, unless we make an exception when we come to the question of expelling him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman, because I am profoundly interested in his argument, what would be the status of a member elected in November, 1898, at the last election, who on the 10th of March accepted a bribe? Suppose it was notoriously well known that he had accepted that bribe, and later he accepted another bribe on the 10th of April, and another on the 10th of May. Suppose it was published and well known that he had done this, and he did not present himself here on the first Monday in December to be sworn, but continued to absent himself. How would we get rid of him in that case unless the gentleman's argument is correct? What answer would the gentleman make to the question, How can you get rid of him except by expulsion?

Mr. LACEY. I see no other way, and I have no difficulty in taking that course. I have no pride of opinion about this. We all know how natural it is for men who have once taken a position to adhere to it. We have heard both these resolutions. Both of them may be construed as resolutions of expulsion. I have listened to the argument of the chairman of the committee, and feel more confirmed in my view that the proper remedy is the plain constitutional one which says we may expel a member. Suppose a member were disqualified from holding the office. Would you say that he could not be expelled because of the disqualification?

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Adverting to the question asked by the gentleman from Tennessee a moment ago, if a man should be convicted of having received a bribe, there is a law on the statute book which disqualifies that man——

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS (continuing). From holding any office of honor, trust, or emolument under the Government. Now, admit, if you please, for the present, that a member of Congress had accepted a bribe, would not the proper method——

Mr. LACEY. I have been claiming and arguing that he did.

Mr. MORRIS. I suggest to the gentleman that the statute would convict him, and that instead of expelling him the proper method would be——

Mr. LACEY. He could avoid it.

Mr. MORRIS. But suppose he is indicted and convicted; then the House must act upon it. Does the gentleman still think he would still be a member?

Mr. LACEY. He would. Suppose he should get a pardon and come to the bar of the House and ask to be sworn in. No objection is made, and the House should seat him. Could not the House thereafter expel him?

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman permit another question? Suppose that a man is elected to this House who is 21 years of age only. Now, he is certified here by the governor as being elected; he is placed on the roll of the House, enjoys the franking privilege, and receives pay up to the meeting of the House; and yet when Congress meets it is suggested here, showing to the satisfaction of the House, that he is only 21 years of age——

Mr. LACEY. He is not eligible.

Mr. MORRIS (continuing). Would you have to expel that man?

Mr. LACEY. He would stand, as I said, as being disqualified under the Constitution. He could be excluded as disqualified.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now, suppose that he had violated the statute, as of course the gentleman will contend he does, does it not disqualify him under the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. LACEY. Well, that involves another question, and I do not care to take the time of the House upon it. I have always thought that at common law the right to disqualify for crimes existed. You can take a man's right of suffrage away for crime. You can take away that which is more sacred than a seat on this floor when you take away his vote and take it away for crime. I say that question has no relevancy to this issue. Possibly Congress could pass a law that a bigamist might not be eligible from any State. I think that a proper remedy would be expulsion in either event, unless by law or by the Constitution express ineligibility had been created for that crime.

The Edmunds-Tucker Act does not apply; it only applied to that Territory when Territorial conditions existed, and disappeared when it was admitted into the Union. We can not make one statutory rule for eligibility for Iowa and another rule for Utah. I am in hearty sympathy with the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] that here is a violation of the compact between Utah and the United States that will be ground for expulsion, and ground to say to Utah, "When you send a man here who will live up in good faith to the pledge you have taken you can have representation, and not otherwise."

I was in the House when Utah was admitted. I voted upon the assurance of eminent gentlemen, in whom I had the utmost confidence, that polygamy had been abandoned and there would be no further trouble about it. We find now, in the face of that pledge, a polygamist is elected by the majority of the voters of Utah. It is said that a large number of gentiles voted for him. I was in Utah last summer, and gentiles came to me and said, "We voted for Roberts in order to force upon the House of Representatives the proposition as to whether a man would be permitted to retain a seat as a Representative of the State who was violating the laws of Utah and violating the laws of the United States."

Suppose he came down here now with his three wives and his three increasing families, short work would be made of him by the criminal law in the District of Columbia, because he would subject himself to the jurisdiction of the Edmunds-Tucker Act. The United States has exclusive jurisdiction here.

Nearly every leading member in this House on both sides was asked before Congress met, "How will you get rid of Roberts?" That was the proposition, and almost every man answered, "By expulsion." That answer, which naturally rises to the lips of any ordinarily good lawyer, is a pretty safe principle of law to follow.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion right there? I want to say this: I do not know how many petitions the gentleman had, but I had some from my district that were sent out for the purpose, and which contained two printed propositions, sent out with notes or instructions how they should be signed. They simply contained the two propositions—first, that we should expel Roberts for being a polygamist by a two-thirds vote of the House, and next, that we should make polygamy a constitutional disqualification.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee how many resolutions making a member of Congress ineligible for being a polygamist they have before his committee?

Mr. RAY of New York. There have been several resolutions introduced prohibiting polygamy in the United States.

Mr. LACEY. The object of these resolutions was to render ineligible members because of polygamy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If my friend will allow me, he is a clear-headed lawyer, and I would like his discriminating judgment on the two provisions in the Constitution—first, the oath which relates to the President and the oath which relates to the members. I read from Article II:

> Before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or affirmation.

It says, mark you, before he enters upon the office. Now then, on page 23 the language in relation to members is wholly different. It says:

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned," members, etc., "shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution." Not before they enter upon their office, but "shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution."

Mr. LACEY. It is not a condition precedent. We have a striking illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the views of this body in the latter end of the second session of a Congress when a committee is selected to sit during the recess and take testimony and discuss any problem. Such committee is always selected from gentlemen who have been elected to the next Congress. They enter upon the duties connected with that committee after the 4th of March. We have instances of that kind often. Sometimes a caucus does the same thing. A caucus of one side of this body selected a number of members of the next Congress to prepare a financial bill. They got together because they were members of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is a provision in the laws of Congress which provides that at the end of each Congress the Speaker shall appoint three members from those elected to make up the committee that shall audit the accounts between the adjournment of one Congress and the commencement of the next, and those members that act are three members who have never been sworn.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; but they are members of Congress. Suppose these gentlemen auditing the accounts should make a false return, and money should be drawn, with their knowledge and consent, out of the contingent fund in violation of the law. Could we expel them? Could they come into the House and say, "We are not members; what we did we did merely as a matter of courtesy?"

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House longer. I have spoken longer than I intended, and had it not been for the interruptions I should not have spoken so long. The term of office is two years. The statute defines when it shall begin—it shall begin on the 4th of March. Now they claim the person elected has been nine months with his time running, but without being a member.

And if he is a member, if he has violated the principles of our civilization, we have the right to expel him from this House, and the vote has already shown that the two-thirds vote is available for that purpose.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am not satisfied with the gentleman's answer. I understand that we have a statute which makes anyone accepting a bribe incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States. Now, having such a statute, the validity of which I understand the gentleman to admit——

Mr. LACEY. I assert it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. If he is incapable of holding an office, why does it become necessary to admit him and then expel him, or to expel him otherwise than to exclude him?

Mr. LACEY. Why, for the simple reason that this body makes up its roll. It makes up a record of that ineligibility, and it could date back this expulsion to the hour of his conviction, unquestionably.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it require two-thirds?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly it would require two-thirds on the question of expulsion, but it would not be necessary in case of the receiver of a bribe, because the statute declares him ineligible. But now suppose he committed an offense that did not disqualify him excepting in the eyes of all honest men, and that the law did not render him ineligible. Then the House would have to act, and could only act from the hour of its action, and could not make it relate back to the original prosecution, upon which the action of the House is founded.

Mr. MORRIS. Then, according to the gentleman's argument, he would expel a man that a majority could exclude.

Mr. LACEY. Why, certainly; a majority could exclude a man and a two-thirds majority might do something even stronger. He may do an act for which he could be excluded, as rendering him ineligible. He can be expelled for that same act, because there is no limitation of it in the Constitution as to what he can be expelled for, excepting that there must be two-thirds of the House concurring in the expulsion.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then does the gentleman hold that this House has not the power to do, with reference to its own membership, what it might obtain power to do by an act of Congress?

Mr. LACEY. This House has, for the purpose of expulsion, absolutely no limitation excepting the limitations that prevailed in the House of Commons and the limitation added by the Constitution that the expulsion must be enforced by a two-thirds vote. Now, that being the case, I say a man may be expelled for that for which he might also be excluded.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not for the purpose of making any argument in this case that I take two or three minutes from the House. I am unfortunately compelled by important business in Cincinnati to leave the city this afternoon and will not be present at the vote to-morrow. I wish to put it on record, though, that as the Representative of my district I think I voice the sentiments of my entire constituency in supporting the majority report in this case. Through the courtesy of one of the gentlemen who support the minority report, I have been enabled to obtain a live pair; so that while my vote will not appear in the RECORD, yet, in accordance with my own judgment as to the action of this House, and in accordance with the sentiments of my constituents, I shall at least have the satisfaction of knowing that the vote by which final action is taken will not be diminished.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the committee is agreed as to the facts. It is agreed that the gentleman elect, or the gentleman from Utah, whichever it may turn out to be, is the husband of three wives, the father of two sets of children; that he was convicted under the Edmunds Act and the Edmunds-Tucker Act of illegal cohabitation, and that he served the sentence that was pronounced as a punishment, except that of disfranchisement and being rendered incapable of holding office.

The committee is also agreed that, by reason of these facts so found, the gentleman is not entitled to remain as a member of this House. It is now a question of procedure. The majority of your committee says it is legal, it is constitutional, it is orderly to meet the gentleman and exclude him without the administration of the oath. The minority says he should not be excluded; that the Constitution requires that the oath should be administered, and after the oath has been administered he should be expelled.

Mr. Speaker, I have always prided myself on being a strict constructionist of the Constitution; yet I am one of those who believe this House has the constitutional right to exclude the member from Utah without the administration of the oath and be within constitutional limit.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, I not only believe this House has the right to exclude him without the administration of the oath, but I believe it has equally the same right to expel this or any other member after he has had the oath administered to him. I would place one on one section of the Constitution and the other on another, which I will quote in a very few moments.

The right to exclude, on section 5, Article I, of the Constitution: "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Same section: "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

There are many things, Mr. Speaker, that might be said as to why he should not retain a seat in this House, but I can not stop to discuss them all. It is agreed that he is constitutionally unfit to sit as a member, the majority contending that he should not enter the House; the minority that he should be entitled to enter and take a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States so long as he shall be a member, and the very next minute expel him. [Applause.]

We are agreed, I take it, not only as members of the committee, but as members of the House, that we will part company with him as soon as the vote is taken and that he shall do no act as a member of this House, and I confess, so far as the action of this House is concerned, when I discuss the question whether he should be excluded or expelled, I feel as though I am entering on the task of discussing practically the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the legal profession always boasts that the law does not require the citizen to do any foolish or unnecessary things. Yet you who take the position of the minority must take the position that the Constitution, by which we test all the laws that are enacted, requires of this great body, the American House of Representatives, to do that thing which is both foolish and unnecessary. The question of compact I do not care to discuss and will only pass it by with a word.

I was charmed yesterday and spellbound by the logic and eloquence of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] when he discussed the question of the compact between the State of Utah and the United States when it was admitted to the Union; and this morning my colleague from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] upon the other side, equally as strong, equally as eloquent, presented the other view; but I can not particularly agree with either, although I agree with each as to his conclusion.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] yesterday said that during the war of the rebellion millions of money and thousands of lives had been sacrificed for the purpose of establishing the doctrine of the unity of the statehood. I agree with him, but it does not lead me for that reason to the same point that it leads the gentleman from Maine, that if, perchance, a State should live in violation of the laws of the Union, would administer no law, would not extend justice through the courts, would abandon the courts, would defy both Congress and the Constitution, it thereby follows that they have the right to come to this lawmaking power and say that they shall have representation. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the war was waged to establish such a doctrine.

The gentleman's contention drives us to the conclusion that if the charges are proven that the President has appointed postmasters in Utah who are polygamists, thereby rendering them incompetent and unfit to hold the office of postmaster—that if they came with a certificate from the State of Utah they would be entitled to be sworn as members in the great American House of Congress. It will not now be contended that they or the member-elect from Utah would be eligible to hold any office in any of the Territories or the District of Columbia, yet the minority position is that Mr. Roberts is entitled to be sworn to make the laws for the Territories where he could not vote and would not be permitted to hold office that he might help create.

Such construction of the Constitution would guard all the minor offices and leave the lawmaking power without such safeguard. [Applause.]

I can not agree with such argument, but I fully agree that there is no power in the State to sever the Union. Upon the other hand, I would say if a State in the Union was living in violation of the law, not only in violation but in utter disregard of the law, they would have no right to come to the lawmaking power and say, "I am entitled to representation." I believe not only in an indissoluble Union, but I believe the lawmaking power under such circumstances has the right to say, when you have abandoned the law, or when you defy the law, "You shall not help make the law." The Constitution is strong enough to hold and retain you, and is strong enough to demand obedience to the laws of the State as well as the individual. I may say to a State, "You shall not have representation in making the laws until you are willing to enforce the law and the Constitution and stop your defiance."

Mr. Speaker, I can not follow the gentleman from Maine in his reasoning, although I agree with his conclusion; nor can I follow the distinguished gentleman from Indiana in his statement of facts. He reads eloquently, and says that the gentleman who represented Utah upon the floor of this House when the debate was going on "might have said." He reads eloquently, and says that a certain citizen, high in the State, high in the participation of the church government, is living in polygamous relations with three wives, four wives, or five wives.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, yet this committee, presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] as its chairman, associated with the other lawyers on the committee, when the gentleman from Utah, Mr. Roberts, asked the question whether it would be permissible to inquire into the relation of the State of Utah to this question, unanimously decided that it could not be done and that no such inquiry would be made. I can neither agree with the argument of the gentleman from Maine nor with the facts as stated by the gentleman from Indiana. The committee said the State should not be heard in that inquiry, and no inquiry was made.

To brand the State of Utah as disloyal to this particular statute, to charge a State as now permitting polygamous relations in defiance of the law, when no such thing was found and not inquired into by the committee, does not meet my approval and was not contemplated by the resolution under which the special committee was appointed. Upon the other hand, I make bold to assert, from the evidence that was given before the committee, that so far as the State of Utah is concerned, the doctrine of polygamy is abandoned, it is a back number, a thing of the past. There are some sporadic cases, and perhaps will be, but the evidence given before the committee showed that the people of Utah were not only loyal during the Spanish war, but they have been loyal to this statute against polygamy, except in incidental cases. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the country being excited and investigating earnestly the question of polygamy, it is unfair and unjust to the State of Utah to make the statement of facts as did the gentleman from Indiana.

I beg pardon for having taken thus much of the time on a question that I do not think figures in the conclusion. I desire while I shall occupy the floor to discuss the question whether or not this body has the right to place any limitation upon the membership beyond the three—that of citizenship, age, and residence. As I said a moment ago, I believe the founders never meant that we should be put in the attitude of doing the foolish and unnecessary thing that the gentlemen who represent the minority say we must do—"swear him in only as a matter of form, then kick him out." The Constitution reads:

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

It is insisted that these three qualifications are the alpha and omega. It is insisted by the gentlemen who represent the minority that Congress—and by Congress I mean the Senate and the House—can not add to these qualifications. I insist under any common-sense reasoning, and under the precedents in the legislation of Congress, that the Senate and the House may add to the disqualifications. I insist not only that Congress may do it, but the House must inquire as to qualifications of its members and shall judge of the qualifications. Our law is the Constitution. No man is more faithful in his adherence to it than I; I respect every line and utterance, and do not believe the founders meant by this expression that having these three qualifications none other should be required, but that the member should have at least these three qualifications.

If it meant that, it would have been so easily said; but that does not argue for much. Let us follow it a little further. Why did they do it? Now, I shall refer for a few moments to the convention and the discussion and debates on the occasion of the adoption of the Constitution. I can only refer to them in a casual way.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, will some gentleman of the minority tell me what particular glory, what significance, attaches to the year or age of 25? Will some gentleman tell me what significance attaches to the question of residence for seven years? I believe from the debates that we can fairly infer.

We all know that in England the people had been in the habit of sending to their lawmaking power young men, minors who were not matured, minors who were not capable of comprehending the Government and legislating for its best interests. They had not only been doing that, but nonresidents, alien citizens, had been sent to Parliament for the purpose of making laws. I believe, and take it not only from my judgment, but from the reasonings on that occasion and from the debates, that the real purpose of the founders in enacting the Constitution was to make a concise statement and guard against the possibility of foreigners controlling the Republic. I believe the reason of that fixed limit upon citizenship was in order that aliens and nonresidents might be shut out from the great American House of Congress for a period of time until they should become Americanized and catch the spirit of the Republic. [Applause.]

If, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, for some reason it was apparent that aliens were about to, or had, come to this country until they would control the ballot, a class of aliens that the members of this House would deem to be dangerous in the control of the lawmaking power of this nation if the limit of citizenship be extended beyond seven years, do you believe the founders meant that we should never change the limit of seven years? Do you mean to say that the founders meant that you should not extend the limit to ten, fifteen, twenty, or any number of years that is necessary to maintain the Republic in its original glory and keep it out of the hands of any dangerous element?

What is there sacred, therefore, about seven years' residence? It was simply a term fixed, and the founders said and meant that the Representatives shall at least have these qualifications and any other necessary to the welfare of the Republic. Upon that line let us follow it a little further before we come to precedents and see what the Constitution itself says upon the subject. It says the House shall be the judge of the election and the qualification of its members. The House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members. The qualification certainly does not mean whether he is simply seven years a resident of the United States, etc., but that the member shall have such qualifications as will maintain the Republic in its original liberty-loving spirit, and, if necessary, to increase it from seven years to ten years, or whatever number required for the welfare of the Republic.

So if you say that you shall only have the right to require these qualifications, you shut off the right of the House, you foreclose the ability of the House to judge of the qualification of its members.

Some gentlemen say this is dangerous unless you tie it to the Constitution. I say no. These members about me are not simply 357 men, they are 357 Representatives, each representing about one-fourth of a million people, and voting for them on all occasions. Aye, gentlemen, the 357 men who represent the different sections of this country are the House, are the Republic itself; and yet you tell me that you can so surround the members by the Constitution, by a law, or by any facts that would prevent them from ruining this country if they sought to do it; you tell me you have undertaken a task that can not be accomplished. No law could prevent revolution if this House should undertake it. You may as well think of self-destruction.

Power must be lodged somewhere, and the fathers lodged it with the representatives in a representative Government—a Government that has proven almost perfect, a Government that has proven to be the strongest Government on the face of the earth, not only in times of war, but in times of peace, one based on the greatest liberty to the greatest number consistent with the general welfare.

Mr. Speaker, let me follow this question a little further on the proposition as to whether or not there are any other than the three qualifications that may be required. If I can establish a proposition—and I think I can, both from logic and from the adjudicated cases, as well as the statutes of the United States—that Congress—the House and the Senate—may make other disqualifications, I will have accomplished that which I undertook. When I have done it, I have fully met the arguments of the gentlemen who say that these three are the beginning and the end.

I may refer in a casual manner to the test oath that was required at the close of the war. What was that oath? I will not stop to repeat it, but it was a disqualification to some people; that is to say, those who could not accept the oath were disqualified. Then Congress, the House and the Senate, said that certain people were not qualified to be members of the House of Representatives. They were 25 years of age; they had resided in the United States more than seven years; they represented the State from which they held a certificate; and yet there was a class of people that Congress said could not represent the people upon the floor of this House by reason of disqualifications not mentioned in the Constitution. I need not follow that further, for I have to hurry on. It was acquiesced in as being not only humane but just and good law, and in accordance with the Constitution. This shows that not only other disqualifications may be made, but that they have been made. Let me follow it just a little further.

We have a statute—section 5500 of the United States Statutes—which says:

Any member of either House of Congress who asks, accepts, or receives any money, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, either before or after he has been qualified or has taken his seat as such member, with intent to have his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may be at any time pending in either House, or before any committee thereof, influenced thereby, shall be punished by a fine not more than three times the amount asked, accepted, or received, and by imprisonment not more than three years.

Another section, 5502, reads as follows:

Every member, officer, or person convicted under the provisions of the two preceding sections who holds any place of profit or trust shall forfeit his office or place, and shall thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Section 5502 says that any member who is convicted shall forever be prohibited from holding any office, yet a member might be 25 years of age and might have been a resident seven years and come to represent the State from which he holds the certificate, and yet there is a barrier that has been erected against him because he has accepted a bribe, etc. Does not this, gentlemen of the House, without pursuing this part of the question very much further, indicate clearly not only that the lawmaking power of the Senate and the House has authority to do it, but that it has done that which fixes a disqualification?

Perhaps no man has been guilty of that offense, but it is within the reach of human possibilities that some member might be, and if any member might be disqualified, the disqualification is added and the effect of it is to say that not only these three qualifications are required, but in effect says he should not be a bribe taker. If that is true, then by statute disqualifications have been added. When you come to test it by what actually has been done by Congress, it precludes some persons who are and have what seems to be the negative qualification stated in the Constitution of the United States, thus showing that Congress may judge and establish disqualifications. [Applause.]

It would be an anomaly if simply residence, age, and citizenship should be the full test of the requirements, or, in other words, if all others, no matter what might or may come up, are to be excluded. Do you think the founders of our Government meant this, when we see the great wisdom they displayed along all other lines? Do you think that they were willing to tie the hands of Congress so that a bribe taker, an enemy of the Government, a man who would strike down the Government itself, should be admitted for the purpose of making the laws of the country when they would be precluded from holding even a post-office? Gentlemen of this House, I have no question in my mind that the founders only meant, when they said he should have these qualifications, that he should have at least these qualifications and as many more as the great American Congress, consisting of both the House and the Senate, might add.

When I assert that proposition I do not think I put the great American Government in a position, on any occasion for the next hundred or thousand years, when there will be danger that a bad precedent will affect the Government itself.

But, Mr. Speaker, the reason these gentlemen say these three qualifications are the only disqualifications is because three have been named, and that the naming of some, by rule of construction, means the exclusion of all others. That may mean the exclusion of all others or it may not. Take the instrument itself, and if from that you can fairly discern that it meant to exclude all others, that is the proper rule of construction; but take the instrument itself and fairly conclude that is not the purpose, then that is not the rule of construction.

Gentlemen of this House, the Constitution shows that that was not the intention. It says the House shall be the judge of the qualifications of the members. If it means the qualifications of members as indicated in the Constitution, the three that are stated negatively, how easy it would have been to have said it.

Referring to another section of the Constitution, which provides that each member shall be bound by an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, there is one requirement that is stated in the oath. The Constitution requires one thing, to support the Constitution of the United States. Yet but a short time ago, and under this very same rule of construction, the American House of Representatives and the Senate applied what is known as the test oath, in addition, not only to support the Constitution of the United States, but it required an oath of loyalty as well.

And, gentlemen of the House, this House has not only held that that was legitimate, but has gone further and said that if perchance any gentleman was willing, with a dormant conscience, to take the oath and not do it in good faith, it was legitimate and right to have that member stand aside until that question could be inquired into.

Not only is that true, gentlemen, but every one of you, when you took the oath on the 4th day of December, 1899, not only took the oath required by the Constitution that you would support the Constitution of the United States, but you took the oath—I can not now repeat in whole—but the oath which contained the provision that you would defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. If you apply the rule of construction which is urged by gentlemen of the minority, and insist that the naming of one requisite means the exclusion of all others, then when the Constitution said you should swear to support it you were up to the limit, you were as much at the alpha and omega as you were when you read the Constitution and said that a member should have at least these three requisites. Yet you came here believing you were taking a constitutional oath, one that you had not only the right to take, but that it was the duty and the pleasure of the Speaker of this House to administer to every member; and had any member refused to take that oath and sought to drop back on the Constitution, there is not a member of this august body who would have said he was entitled to take it in his own way.

The Constitution itself, then, gentlemen, refutes the argument that it is all included. In addition to the extended oath, you have the Constitution, saying that you are the judges of the qualifications. Aye, you not only have that right, but you have the instance of the oath itself. So, gentlemen of this House, I feel that I was warranted in the proposition that Congress may administer the oath; but I was as equally justified in the proposition that this House may either expel or reject a member and refuse him the oath. This you do under the broad proposition of the Constitution that you are the judges of the qualifications of the members; and if you find a man is not qualified as a member, under this language of the Constitution, you may reject him and say, "You are not qualified." If, upon the other hand, you admit his qualification and say, "Although qualified, your conduct has been such as to degrade you in the eyes of the House and the great American people," the Constitution says he may be expelled, two-thirds concurring therein.

I believe that, as much as I believe the honest construction of any instrument, the House may, in the exercise of its right as the judge of the qualification of members, exclude at the door any member, whether he be traitor to the whole law of the land or to any one section of the statute that in the judgment of the House affects his qualifications. I am not without authority. John Randolph, in the House of Representatives, said:

> If the Constitution had meant (as was contended) to have settled the qualifications of members, its words would have naturally run thus: "Every person who has attained the age of 25 years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives." But so far from fixing the qualifications of members of that House, the Constitution merely enumerated a few disqualifications within which the States were left to act.
>
> It is said to the States, you have been in the habit of electing young men barely of age; you shall send us none but such as are five and twenty. Some of you have elected persons just naturalized; you shall not elect any to this House who have not been some seven years citizens of the United States. Sometimes mere sojourners and transient persons have been clothed with legislative authority. You shall elect none whom your laws do not consider as inhabitants.

Story says (Constitution, section 448):

> The truth is, that in order to ascertain how far an affirmative or negative proposition excludes or implies others, we must look to the nature of the provision, the subject-matter, the objects, and the scope of the instrument. These, and these only, can properly determine the rule of construction. There can be no doubt that an affirmative grant of powers in many cases will imply an exclusion of all others.

Then, Mr. Speaker, along that same line, at the close of the war, when it was urged that the question of disloyalty would arise, President Grant in a message said that a vigilant House would control and see that this Government was kept in the hands of loyal people. It was then followed by legislation along the same line, and that, thank God, like polygamy, is a back number and out of the question. The President in his message said:

> In the admission of Senators and Representatives from all of the States there can be no just ground of apprehension that persons who are disloyal will be clothed with the powers of legislation, for this could not happen when the Constitution and the laws are enforced by a vigilant and faithful Congress. Each House is made the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members, and may, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. When a Senator or Representative presents his certificate of election, he may at once be admitted or rejected; or, should there be any question as to his eligibility, his credentials may be referred for investigation to the appropriate committee. If admitted to a seat, it must be upon evidence satisfactory to the House of which he thus becomes a member that he possesses the requisite constitutional and legal qualifications. If refused admission as a member for want of due allegiance to the Government and returned to his constituents, they are admonished that none but persons loyal to the United States will be allowed a voice in the legislative councils of the nation, and the political power and moral influence of Congress are thus effectively exerted in the interest of loyalty to the Government of the United States and fidelity to the Union.

I am now discussing whether or not we have the constitutional right to say at the threshold, "This House will judge of the qualifications of its members." The distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] yesterday, in discussing the statement of Mr. Pomeroy upon that question, belittled him as an authority in comparison to the great constitutional lawyer, Mr. Story. I would, however, remind him that Mr. Pomeroy is a respectable lawyer. His work is not only found, I take it, in the magnificent library of the gentleman from Maine, but in nearly every respectable library from Maine to California. Here is a respectable author, and although he has already been so forcibly quoted by the chairman of this committee, I will refer to his words, strong and in point.

In Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, third edition, page 138, is the following:

> The power given to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, each to pass upon the validity of the elections of its own members and upon their personal qualifications, seems to be unbounded. But I am very strongly of the opinion that the two Houses together, as one House, can not pass any statute containing a general rule by which the qualifications of members as described in the Constitution are either added to or lessened. Such a statute would not seem to be a judgment of each House upon the qualifications of its own members, but a judgment upon the qualifications of the members of the other branch. The power is sufficiently broad as it stands. Indeed, there is absolutely no restraint upon its exercise except the responsibility of the Representatives to their constituents. Under it the House inquires into the validity of the elections, going behind the certificates of the election officers, examining the witnesses, and deciding whether the sitting member or the contestant received a majority of legal votes. The House has also applied the test of personal loyalty to those claiming to be duly elected Representatives, deeming this one of the qualifications of which it might judge.

Mr. Cushing, page 195, section 447, says:

> To the disqualifications of this kind may be added those which may result from the commission of some crime which would render the member ineligible.

In 1867, when the members-elect from the State of Kentucky presented themselves to be sworn, objection was raised on the grounds of disloyalty; they were required to stand aside; their credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections for investigation and report.

Mr. Dawes, chairman, in his report, said:

> The committee are of the opinion that no person who has been engaged in armed hostility to the Government of the United States, or who has given aid and comfort to its enemies during the late rebellion, ought to be permitted to be sworn as a member of this House, and that any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming a seat as a member of this House ought to be investigated and reported upon before such person is permitted to take the seat.

* * * * * * *

The committee adhere to the views expressed in the former report, that no man who has been engaged in an attempt to overthrow the Government and subvert the Constitution by force of arms, or who has voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons so engaged, ought to be admitted to a seat in this House to make laws for the nation he has traitorously sought to destroy; and it is apparent that there must be power in this House to prevent this, the House being the judge of the qualifications of its members, of which fidelity to the Constitution is one, and that this end can only be certainly accomplished by the investigating of any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming his seat as a member of this House before such person is permitted to take the seat.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, I find that my time is going along, and I only want to call the attention of the House to a few precedents in this case that bear on the question.

I take it that the name of Senator Trumbull inspires the confidence of every good lawyer, patriot, and member of this House, without regard to politics or profession.

In the proceeding to expel Benjamin Stark, who was appointed a Senator from Oregon in 1862, Mr. Trumbull filed a report February 7, 1862, in which he said:

It is admitted that neither the Senate, Congress, nor a State can superadd other qualifications for a Senator to those prescribed by the Constitution, and yet either may prevent a person possessing all those qualifications and duly elected from taking his seat in the Senate. Does anyone question the right of a State to arrest for crime a person duly qualified for and appointed a Senator, hold him in confinement, and thereby prevent his appearing in the Senate to qualify? Suppose a Senator, after his appointment and before qualifying, commits the crime of murder, would anyone question the right of the State authorities where the crime was committed to arrest, confine, and, if found guilty, execute the murderer and thereby forever prevent his taking his seat? Or if the punishment for the offense was imprisonment, would anyone question the right to hold the Senator in prison and thereby prevent his appearing in the Senate?

Could the Senate in such a case expel him before he had been admitted to a seat, or must he be brought from the felon's cell, be introduced into the Senate and sworn as a member before his seat could be declared vacant? If not, must the State go unrepresented till the time for which he was appointed had expired? Or would it be competent for the Senate in such a case, by a majority vote, to declare the convict incompetent to hold a seat in the body and thereby open the way for the appointment of a successor? It is manifest that the prescribing of the qualifications for a Senator in the Constitution was not intended to prevent his being held amenable for his crime.

The fact that the Constitution declares that Senators and Representatives "shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same," is conclusive that for those offenses they may be arrested. As punishment for crime, then, it is clear that a Senator-elect, possessing all the constitutional qualifications of age, citizenship, and inhabitancy, may be prevented from taking the oath of office. Congress has repeatedly acted upon the presumption that it was entirely competent for it to prescribe as a punishment for crime and inability forever afterwards to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States.

By a statute passed in 1790, any person giving a reward to a United States judge as a bribe to procure from him any opinion or judgment, and the judge receiving such bribe, are both declared to be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

By an act passed in 1853 any member of Congress, after his election, and whether before or after he is qualified, who shall accept any reward given for the purpose of influencing his vote on any question which may come before him in his official capacity, is declared incapable forever of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

He goes further on and says that he shall forfeit his office.

Does anyone doubt the power of Congress, under this clause of the Constitution, to declare that a person convicted of treason should forever be incapable of holding any office under the United States? If this were done, would it be contended that a convicted traitor was entitled to be sworn as a Senator? The clause of the Constitution prescribing the qualifications of Senators and Representatives could never have been intended to limit the power to make disqualifications to hold those or any other offices a penalty for the commission of crime, especially of treason.

Doubtless—

He says—

a law of Congress declaring that a person convicted of a particular offense should not hold office under the United States, and the decision of the courts sustaining such a law, would not preclude the Senate from admitting such a person to a seat should it think proper, because the Senate is the exclusive judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. Yet it is hardly conceivable that the Senate ever would admit such a person to be sworn; nor does the fact that Congress has not adopted such a punishment for disloyalty or treason prevent the Senate from refusing to allow to be sworn as a member a person believed by the body to be guilty of those offenses or other infamous crimes.

That one avowed traitor, a convicted felon, or a person known to be disloyal to the Government has a constitutional right to be admitted into the body would imply that the Senate had no power of protecting itself—a power which, from the nature of things, must be inherited in every legislative body.

Suppose a member sent to the Senate, before being sworn, were to disturb the body and by violence interrupt its proceedings, would the Senate be compelled to allow such a person to be sworn as a member of the body before it could cast him out? Surely not, unless the Senate is unable to protect itself and preserve its own order. The Constitution declares "that each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member."

The connection of the sentence in which the power of expulsion is given would indicate that it was intended to be exercised for some act done as a member and not for some cause existing before the member was elected or took his seat. For any crime or infamous act done before that time the appropriate remedy would seem to be to refuse to allow him to qualify, which, in the judgment of the undersigned, the Senate may properly do, not by way of adding to the qualifications imposed by the Constitution, but as a punishment due to his crimes and the infamy of his character.

If we were undertaking to say that all persons who represent the people on the American floor of Congress should not only have the three qualifications, and they shall be loyal besides, or, to bring it to this question, they shall not be polygamists, that would take the action not of the House alone, not of the Senate alone, but of the whole lawmaking power. Mr. Trumbull says: "The Senate alone can not do it." The House alone can not. I grant you they can not add disqualifications; but that is not the proposition. I have shown you by the statutes that the two Houses have established disqualifications; but the House alone may test the qualifications of a member. The House alone may not add disqualifications that apply to all applicants; but the House alone may judge of the qualifications of its members.

Senator Trumbull took the ground, and maintained it, that the Senate had the right under this section of the Constitution to test the qualifications of its members. He further says:

The Senate of the United States may halt a man who was disloyal at the bar.

The Edmunds Act said that it was unlawful, and took from the member the right to vote, the right to hold office. Under analogous reasoning this House has the right to halt a polygamist at the threshold and say, "We will judge of his qualifications."

If the House finds that Mr. Roberts has disqualified himself until his presence endangers the Republic from his participation in some form of crime, by reason of treason, by reason of polygamy, or other reason, it has the constitutional right to do so. I need not stop to discuss whether he has so disqualified himself.

The committee in each report agrees that he is a polygamist, has disqualified himself, and is not entitled to retain his seat. The minority contends that the House should go through the farce of admitting him to the bar, permit him to hold up his hand and swear that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and then, without further investigation, immediately expel him. That is the proposition of the minority. They say in their report, "Immediately, by force, if you please, without further investigation."

Does this great Constitution which we all revere require us to do this foolish act? My distinguished colleague from Maine yesterday made light of Gen. John A. Logan, a man who, as a citizen of a neighboring State, I had learned to revere and respect, although differing with him in politics, for his good judgment, his loyalty to the Government, and his ability to construe constitutional questions. He spoke upon the subject of the right of election and qualifications of members. I prefer to quote his strong, patriotic words.

In the Whittemore case, General Logan, in his debate, said:

It is said that the constituency had the right to elect such a member as they may think proper. I say no. We can not say that he shall be of a certain politics, or of a certain religion, or anything of that kind; but, sir, we have the right to say that he shall not be a man of infamous character. He is not merely a representative of the constituents who elect him, but his vote in the House is a vote for the whole nation. It is a vote for the people of the whole country, and every district in the United States has the same interest in his vote that his own district has. Hence, if Congress shall not have the power or authority or shall not have the right to exclude a man of that kind, then the rights of the people of the whole country may be destroyed by a district sending a representative who may be obtained to vote in a manner which may be destructive to the rights of the people. Are we to be told that Congress has no right to prevent anything of this kind because of the right of any constituency to send whomsoever they please?

* * * * * * *

It is not that the people shall not be represented. Not at all. It is this: That the people of the country have no right to destroy their own liberties by filling Congress with men who, from their conduct, show themselves capable of the destruction of their Government.

* * * * * * *

Congress, being the representatives of the whole people, are entitled to say that the rights of the whole country shall not be destroyed by one or more districts throwing in here a man or set of men capable of their destruction, and that, having knowledge of the facts and the power to prevent the mischief by exercising the right of exclusion, they have a right to exercise that power and thereby protect the interests of the country and to preserve instead of destroy the right of representation.

I fully concur and contend it is the duty of the House to judge of the members' qualifications. [Applause.]

Think of it a moment! In this representative Government of ours each member votes for about one-quarter of a million people. Each not only votes for one-quarter of a million of his district, but at the same time, having consulted with the other members, votes not simply as the representative of one Congressional district, but of all the people. As the representative of all the people each member determines not for his locality alone, but for all the people the qualifications of a member. You have not only the right but the Constitution makes it your duty to do it. Why? For the protection of the Government itself.

In this representative Government the one affects the whole, just as much as the bucket of water is affected by that which is poisonous in a part of it; it permeates all, and for that reason affects the whole Government, and it is not simply your privilege, gentlemen of the House, to pass upon the qualifications of a member, but it is your sworn, your bounden, your patriotic duty to the whole country to do so, whether it counts for his admission or whether it goes as a matter of his expulsion. If a matter of expulsion, it takes the two-thirds vote, because the Constitution so says. It is a question whether he is qualified not simply under the three qualifications, but whether he is qualified under the great and magnificent Constitution and the spirit of the Government to properly represent the liberties of the whole people. That is the test—the good of the whole Government.

You may say that a State ought not to be refused representation. I grant it, other things being equal; but this Government is founded, it is based, its laws are enacted, are administered, on the theory of the greatest good to the greatest number. The Constitution says that you shall judge of the qualifications of a member. When you come to try the question of polygamy, it has been established, not only by the proof but by the gentleman from Utah, and the committee has agreed that he ought not to retain his seat in the great American House of Congress. Why? Because it is dangerous to the Republic. If you do not put it on that ground, you can not put it on any other; and will you say, gentlemen, that the Constitution means that you shall higgle over constitutional construction when one is as plain as the other? [Applause.]

Let me follow this a little further. Mr. Logan further says:

For crime, sir, we have a right to proscribe a man. That is the ground I put it on. That is the ground on which I put it first, and that is the ground on which I put it now. We have a right, I say, to protect the interests of the country by excluding men from these halls on the ground of crime. It is not a crime to be a Democrat or Republican, to be a Presbyterian or a Methodist, or a member of any other denomination; but, sir, it is a crime for a man to do what this man has done. And why? Because the laws of our country denominate it a crime. It is made a crime by law. Hence my theory is based on the law, and is this, that in pursuance of the law, and in carrying out its principles, we must protect the country by protecting ourselves against crime and against criminals in this body. That is the ground I took and the theory I stated.

Here is a man convicted of a crime, and this great Government through its Presidents, Cleveland and Harrison, extended to him and such as him the amnesty and said if they were keeping the law they should be freed from the guilt and punishment, but they did not say they should be unless they were keeping the law. Your committee find that he was a polygamist in 1885 and every day thereafter until the present. When the matchless spirit that rules this American Republic of ours extended to this gentleman the olive branch of peace and said he could have it if he would maintain the law, he went on, as this committee finds, violating the law. Need we stop to argue where we shall land? It is only a question whether we have a right under the constitutional provision that makes the House the judge of the qualifications to say, "Your qualifications are short and you shall not be admitted," or whether we will say, "You may be admitted, and then, under the rule that it takes two-thirds, we will vote you out."

For one I do not care. That is the reason I said in the beginning of my remarks that it looked to me as if it was a difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Here is the House, here is the great American Congress, debating for three days, and gentlemen laboring for an hour and a half or two hours to convince the country, and this House especially—I say the country, for I imagine a part of it is for that—that one reason leads him to exclusion and the other leads to expulsion. To my mind I do not care which it is; I am willing to join either. I say under the facts found we may either exclude or expel; and if it is a question of exclusion, there will be a two-thirds vote anyway.

If the conclusions of the majority of your committee or that of the minority is sustained, it is because the public safety demands the exclusion or expulsion of the gentleman elect from Utah.

The means must be adequate to the end.

If it is unsafe to trust the life of the nation to the keeping of a polygamist by permitting him to remain in his seat, is it not equally unsafe to admit him to the seat?

Is not the public safety endangered as much by admission and exclusion as by that of exclusion alone?

If public safety demands of us to expel this man after he has been seated because he, in common with other members, has the life of the nation in his keeping, does not public safety demand for the same reasons that he shall not be let into the seat?

If the House is the judge of what public safety demands and it sees the polygamist or any enemy to the Government approach, is it not compelled to use all the means necessary to insure public safety?

Is this House compelled to admit an enemy, give him a seat, and then turn him out; or rather should it not consult the highest safety by keeping him out? [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, during the sessions of the committee, after learning the position of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], I formed the purpose, at some time or other during this discussion, of replying to some of his legal arguments that he would present. He has now presented them upon some of these interesting questions. It had not been my purpose to address the House by way of making an argument along any other lines.

I am not prepared to say, acting under my oath of office, that if this question of a violation of the compact was the only question before the House I would cast an affirmative vote for the adoption of the resolution reported by the majority of the committee. But, without spending much time, I want briefly to supplement what my colleague from the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], said with reference to that question. And before doing that I want to read a paragraph on page 72 of the minority report. It says:

No power was reserved in the enabling act, nor can any be found in the Constitution of the United States, authorizing Congress, not to say the House of Representatives alone, to discipline the people or the State of Utah, because the crime of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation has not been exterminated in Utah. Where is the warrant to be found for the exercise of this disciplinary, supervisory power?

Now, mark you what the minority say:

This theory is apparently evolved for the purposes of this case; is entirely without precedent; and has not even the conjecture or dream of any writer or commentator on the Constitution to stand upon.

The member of the minority who framed that paragraph never in his lifetime has read, or, if he has read, has read to no purpose, the great opinion of that great war Secretary who subsequently became the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the great case of Texas against White, where the doctrine is expressly laid down, not as a dream, not for the purpose of this case, but an enunciation by a full and undivided court, as I recall that case in 7 Wallace, when Salmon P. Chase said that the conduct of a State could be such that it could violate the compact to such an extent that the House of Representatives could deny that State representation upon the floor of this House.

I do not propose to go into this argument further now than to say that, so far as I am concerned, the minority of this committee shall not sneer out of this case this great question, so eloquently presented by my colleague upon the committee from the State of Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

I invite the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to carefully revise his speech before it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if he desires the good opinion to which I think he is entitled among the members of the bar of this great country of ours.

Neither do I intend, Mr. Speaker, to long pursue the argument presented during the afternoon by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. He seems to have devised a new proposition and a new doctrine that I have heard rumored around the corridors of this building for the last week or two, but which, in my judgment, find support and warrant from no reasonable and logical construction to be given to this Constitution of ours.

I do not propose to argue the question whether a majority vote can exclude Brigham H. Roberts from this floor or not, or whether it takes a two-thirds vote. That question can be covered either by an amendment to the resolution tendered by the majority of the committee, or I apprehend it can be made upon a point of order, if more than a majority and less than a two-thirds vote is cast in the affirmative.

But, aside from this, there can be no middle ground. The resolutions of the majority as amended along the lines suggested must be adopted, or else the resolution tendered by the minority of the committee ought to be adopted.

There is no dividing line in the opinion of the majority of this committee, after having given weeks of time to the investigation, not so much of the questions of fact in this case, but of the great constitutional and parliamentary questions of law here presented.

But that there is nothing new under the sun, as is reported to have been said thousands of years ago, was fully attested by the oratorical outburst here upon yesterday afternoon. We heard a construction given to the Constitution of the United States that there is no implied power in that instrument, excepting perhaps with reference to internal improvements, for the building of harbors in rivers and bays, and with reference to the maintenance of a national banking system, and perhaps a few additional things.

It is not new, because that proposition emanated from a gentleman from the State of Maine, and a Republican from the State of Maine. And I want to say, with all due respect to the State of Maine, that for twenty-five years last past I have watched the somersaults and the performances of very eminent gentlemen from that State far to the Northeast, but it seems to me that when a Republican from that State upon yesterday enunciated that doctrine, while the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] was holding his hat, that the climax upon this great question concerning the construction of the Constitution had finally been reached.

I want to say, further, that that may be Republicanism in the State of Maine or it may be Democracy in the State of Missouri, but it is not Republicanism anywhere west of the Alleghany Mountains. [Applause.] That this House has implied powers, it seems to me, all men have by this time been ready to concede, excepting the two minority members on this committee.

Another thing: This committee is continually being misrepresented, as it seems to me, in holding out the doctrine and belief that the majority report holds that additional qualifications, rather than the three named in the Constitution, can be added, regardless of what the subjects-matter are. This committee nowhere advocates that, and if it did it would be mere obiter dictum upon the part of the writer of the majority report. We simply say that a disqualification for the commission of crimes can be added, and we seek to add it in this case.

The majority of the committee are of the belief that it is not necessary to have a statute of Congress on this subject, for the simple reason that the Constitution says that each House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its own members. I would not give a fig for a statute that might be legally adopted by both Houses, and receive the sanction of the President, put into the form of a statute, other than a mere advisory suggestion to the succeeding Congresses as they come and as they go.

By what right and by what authority can a Senate and a President and one House tie up succeeding Congresses, succeeding Houses, with reference to this question of qualification, when the Constitution says that it is solely possessed by each respective House at its organization or during its continued existence?

But another thing, attention to which has already been drawn by one or more gentlemen who have preceded me. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] upon yesterday argued pretty nearly everything excepting the constitutional question under which we have the right to expel a member of Congress, and it does seem to me that as the debate has drifted along, as we have gotten off into other fields, as we have listened to these flights of oratory upon various and sundry questions—it now seems to me that we ought to come back and read the provision that is the basis of the action of the minority of this committee.

As threadbare as it may be, I desire again to read it:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Now, I invite the attention of every lawyer member of this House to notice the punctuation, the rhetorical construction of that paragraph, and then answer upon his conscience whether or no he can consistently, some time in the future, if this report of the majority is voted down, expel a member of this House for things done one, two, three, five, or twenty years before his membership commenced, an act in no way connected with the duties of his office; and yet this is the feast to which the minority of this committee invite us, and this is the logic which they say ought to have persuasive influence in voting down the majority report and in substituting the views of the minority therefor.

I submit to every member of this House who will give a careful consideration before answering to the roll call on to-morrow afternoon to say whether or not the disorderly conduct and the expulsion of a member do not go hand in hand. I ask every member of this House to carefully consider before the roll call is made whether he can vote for expulsion for anything that is not regarded as disorderly conduct by the member after his membership has commenced. I know that there are dozens of men upon this floor who can never conscientiously cast a vote for the expulsion of Brigham H. Roberts.

I want to warn, so far as I, a new member, unacquainted with nearly all you gentlemen, can warn this House. I do not believe it is purposely said by the minority of this committee, but it is being advocated by some gentlemen upon the floor of this House if this man is once admitted, he will never be expelled. That is going to confront you as sure as the world, if the roll is ever called upon this minority report. You are going to say to us that we can expel a man notwithstanding this constitutional provision: you are going to ask us to expel a man in the face and teeth of every precedent that has ever been made by either the Senate or the House of Representatives of the American Congress from George Washington down to the present moment.

You are going to ask us to ride down and whistle to the winds every precedent that has ever been made, simply because of these new-fangled notions, as it seems to me, which have been presented here by such eloquence and such outbursts of oratory as we listened to yesterday afternoon and as we are still to be favored with by the gentleman from Missouri, when he gets his time to close this debate on the side of the minority.

Can we ride these precedents down? Are they entitled to any weight? Are they not of persuasive authority? Another thing that created quite a lively stir in my imagination upon yesterday as I listened to the persuasive eloquence of the gentleman from Maine was that all these precedents that seemingly are against the minority are branded as of no force, because of the fact that they emanate and were born at or about the time of the war of the rebellion; and we can still further say, verily there is nothing new under the sun.

It has remained for a Republican from the State of Maine, joining with the gentleman from Missouri, to say that all legislative precedents made after or about the time of the war of the rebellion are to be whistled down the winds and are not to be regarded as of any binding force upon this House. In 1869 this House solemnly adopted a resolution that in all cases where challenges were made they should be sent to a committee before the oath was administered. They say that is one of the fruits of the war of the rebellion and was simply born out of the passions of those troublous times.

When we refer, again, to the Whittemore case it is regarded as without weight and without authority, because Gen. John A. Logan had not properly argued the case to the House, said the gentleman from Maine upon yesterday. They say in the minority report that Logan was not versed in the precedents, that when the House passed judgment it was excited, that they had lost their heads, and that they were not deliberate in their movements. Yet I want to call attention to what seems to be a complete refutation of all the criticism that I have heard upon the Whittemore case.

Let it be remembered, as stated by the chairman of the committee on yesterday, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], that Whittemore was a Republican; he presented his credentials to a Republican House; therefore there was no partisanship in the movement excluding him from this body. But it is said that it was about the closing years of the war, whatever persuasive influence that might have had. I want to read some of the distinguished names forming a part of the majority who voted to cast out Mr. Whittemore after he had committed the crime of selling a cadetship at West Point.

I find as voting in the affirmative for the resolution such men as the following: John A. Bingham, who was sneered out of weight and authority because he was from the State of Ohio. I find the great name of SHELBY M. CULLOM, who for more than a quarter of a century has been an honored and leading member of one House or the other. I find the great name of Noah Davis, from the State of New York, honored, as I understand, by all New Yorkers. I find the great name of James A. Garfield. I find the name of Mr. KETCHAM, who, as I am told, is still an honored member of this body. I find—and I want to emphasize this name, because I shall allude to it again—I find the great name of George W. McCrary. I find the great name of Samuel J. Randall, I find the great name of S. S. Cox, and I find the name, not known perhaps to you gentlemen as it is to the gentleman from Maine, of Mr. Peters, who has been an honored member for many years of the supreme court of the State of Maine.

Can it be that these votes were cast because of the clamor of the day or because of the heat and passion growing out of the war of the rebellion? Whittemore had resigned to avoid expulsion. He had gone back to his constituency and had been reelected, and when he appeared here to take the oath he was met at the door by John A. Logan, who protested practically in the same language as the protest was made in this case by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] on the first day of the session in this House. He had already discussed every fact before the House.

There need be no further difficulty; there need be no further taking of proof. They were all then on file on the Secretary's table. A motion to exclude was made, and exclusion was voted through, in part, by those great names I have just read to the House. Another thing, I noticed on yesterday that Judge Cooley, of Michigan, is the only man that merits favor in the estimation of the minority in their arguments upon this great question.

It seems to them that no man is entitled to weight unless he lived in the State of Maine or in the State of Massachusetts, which is both the father and the mother of the State of Maine. Great and honeyed compliments were paid to Judge Story, from which I would not detract. But Judge Story has gone into history, as many another great man has gone, leaving mistakes behind him, as all great men have done before.

In one of the editions of Story on the Constitution you find the remarkable statement, the extraordinary statement, that the President of the Senate in joint convention shall open the returns of the electors, and that the vote shall be counted, says the Constitution; but in one of the editions of Judge Story upon this instrument he says that the Vice-President counts the vote, a proposition that is not believed in to-day by a single man on American soil, and has not been believed in by a considerable number for the last half century. It is now regarded as obsolete in recent editions. So that whatever Judge Story said he said in an academic way, and he said it without argument, no doubt. What investigation he made none of us know, and giving it all the weight to which it is entitled, it is not to weigh down and thrust out of existence the authority and precedents with which the House has been presented.

Another thing. I want to correct a statement which the gentleman from Maine made yesterday, as I thought, quite flippantly, when, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, he held out the idea, as I understood it, that Judge McCrary in his work on Elections was with the minority; that when McCrary came to give his solemn vote under oath of office he would be found with him. I have already read you his vote on the Whittemore case, and now I want to call your attention to the vote of Judge McCrary in the case of the Oakes Ames and Brooks case.

I need not restate the case. Suffice it to say that a crime had been committed some five years before. The crime had been committed in one Congress, and after one or two intervening Congresses the question came up. I want to read you what he says:

> Now, sir, in this case, if the facts which the committee have found are true, the purpose and object of these corrupt transactions was to secure influence not alone in the Fortieth Congress, but in subsequent Congresses as well. The Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Crédit Mobilier expected to require, perhaps, not positive legislation, but they desired to prevent unfriendly legislation in all these Congresses.

Clearly maintaining that he voted to expel Oakes Ames and Brooks solely because as members of Congress they intended to corruptly reach the then sitting or existing Congress. It could not have been planted on any other ground. So I take the name of Judge McCrary, even though he did live west of the Mississippi River. Not only in his text-book on the subject of Elections, but in his vote for Whittimore, because of the explanation of his vote in the case of Ames and James Brooks.

Another case I want to call attention to as cited by the gentleman from Maine yesterday, and I do not claim he made a concealment of facts, but it seems to me that he talked more rapidly and with less voice when talking about the substantial facts of that case than in any other period of his eloquent address. [Laughter and applause.] That is the case in which the great Chief Justice Shaw wrote the opinion in 3 Gray, Hiss against Bartlett. That was exclusively an expulsion case. Mr. Hiss was a member of the house of representatives in the Massachusetts legislature.

He was appointed a member of a committee to visit the city of Lowell, in that State, in the performance of some public duty, which is not disclosed in the case. In performing this public duty as a member of the committee he disgraced himself by some unseemly and ungentlemanly conduct. Upon return of the committee to open session, the facts being made known, he was promptly expelled from the House.

Being arrested the next day upon some trivial offense, he claimed his privilege as a member, and sued out the writ of habeas corpus, and thus the question was presented to Chief Justice Shaw. The chief justice held, as the majority claims, that in the absence of a constitutional provision on that subject of expulsion, the power to expel a member for ungentlemanly and unseemly conduct is an inherent law in all legislative bodies.

Thus the majority contends here that it is an inherent law in all legislative bodies, even in the sewing circle about which we heard so much yesterday, even in political conventions, in any kind of organized bodies of men, before the members are qualified or before the body is organized. We claim that is one of the inherent laws. Suppose in this coming campaign that I should offer myself as a delegate in some Democratic convention in one of the Southern States?

Being a citizen of Iowa and a Republican, it would be an insult; but the minority say that there is no inherent law of exclusion until after there has been a permanent or at least a temporary organization, and then to expel. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of a constitutional provision, that this House would have the power to exclude in the first instance, and subsequently to expel for misconduct; and it has already, in the case of Hitt against Bartlett, decided by the great chief justice of Massachusetts, been so decided. Nothing more can be made out of it.

I likewise call attention to the case of Ex parte Garland in the 4th of Wallace, that was decided by a divided court, when our ex-Attorney-General presented himself for the purpose of practicing law in that great court. It was not the test oath under the act of 1862 that was before the court, it was the test act that refers to attorneys at law, passed by Congress in 1865, when Mr. Garland had been admitted to practice in the court in 1859.

What that court held in that case was that there was such a property right in the right to practice law that it could only be canceled by a judicial proceeding, and certainly that was covered by the amnesty proclamation of President Johnson. Nothing further was decided than the two questions, and what virtue the minority of the committee can get out of that great case is beyond my comprehension.

Another thing we heard a great deal about yesterday was the Wilkes case in Great Britain, a hundred and twenty-five years ago. I was much delighted in listening to the gentleman from Maine in reference to that great case, or series of cases. I have read more than twenty accounts in as many histories of Great Britain with reference to that case, and no two histories agree.

And upon yesterday I heard the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and he agrees with none of the twenty histories that preceded. [Laughter.] But if it has any weight at all, I call the attention of the House to the constitutional provision from which I read a few minutes ago. He says, and undoubtedly correctly says, that the first Wilkes case arose in the year 1762, and several times thereafter, prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

If that is so, and if Wilkes was unjustly expelled, did not our fathers, the members of that convention of 1787, have the Wilkes case in mind and then declare by constitutional provision that no man should be expelled as a member from the House of Representatives excepting for disorderly conduct—conduct, while a member, inconsistent with the duties of his office? That is the application that I would make to the Wilkes case, and the only application that, in my judgment, can be given to it.

A great deal was said about the Stark case from Oregon, and the gentleman from Maine sought to make a point, with much impressiveness, in calling down the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], when Mr. TAYLER had never said that there was no case in the Congress of the United States. What he then said, and what I wish I could now emphasize, is that there is no case in the House of Representatives.

The Stark case was in the Senate. Thousands of miles beyond the limit of railroads and telegraph, the committee could not get the evidence before his term of office would expire. They finally resorted to ex parte affidavits as proof, and upon that he was admitted, and upon that they sought to expel, but failed, as there will be a failure in this case if the majority of this committee is voted down and the expulsion proceedings are sought to be enforced.

The same was true in the Cannon case. They sought to expel him after he was in. They could not get the two-thirds. Different reasons and sophistry were urged, as have been urged here. He was allowed to serve his whole term of office, and, as I said a while ago, this is the trap into which we are about to fall, by insisting upon these expulsion proceedings under this clause of the Constitution that declares, in my judgment, that there can be no expulsion excepting for disorderly conduct by a member. I do not say it must occur upon the floor of the House. It might occur as it did in Hiss against Bartlett, in the performance of a committee duty. It might happen when he is at home or at his boarding house, but it would have to be some misconduct so gross as to affect his relations as a member of this House.

The member who murdered a man at Willard's Hotel, in 1859, was sought to be expelled in a subsequent Congress. Congress dropped the whole subject, properly saying that it did not relate to his duties as a member, and was prior to his election. And so say all the cases that the majority of the committee have found. So say all the cases that the minority of the committee have found, and they declare, with much emphasis, that they present not only all the cases that favor the minority, but that favor the majority as well. So that we have no case, and never will have a case, unless the case of Brigham H. Roberts, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, for the first time, is made a precedent upon this great question.

As I said before, I know that there are some differences upon the floor of this House with reference to whether it must be by a majority or whether it must be by a two-thirds vote. Upon that question I have nothing to say. Other gentlemen will argue that. I have nothing to say, except in the most general way, with reference to this great moral question. I have but little to say with reference to section 8 of the Edmunds Act, so called. But one thing that I do want to say, that whether I could vote to exclude Brigham H. Roberts upon section 8 of the Edmunds Act alone or not I am not yet prepared to say.

But that, like this question of the compact, is not to be sneered out of this case. This man Brigham H. Roberts was duly convicted upon his own plea of guilty under the provisions of the Edmunds Act. He served a term in the penitentiary of Utah under the provisions of that act. The Edmunds Act did apply to the Territory of Utah certainly down to the time that it attained statehood.

It was argued before our committee by Mr. Roberts that the enabling act of Congress and the adoption of the constitutional provisions, the two together, worked an amnesty for him. In other words, that every man in the penitentiary of Utah the day it attained statehood was entitled to his freedom. I do not believe it. This man had received his status as a polygamist under the Edmunds Act of 1882.

I deny that his status has been changed merely because Utah passed from a Territory to a State in 1896. I deny that it worked as a pardon to him. I deny that it was an amnesty for him. If a man who was sent to the penitentiary for his natural lifetime, under the laws of the Territory of Utah, by a Territorial court, is still suffering imprisonment, and will until death relieves him, it seems to me by the same argument that Brigham H. Roberts is still suffering from his status as a polygamist that he received when Utah was nothing but a Territory.

I do not desire to occupy my time, but will gladly give it to other gentlemen who want to present their views upon this great question. But I can not help but stop and ask this House, for how much longer are the American people to be pestered with this polygamous question? It has now been ever present with us for more than the average lifetime. Away back fifty or more years ago we had the Mountain Meadow massacre.

Hundreds of men, women, and innocent children were shot down and knifed down and knocked down with axes solely and only because of the terrible conditions that then prevailed in the Territory of Utah. And in the judicial investigation at a subsequent time the murderers were tracked almost to the front doorsteps of the high chieftain of polygamy in the Territory of Utah.

We all recall the fact that the United States military forces under Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston were kept there for a long period of time, that there might be a semblance of law and of order.

In 1862, busy as this Congress was, it found time to respond to the demands of civilization, to the demands of a well-matured public opinion, and the statute of that year, commonly called the "Cullum Act," was formulated, which denounced polygamy and affixed a punishment.

But the author of that statute neglected to prepare the machinery for the enforcement of that law, and it took nearly twenty years before there could be a single conviction had and the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States pronouncing the validity of that law in all material respects. In 1878 this was done.

We should remember the fact that subsequently to 1878, when the Supreme Court had thus pronounced, Brigham H. Roberts married these plural wives. He did it knowing the judgment of that great court. In 1882 the act was supplemented and reenacted by what is called the Edmunds Act, not only denouncing polygamy, but polygamous cohabitation and practices as well.

Subsequent even to that Brigham H. Roberts married both of his polygamous wives. Then in 1887, I believe it was, the act was still further supplemented by what is called the Edmunds-Tucker Act, and subsequent to that time one at least of these polygamous marriages was made by Brigham H. Roberts.

We have had these questions with us, I say, now for half a century of time. It was only upon the 8th day of this present month that there was another proclamation from the head of the so-called Mormon Church in Utah with reference to these statutes, with reference to this compact, with reference to the status of these men who had been in polygamy, and it was given such dignity by Senator RAWLINS at the other end of this Capitol as to make its appearance in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under the head of Senate proceedings for the 16th day of this month.

And I ask any man, a member of this House, to read it and say whether or not, between the lines, authority is given by the church of Utah that while no man must violate the laws of the land, if he does he must take his chances and carry his own burden; but nowhere is it said that he takes any chances with the church. And I charge that in that proclamation of the 8th of the present month, to be found at the places I have indicated, implied, at least, authority is given these men to continue their polygamous practices, the laws of Utah and the laws of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

For how much longer, I say, must these things be continued? Can such a man, with such a record, with such membership, longer be continued as a member of this body? The minority say, "Go through the hollow mockery of telling him to hold up his hands and swear not simply to support the Constitution of the United States, but impliedly at least that he will demean himself for the next two years as a member of Congress should," when they know, if they know anything, if their construction is the correct one, that he will not be allowed to sit for fifteen minutes of time if the requisite two-thirds vote can be had. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with deep interest for two days to the able arguments upon the various phases of this case. It is entirely within the bounds of truth to say that no parliamentary case in the history of this Government ever received as careful and exhaustive investigation as has been given to this by the able special committee that has had it in charge. Exhaustive reports have been filed and elaborate arguments have been made in support of both views presented by members of the committee.

This case, in the aspect it presents for the consideration of this body, is without a parallel in the history of the Government. Already the House has adopted the extraordinary expedient of arresting at the bar and withholding the oath of office from the duly elected representative of one of the States, who comes with credentials in due form and who is clothed with all the express qualifications prescribed by the Constitution. This was done in accordance with what was regarded as the uniform custom of the House when grave charges are made affecting the character and fitness of a member. The charges should be of a grave character indeed, and be most solemnly presented, to justify a resort to such an unusual method of procedure. A study of the parliamentary history of the country will disclose that in nearly every instance where unusual procedure was adopted it was in relation to a case of absorbing popular interest, and public feeling was to some extent responsible for the action of the House.

This Republic, in common with all others, displays its greatest weaknesses in times of popular excitement. Its ability to withstand the sweeping tides of public feeling is the best evidence of its stability and permanency. In all such crises it behooves those occupying responsible official positions to be exceptionally firm and patriotic and to conduct the public affairs in a calm, dignified, and orderly manner, so that when the excitement abates their work will command the confidence and respect of all thoughtful citizens. The charge involved in this case, however, is of that unusual and serious character that the conduct of the House must be regarded as just and will be fully vindicated with time.

The right of the people of a State to choose their own Representatives in this body is fundamental and necessary to the independence and autonomy of the States, but no State has the right to be represented by a member who is an enemy to the Government or the social structure upon which the Government rests, or by one whose character is such that his membership would subject the House to obloquy and disgrace. The Constitution declares that no one shall be a member of this House who does not possess certain qualifications in relation to age, residence, and citizenship. This provision is negative, and yet I find myself unable to agree with the view expressed by gentlemen in this debate that Congress has the power to add to the qualifications fixed by the terms of the Constitution.

The rule recognized by jurists for the construction of constitutional provisions is different from that which is applied to the interpretation of statutes. When the Constitution speaks upon a subject the presumption is that it covered the whole ground, and its expression is exclusive, unless from the whole context it fairly appears that it was intended to be otherwise, while the opposite rule applies to statutory provisions. If Congress may add to the qualifications of members to this House there is no limit upon its power except that it can make no religious test for membership. It has the power, if the subject is open at all, to limit membership to a particular race or calling; it may lawfully provide that no one shall be eligible to membership who does not hold acceptable views upon political and economic questions. Does anyone believe that any such power was designed by the framers of the great charter of government? Once concede its existence and civil liberty is at an end. The safeguards for the protection of person and property, of the rights of the minority, of the equality of States, would be utterly destroyed. If it exists at all, there is no limitation upon it, except that to which I have adverted. It is not necessary for the correct solution of the questions presented in this case to declare a doctrine that would put it in the power of a majority of the States to practically dictate whom the people of the other States should choose for their Representatives. The power is not expressly given, and by virtue or what principle does it exist by implication?

Nor can I concur in the view that the claimant is ineligible under the operation of the Edmunds law. That law was enacted in 1882 and it declared on its face that it was to be operative only in the Territories where Congress had exclusive jurisdiction. Congress did not possess the power to give it a broader operation. I grant, sir, that if Utah were still a Territory, and the claimant were seeking a seat in this body as a Delegate, that law would justify his exclusion. The Edmunds law, by its own force, disqualified polygamists from voting or holding office. The disqualification was not contingent upon conviction of the crime, nor was it in the nature of a penalty. It was a regulation of the right of suffrage and to hold office, that Congress has always had the power to make for the Territories. The conviction of claimant under that law has no legal significance now. His rights are the same as if he had never been indicted. The disqualifications imposed by the law were operative only as long as the law was operative. No one will deny that a repeal of the law would have removed the disqualifications. It did not and could not fix a permanent and irrepealable political status that would continue after the law ceased to operate. The law was applicable to the Territory in its probationary state, and when it was received into statehood all laws of Congress for the regulation of the affairs of the Territory and affecting the political and civil rights of its inhabitants became ineffectual to the same extent as if they had been expressly repealed.

The whole subject of the regulation of the morals and the political and civil rights of the inhabitants vested in the State government, subject only to the limitations contained in the Federal Constitution. That is not a debatable question and no decisions of courts are necessary for its support, although a number could be easily found. Congress recognized that result when Utah was given statehood. A policy of pronounced antagonism against the institution of polygamy had been maintained in the Territory, and upon granting statehood Congress recognized that its control of the subject would cease; therefore the enabling act required the State to continue the same policy that Congress had inaugurated and maintained. The new State was required to solemnly provide by what was said to be an irrepealable ordinance that polygamy should be forever prohibited in the State. This ordinance was declared to be the fundamental condition upon which the State was admitted into the Union. I affirm that there is no express provision of any law or constitution operative in the State of Utah that renders claimant ineligible to a seat in this body. If he were excluded upon that statute, it would be an implied admission that a polygamist in Ohio, or any other State, if there be any such, would be eligible to a seat in Congress. I believe that polygamy is as bad in one State as another, and that the qualifications for membership in this body are the same in all the States.

The suggestion that Utah has been guilty of bad faith in sending a polygamist to represent her interests in this body is no justification for the exclusion of the claimant from his seat. Utah made no enforceable compact with the Federal Government at the time of her admission into the Union, excepting that embodied in the Federal Constitution. No State has a right to surrender one iota of the political power held by all the other States to the Federal Government or to any other authority. An attempt to do so would be against sound policy and be void. That theory is at war with the very genius of the Union and in violation of the fundamental principles of our complex plan of government. The Territory of Utah had no enforceable right to statehood. Whether that dignity should be conferred upon her depended upon the will and temper of Congress. Congress had the exclusive power to admit or deny statehood; but when it admitted the Territory into the Union as a State, it came without condition, but possessed of all the constitutional rights of the other States. The admission of a State into the Union is a political function, and it belongs exclusively to Congress. That function can be exercised arbitrarily and capriciously. Congress may impose conditions before it will act, but when action is taken and the Territory becomes a State, the conditions are without force. Congress can only depend upon the probability of their observance.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the State of Utah could now change its constitution so that it could permit the practice of polygamy legally in that State?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The State of Utah could change its constitution and permit the practice of polygamy, provided the State of Illinois could legally authorize the practice of polygamy in that State. It has the same right as Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there is any doubt about the legal right in Illinois?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I do not believe it is the right of any State in the Union to legalize the practice. As a fundamental proposition it is at war with the institutions upon which government is founded. It is inimical to government, and can not be tolerated in Illinois or anywhere else.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the act admitting Utah, so far as it relates to the provision that they shall provide that polygamy shall not be adopted, is invalid there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it is not enforcible as a compact. In the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion the Federal Government undertook to make a compact with them respecting the terms of their rehabilitation, and, with all due respect to the opinion of my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. McPHERSON], the Supreme Court of the United States held the alleged compacts invalid.

Congress required of those States, before they should be restored to their constitutional relation with the Government, that they should ordain constitutions fixing certain qualifications for the right of suffrage, which they did, and then an enabling act was passed declaring that the right of representation was restored upon the fundamental condition that the qualifications fixed in their respective constitutions should never be altered or changed. Those laws stand unrepealed to-day. Yet many of those States have materially changed the qualifications contained in their constitutions, and the Supreme Court of the United States has said they had the right so to do.

We have the power to exclude the claimant on the ground that Utah has disappointed the hopes of the country in relation to her policy. We have the arbitrary power to expel or exclude any member of this body and are not answerable to any other tribunal excepting the people for our conduct. But can we find justification in the Constitution for such action? What would be the result if this body should use its arbitrary power to expel or exclude members by way of punishment to a State or to coerce a State into submission to a policy that belongs wholly to the State? Who can predict the result? We could then make State constitutions and enforce them, dictate the domestic politics and morals of the States. Once give the power of expulsion, that interpretation and the equality of the States would be destroyed. The equality and the independence of the States within their spheres is a vital principle in our scheme of government, and without it the functions of government could not be performed. It would be better to give claimant a seat in this body, however revolting to the moral instincts of the country that would be, than to adopt an expedient so full of dangerous possibilities. I have no fear of the growth of polygamy in this country. It can not live in this atmosphere. It is a germ that will wither and die in the sunlight of the Christian virtues. Noble womanhood is too steadfastly enthroned in the affections, too firmly woven into the social fabric, too securely embedded in the religious life of this country to fear any evil from that execrable system.

But, sir, there is ample justification under the Constitution for the exclusion of the claimant from a seat in this body, without resorting to questionable expedients and without the hazard of establishing a dangerous precedent. The power of expulsion is expressly given to this body and it necessarily includes the power of exclusion. No one will deny that if a person appeared at the bar of the House to receive the oath of office and it was discovered that he did not possess the express qualifications contained in the Constitution, the oath might be withheld and he be finally refused admission. The charges against the claimant in this case do not affect his qualifications in the proper sense, but they relate to his fitness to be a member of the House, and they naturally belong to the class calling for the exercise of the power of expulsion. If he could be expelled after admission, he certainly can be excluded upon the same grounds, if the facts have been properly ascertained and he has been accorded all the privileges in making his defense that he would have been entitled to if he had been sworn in the first instance. What useful purpose would be subserved if he were sworn and then immediately expelled? There could be no object in this procedure, and the law requires no useless ceremonies.

But it must be kept in mind that in its action under these conditions the House exercises its power of expulsion by construction, and the spirit of the Constitution must be observed respecting the majority necessary to expel. It would be a cheap subterfuge, unworthy of the dignity of this body, to withhold the oath of office, ascertain the facts, and then attempt to exclude the claimant by a bare majority vote upon a ground which is a proper cause for expulsion, which can only be accomplished by a two-thirds vote. It would render nugatory that wise provision of the Constitution that requires two-thirds to expel a member. The claimant should be accorded his seat unless two-thirds of the House vote to exclude him.

The power of expulsion is more than a mere disciplinary power. It may be used to preserve the integrity of the House and to protect it against scandal and reproach. If the Constitution were silent, the power of expulsion would exist by necessary implication, because the express powers could not be carried into effect without it. It is a power that is inherent in every independent legislative body, because it is essential to its preservation. This body may expel a traitor to the Government. It has done so in some notable instances. The right of the States to send Representatives of their own choice necessarily limits the right of the House to expel members except for purposes of discipline, to protect its dignity, and to protect the Government against its enemies. Expulsion can never be resorted to for purposes of punishment alone. The criminal courts of the land must administer the penal laws, according to established procedure.

Useless refinements have been attempted between the words "exclusion" and "expulsion." I do not believe we can do an act and change its meaning by simply changing its label. It makes no difference what you call the act that we are about to do, whether we declare the seat vacant or whether we admit the claimant and then expel him, it is in substance the same thing.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. With pleasure.

Mr. RAY of New York. Supposing this House should invite Mr. Roberts to the bar of the House to take the oath of office as a member of this body, knowing all the facts and circumstances connected with his election and his life and his practices, and we did deliberately and with full knowledge, would that not be pretty nearly condoning all the offense there is in his life and practices?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, I do not believe this House can estop itself by any action of that kind, particularly if it is taken simply to carry out a formality that some members of the House think ought to be carried out.

Now, the talk about the lack of authority to expel a member, after the oath has been administered on account of misconduct or crime he may have committed several years before, it seems to me, can have no application to this case. If I am to understand from that that Brigham H. Roberts was a polygamist five or six years ago, but in good faith ceased the practice and renounced his faith in that system, there is no ground to either expel or exclude him. Is that the kind of a case you bring before the House? Not by any means. You show by the report that he is now a polygamist, both in belief and practice. He is a living, active representative of that revolting system to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. He is a polygamist now.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He is a polygamist now.

Why talk about the Oakes Ames case? When a resolution was offered to expel Oakes Ames from membership for an offense committed five or six years before, the argument was made that he could not be expelled. The same argument would have been made with equal force if the proposition had been to exclude him.

The Constitution requires three express qualifications, as already explained by my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], and it requires a valid election. We can inquire into the qualifications mentioned by the Constitution; we can inquire into the validity of the election and decide those questions by a bare majority; but if the claimant has all the constitutional qualifications and has been properly elected, we can not deny him a seat except upon a two-thirds vote, and it is immaterial whether the procedure be exclusion or expulsion. That is the position I occupy, and that will be the meaning my vote carries when I cast it against the claimant, regardless of the form of procedure.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Suppose the majority resolution is carried and a majority of this House voted to exclude him; would that exclude the Representative from Utah?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the majority votes to exclude him?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If I were in the Chair, it probably would not, though I am not sure.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Suppose the Chair should rule that it did exclude him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that is for the Chair and the House to determine.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And suppose that he should appeal from the ruling of the Chair; would not a majority of this House sustain the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a parliamentary question, to be determined by the Chair and the House.

Mr. SNODGRASS. If the Chair should rule that a majority excluded him, would not a majority of this House sustain the Chair?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a matter of speculation. I do not know. I presume the House would, because the Chair is always right.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Then, after all, in order to give the member from Utah his full rights, must not the question come upon the question of expulsion, which the Constitution says requires two-thirds?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Probably.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the importance of this feature of the case can not be overestimated. There is no occasion for establishing a dangerous precedent. The exigencies of the case do not require it, and it seems to me that a fair analysis of the powers of Congress under the Constitution will disclose to any judicial mind that it is the purpose of the Constitution to protect the right of the States rather than the right of any individual member.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Suppose a two-thirds vote was given for the majority report. Does that exclude claimant under the Constitution?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman asks me, if a two-thirds vote were given for the majority report, whether it would exclude under the Constitution. I presume it would; but the majority report, to which the resolutions are attached, contains statements and inferences which make the conclusion almost irresistible that those resolutions are based upon the theory that a bare majority is all that is necessary; and if there should be two-thirds, it would be accidental rather than necessary.

I hope that the majority resolution will be so amended that it will declare upon its face that two-thirds will be necessary. I have an amendment prepared which I hope at the proper time to have an opportunity to offer.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. May I interrupt the gentleman for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me explain for a moment. I propose to amend the majority resolution by inserting the words "two-thirds of the House concurring" after the word "case," in the first line. Now I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The constitutional provision to which you have referred, and upon which your argument is entirely based, assumes that the person to be expelled or excluded is a member of the House. Do you contend that Brigham H. Roberts is a member of this House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He is a member for some purposes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Has he not a presumptive or inchoate right as a member, and was not that right destroyed when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] interposed his objection? Does he not cease to be a member of this House, and is not his right in abeyance until he shall have been admitted and sworn in?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not subscribe to that doctrine, because he has the constitutional qualifications and has been duly elected. He has drawn salary since the 4th of last March, has exercised the franking privilege, and participated in the election of Speaker. He is a member to the extent that he may be expelled without being sworn.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is it not a fair inference, inasmuch as the gentleman is making a distinction in the definition of exclusion and expulsion, and the question is on expelling—does it not imply that he is a member of this House now?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To the extent necessary for expulsion.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is not that the legal constitutional status, according to the gentleman's assumption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not believe that you can make any such inference. If he were sworn as a member, and a resolution were introduced declaring his seat vacant, it would be expulsion. You can not change the character of an act by simply changing its name.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman has spoken of the shame and obloquy that would be cast upon this House by admitting a propagandist of polygamy. I assume, therefore, from his argument in drawing the distinction between exclusion and expulsion, that the gentleman considers that the legal status of Brigham H. Roberts is that he is a constitutional member of this House at the present time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me say to my friend from New Jersey that I will not have any controversy with him over a refinement of terms and definitions. Roberts is a polygamist, and should not be a member of the House, and I am ready to vote for a resolution to exclude, vacate his seat, or expel him without the oath, with the understanding that it requires a two-thirds vote to accomplish it. I do not care what name you give the procedure.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. It only requires a two-thirds vote to expel a member, and exclusion only requires a majority by construction and necessary implication.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I hope I am too much of a lawyer to permit such technical refinements to destroy the substance of a great constitutional safeguard.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. But the gentleman is driven to the extremity of admitting that Mr. Roberts is a member of this House at the present time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For some purposes.

I can say with my eloquent colleague [Mr. LANDIS] that I too desire to write over the portals of the Capitol that "No polygamist need apply for admission," but I would have the legend written in letters that blaze with such brilliancy that they can be read from the North and the South, from the East and the West, even as far as the archipelago of Sulu.

The report of the committee in this case shows the claimant to be a polygamist not only in belief but in practice. He believes it to be a divine right and a proper system of social life. He may entertain whatever belief he chooses in relation to religion and morals. That is the right of every citizen of the country. But no one has the right under the guaranty of the freedom of conscience and religious tolerance to do that which is condemned as criminal by the universal sentiment of the people. Liberty of conscience does not mean license to commit crime.

Society existed before government. Government was ordained to enlarge and protect social activities. Our civilization has its basis in the Christian faith and philosophy, and it is founded upon certain fundamental institutions around which all other interests center. Chief among these is the family, which, by common consent, consists of one husband, one wife, and as many children as the Lord may see fit to bless the union with. That institution is older than the Government. It was here before the Constitution was written. It is the unit of civilization and it was not necessary to define its composition in constitutions or laws. There never was any controversy about it. It was a matter of universal knowledge and consent. It is the warp into which every other social relation is woven, and it constitutes the foundation rock upon which the structure of government rests. Without it our civilization could not exist and the government would crumble into ruins. It is of infinitely greater importance than the government itself, for if that were overthrown another, with like attributes and functions, would be erected in its place; but if the foundation were destroyed there would be nothing for republican institutions to rest upon.

The claimant is a propagandist of a system of social order that is destructive of the Christian family. He believes in the institution of polygamy as a divine right, and he puts his belief into practice. He claims to have renounced that belief, but the report of the committee shows that his renunciation was coerced, and that his practice has not been abandoned. If he had it in his power to-day, he would make his loathsome institution universal. We have no right to exclude him from membership here because he is a Mormon. A Mormon has as much right, under the law, to a seat in Congress as a Presbyterian or a Baptist. I would distinguish his case from the ordinary bigamist who contracts unlawful marriages, not under claim of moral right, but clandestinely and to gratify a depraved moral nature. All crime tends toward moral degeneracy and social decay, but the criminal courts have adequate power to punish the common offender, and this is society's safeguard. But here is a man who is an avowed enemy to the Christian family. He is a polygamist because he believes it to be morally right. It is the rule of his moral nature—of his life. He would substitute his detestable system for that which is the basis of this civilization. He could bring his wives here into the very temple of civilization, maintain polygamous relations with them, and be protected from arrest and prosecution by the Federal Constitution if he were a member of this House.

The principle which justifies his exclusion is that he is the representative of a system of social and moral life that is inimical to our civilization and destructive of society itself. We have the acknowledged right to expel traitors to the Government from this House. A traitor is one who would accomplish the overthrow of the Government. Is not one who would destroy the very foundation upon which government rests as great an enemy as a traitor? Would he not accomplish the overthrow of the Government? The way is clear, the duty is plain. Let him be excluded upon this broad ground and let the world know that there is no place under the American flag where an avowed polygamist, as a propagandist, is eligible to a seat in this body.

But a false chivalry says since he has incurred obligations toward innocent women and children, what would you have him do? Shall he heartlessly thrust them aside? Ah, but that is not the question. He made the mistake of his life in getting into politics and obtruding his loathsome system into the affairs of the country. He was the aggressor. He should have remained at home and discharged those obligations in as inconspicuous a manner as possible, and thanked the patience and generosity of the American people that he was out of the penitentiary.

In conclusion let me say, the Christian homes of this country are the fountain of every virtue. Keep the homes pure and our institutions are secure; but let them become polluted, and the result will be social and political decay. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allotted me in this discussion I can not go into all the important questions involved in it. To my mind the issue here presented involves much more than the personality of the member from Utah. It extends to the very essence of constitutional government. The member from Utah had a certificate of election and credentials from his State, and was in every way a regularly elected and commissioned Representative, as much so as any member of this House. On the 4th day of last December, he presented himself before the bar of the House to receive the oath of office, not even questioned on constitutional grounds by a contestant from Utah or by a member of this House.

The only requirements exacted in the Constitution are that he be 25 years of age, seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he is elected. It was not contended by those who sought his rejection that he did not possess all these qualifications, and your committee, after many weeks of investigation, has found unanimously that he did possess them when he sought to take the oath of office. I therefore view with satisfaction my vote in favor of administering to him that oath. The refusal of this House to admit the member from Utah on his credentials is an extraordinary and unjust proceeding in more ways than one.

In the first place, it tends to prevent a fair hearing in his behalf. He is denied the manifold rights and privileges of a member. He is not permitted to vote or receive the emoluments of his office or his expenses in coming to attend the meeting of this body. The poor privilege he was permitted (a courtesy extended by the exacting rule of unanimous consent) was an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf for a very limited time, not so much as one-tenth the time allowed his opponents, who occupied most of it in uncalled-for abuse of the people he represented.

In the second place, it denies representation in the Congress of the United States to a sovereign State in this Union without a hearing, and on the ex parte statements of a member with no better credentials than those possessed by the member from Utah. Suppose, after this investigation, our committee had found that the member was entitled to his seat; how then can this wrong to his State and people be corrected, leaving out of consideration his rights in the premises? Nearly two months have elapsed since this Congress assembled, and great and important matters of legislation, in which Utah had as much interest as any other State, have been considered by this body. Why, Mr. Speaker, this Congress might have declared war against the most powerful nation on earth during that time, and yet Utah could have had no part in that declaration. These suggestions are but a few which might be made to show the unwisdom of this course. I might extend them indefinitely, but my time will not permit.

The Constitution alone prescribes the qualifications of membership in this House, and Congress has never by legislative enactment, much less by the act of this House alone, sought to add to those qualifications. When the people of this nation, for the first time in a century, deemed it necessary to add to those qualifications, Congress did not attempt to do it even by solemn legislative enactment, though there were more than a two-thirds vote in each House favorable thereto. The exciting times immediately succeeding the war of the rebellion caused the enactment of some drastic measures, but the heads of our legislators were not turned on this great question of constitutional government. The fourteenth amendment, adding other qualifications for membership in this House than those enumerated in the original Constitution, was submitted by resolution of the Thirty-ninth Congress, June 16, 1866, to the several States for ratification. Thus it will be seen that Congress for more than a hundred years never attempted to add to the constitutional qualifications of membership in this body, with a single exception, and then it was done by an amendment to the Constitution itself. I contend that this record establishes a precedent for our guidance which we can not mistake.

Section 5 of Article I of the Constitution prescribes, among other things, that "each House may, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member." Here is a safeguard against improper membership in this great body, and lest the right might be abused for partisan or other purposes the Constitution required a two-thirds vote. In passing, permit me to say that the ponderous roll of petitions presented to this House in this case, and which has terrorized so many members, did not call for or contemplate the exclusion of the member from Utah or a denial to him of the oath of office, but uniformly asked for his expulsion after he had been sworn in, and under the clause of the Constitution just referred to. Do not hasten to do violence to the Constitution in these peaceful times, for the people do not now and never have asked you to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not go further into the constitutional questions here involved, for my time will not permit.

I believe the magnificent argument which was presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] yesterday has not been answered from a legal standpoint anywhere on the floor of this House. I believe every other gentleman who is a member of the legal profession has that same conviction, however he may vote upon this question. Other influences may govern him, or perhaps he may think his constituents exact that he shall vote otherwise; but from a purely legal standpoint he can not believe that the requirements of the Constitution may be nullified. For these reasons I deem it my duty to support the minority report.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct some statements made upon the floor of this House as to matters having no place in this discussion. It is unfair and unjust to a great people that they should be permitted to be uttered here and go unchallenged. I refer to some of the charges which have been made against the Mormon people. Now, I know something about this old controversy. The agitation and discussion which this case has occasioned may not be compared to the great contest that was waged in that mountain country twelve or fifteen years ago. I had something to do with that contest. I was there and saw it and in a small and humble way participated in it. Polygamy was then advocated and taught by the Mormon Church throughout the whole of the intermountain country as a religious duty and as a tenet of their faith. The fear was entertained that at some time it might spread into all the Pacific States, as the Mormons had missionaries everywhere advocating and practicing their religion.

The Territory of Idaho passed a law during her Territorial existence which required a test oath, if you please, to be taken by every man who exercised the right of suffrage or the privilege of holding office. That test oath prescribed that before a citizen could vote or hold office he should swear or affirm that he did not belong to an organization which taught, counseled, or advised polygamy, bigamy, or any other crime defined by law. It was a departure in legislation. Nothing of its kind had ever been enacted by any State or Territory in the Union or by the Congress of the United States. The constitutionality of that act was bitterly contested in all the courts of the land. The supreme court of our Territory sustained it. The Supreme Court of the United States, by unanimous opinion, sustained its validity. That great tribunal held that the right of suffrage was not a God-given right, not a vested right, not akin to the question of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, but a privilege that might be restricted or regulated by the legislature at any time it saw fit.

It is needless to say that during that contest the bitterness of a religious controversy divided the people. Political lines were not distinctly drawn, but the controversy was between the Mormons on one side and the anti-Mormons, or gentiles, as they were called, on the other.

I am glad to be able to say, here in my place in the American Congress and as the Representative of all classes of our people, regardless of their religion, that the controversy I have referred to no longer exists; that it is settled and settled right and settled forever. The bone of contention was, of course, the question of polygamy, or plural marriages. The non-Mormons insisted that such a doctrine should never be taught or practiced within the confines of the Territory or State of Idaho; that it was a relic of barbarism and had no place in our day and age, and that the civilization of the world was against it. I am not here to advocate it; on the contrary, I condemn it as much as any member of this House.

I believe that God intended, when he created two sexes in this world, that one man and one woman should live together as husband and wife. I believe that the marital relation as now recognized is the safeguard of our civilization and the crowning blessing of humanity. It constitutes the ideal American home and hearthstone, around which cluster the hopes and aspirations of the Republic. It fosters, creates, and uplifts American manhood and protects and elevates, as nothing else can do, American womanhood in all its loveliness and beauty. It was for this institution that this contest was bitterly waged in my young State and Territory.

On the 25th day of September, 1890, the president of the Mormon Church, Wilford Woodruff, issued a manifesto, by virtue of his authority as the head of that organization, which abolished the doctrine of plural marriages as a tenet of their faith and advised all members to refrain from teaching or practicing it as a religious duty. I confess I had some doubts about the honesty of their intentions at that time. That manifesto was ratified by their annual conference by unanimous vote October 6 following.

Looking backward through the past ten years, knowing those people intimately and well during all that time, and knowing the situation and conditions there as no other member of this House has had an opportunity to know them or can know them, I want to say, appropriating the words of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], upon my responsibility as a member of this House, that the manifesto was issued and has been adhered to by the Mormon people in good faith and with an honest purpose. One who does not understand conditions there can not appreciate the situation which confronted these people. They realized that the world was against them on this issue and that they must abandon it. They had taken plural wives, following the principles of their religion. To these wives children had been born. Must they cast off and abandon their helpless women and children? Must they brand these innocent children with the shame and disgrace of illegitimacy?

Well, whatever others may think about that, the men of the mountains never demanded it and never will. We are willing that the "dead past shall bury its dead." The institution of polygamy is dead and gone, never to be resurrected. Were polygamous marriage to be attempted in my State to-day the whole population, gentile and Mormon alike, would resent it, and he who had the temerity to make the attempt would soon find a felon's cell. There are 30,000 members of the Mormon Church in my district, and I do not believe that a single polygamous marriage has been entered into in that State by those people since the issuance of that manifesto.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Upon what do you base that statement?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I base that statement upon the fact of having lived in that country, that I have come in contact with the people there for sixteen years, that I know hundreds of them personally, that I have been among them, and that I know something about what goes on and what exists there.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then, why was the proclamation of January 8 made?

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I am coming to that, and will have it read in the presence of this House and have it incorporated into my remarks. I may say that the proclamation of January 8 was probably issued to correct a false impression which has been created on the public mind throughout the country by those who had misrepresented the Mormon people in this agitation.

However, I am not the author of it, and can only construe it in the light of its language and the conditions and circumstances which surround its issuance. I believe, like its predecessor, the Woodruff manifesto, that it was issued in good faith, and that the Mormon Church and the Mormon people intend to obey it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with necessary brevity I want to controvert some of the false statements which have been made on the floor of this House during this debate respecting the character of the Mormon Church. This organization, like all other religious organizations, has, doubtless, made mistakes in the past and may continue to make them in the future. Church organizations are but human agencies for the teaching of what their members believe to be religious truths. It will certainly not be charged that from a religious standpoint I am prejudiced in favor of the Mormon Church.

For two centuries of time my ancestors have belonged to the Presbyterian Church. I believe there is as much of good in that organization as in any other in these United States or throughout the world, but I am not here to say that it never has made any mistakes. Why, not very long ago, when the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met, I believe, in this city, they did away with a tenet of their faith, a part of their doctrine, to wit, the doctrine of infant damnation. They were compelled to do it because the civilization of the age required them to do it, and condemned it; for no father ever looked into the face of his child and believed such a doctrine as that. That is the reason why they repealed it. This action is no reflection on that church organization nor on John Calvin, its immortal founder. Times have changed, civilization has changed, and churches have changed. I believe it is to the credit of the Presbyterian Church that it made that change.

The Mormon Church has done likewise. They have abandoned in good faith the doctrine of polygamy. I believe that a vexed question is settled, and settled forever and settled right, in that intermountain country. I believe, sir, that the Mormons are trying to obey the law of the land. I know they have gone into the desert and into the wilderness, and builded there a civilization as good as any district in these United States can boast of. I know that in all church matters they are liberal. They might teach a lesson in this respect to some other church organizations in this country. In my opinion, the best evidence that an individual has any religion at all is illustrated by the fact that he tolerates other religions, and I might add in passing that I believe it is better to have almost any religion than no religion.

Our people are a cosmopolitan people, who welcome all people and all religions, with the single exaction—obedience to and respect for the law. The Christian and the Jew, the Protestant, the Catholic, and the Mormon are all required to pay tribute to the State and obey the law. In my judgment, the patriotism, loyalty, and devotion of all these faiths to the law of the land and the Government of our common country is absolutely beyond question.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say, I have not submitted these desultory remarks with any hope that they would change the vote in this House on this question, but with the hope that the country might learn thereby something about the facts as they exist in that country from one who is in a position to know the truth. [Applause.]

I prefer, Mr. Speaker, to have the manifesto, attention to which was called by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON], read at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROCLAMATION—PRESIDENT SNOW, OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, DEFINES THE STATUS OF THE CHURCH WITH RESPECT TO POLYGAMY.

From the reading of the various editorials and articles of the public press, it is evident that there is much misconstruction and misunderstanding as to the present attitude of our church respecting the subjects of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation, and believing that many good and conscientious people have been misled, and much adverse criticism occasioned thereby, I feel it is just to both "Mormons" and "non-Mormons" to state that, in accordance with the manifesto of the late President Wilford Woodruff, dated September 25, 1890, which was presented to, and unanimously accepted by, our general conference on the 6th of October, 1890, the church has positively abandoned the practice of polygamy, or the solemnization of plural marriages, in this and every other State, and that no member or officer thereof has any authority whatever to perform a plural marriage or enter into such a relation.

Nor does the church advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of any of its members. If, therefore, any member disobeys the law, either as to polygamy or unlawful cohabitation, he must bear his own burden, or, in other words, be answerable to the tribunals of the land for his own action pertaining thereto.

With the sincere desire that the position of our church as to polygamy and unlawful cohabitation may be better understood, and with the best wishes for the welfare and happiness of all, this statement is made, and is respectfully commended to the careful consideration of the public generally.

LORENZO SNOW,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

SALT LAKE CITY, January 8, 1900.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention simply to the fact that that proclamation shows upon its face that the members of the church in the practice of polygamy shall not be subjected to any church discipline or church punishment.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. The reading of the proclamation does not bear out any such statement.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I should like the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] for a moment, as to whether, if the House adjourns now, the time to-morrow is to be equally divided between us?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I was just looking that matter up.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if that be not so, then I desire that the minority continue the discussion this evening until they have exhausted so much of their time as will equal ours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is past the hour for adjournment, and I hope the gentleman will move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is simply waiting while gentlemen are perfecting an arrangement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker. If there is nothing to do, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The understanding between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and myself was that the time would be equally divided to-day and equally divided to-morrow. Now, all the time has not been consumed yet by the gentleman from Maine, and I want to have an equal division of time to-morrow.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. We are not prepared to use any more time in debate this evening. We lose twenty-eight minutes on our side if we stop here. If the majority will concede twenty minutes to us in the morning——

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. We have not half the time we need to-morrow, and we want to get to a vote to-morrow. The understanding was that the time should be equally divided to-day as nearly as possible. There has been no attempt to make an accurate division of it. I think there should be an equal division of the time to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That can be arranged by the Speaker to-morrow in his recognitions.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. To-morrow is the last day of the debate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman will concede us fifteen minutes in the morning, I think we will be satisfied.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Well, I do not want to impose upon the House——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And I will allot that time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of the report of the Auditor for the War Department on the claim of Jesse N. Strickland, late colonel of the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Choctaw orphan fund—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for construction of library building at Fort Monroe, Va.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a concurrent resolution to authorize the printing of reports of the proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels—to the Committee on Printing.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Neah Bay, Washington—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and one from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to an agreement with the Crow Indians of Montana—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 47) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of Gen. Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 115); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6073) to amend section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, granting to the city of Hot Springs, Ark., certain lands as a city park, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 116); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2477) granting an increase of pension to George H. Pennington, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 112); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4698) granting an increase of pension to John C. Fitnam, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 113); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2637) granting a pension to Albert Hammer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 114); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2098) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 117); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6678) granting an increase of pension to Agnes Capron—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6713) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie Duncan Wood—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4635) to quiet the titles of certain lands in the State of Mississippi and for the relief of the estate of Eli Ayres, deceased—Committee on Private Land Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 2469) for the relief of Guernsey County, Ohio—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DE GRAFFENREID: A bill (H. R. 7220) to provide for a public building at Greenville, Tex.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 7221) for the reconstruction of the old frigate Constitution—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7222) to create a Territory of the District of Columbia by the name of the Territory of Columbia and to grant Territorial government to the same—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MESICK: A bill (H. R. 7223) to regulate fares on the street cars in the city of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7224) to place binding twine and all materials used in making or manufacturing the same upon the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 7225) to establish the western judicial district of Illinois—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MUDD (by request): A bill (H. R. 7226) to establish an art commission of the United States—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. PEREA: A bill (H. R. 7227) for relief of certain heads of families in the Territory of New Mexico who were or may be residents of any confirmed Mexican or Spanish grant in the Territory at the time of the confirmation thereof—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 7228) to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 7229) to make disposition of the increment and accretions upon the sums reserved by the Department of State from the fund received by the United States upon the account of the payment of the awards of the late Spanish and American Claims Commission, and to pay and distribute the same—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 7330) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RUPPERT: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 135) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton for the improvement of the Harlem Kills, New York City, by a canal to connect the lower Harlem River with Long Island Sound, 3,400 feet in length, 300 feet in width, and 15 feet in depth at mean low water, or by a similar canal 18 feet in depth at mean low water, in strict conformity with the survey and report made thereon in 1881 by Col. John Newton—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LEVY: A resolution (H. Res. 115) calling upon the Secretary of War for copies of all letters relating to the safety of Long Bridge—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A resolution of the Pennsylvania legislature, asking for legislation looking to an amendment of the Constitution to provide for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 7230) granting a pension to Roxie B. Salter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 7231) for the relief of L. G. Bowers, of Monroe County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7232) for the relief of the estate of Thomas J. Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7233) for the relief of J. S. Murrell, of Monroe County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7234) for the relief of the estate of Robert E. Bonds, deceased, late of Monroe County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7235) for the relief of Henry McGill, of Monroe County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7236) for the relief of the estate of Nancy Whisenant, deceased, late of White County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BREAZEALE: A bill (H. R. 7237) for the relief of Paul Chappin, Rapides Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CORLISS: A bill (H. R. 7238) to correct the military record of Anthony C. Chapoton, alias Anthony Chapaton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COONEY: A bill (H. R. 7239) to remove the charge of desertion from the military service of Lewis Dunham—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7240) for the relief of the legal representatives of John A. Stephens, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7241) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Benjamin F. Follen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7242) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of J. A. Church—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7243) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Silas Nicholson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7244) to provide for the reimbursement of naval officers losing property on the United States steamship Yantic—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 7245) for the relief of Alice Jordan, of Vicksburg, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7246) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Butler, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7247) for the relief of Aquila Bowie, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7248) for the relief of Elijah Vandiver, of Leflore County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7249) for the relief of Alfred Smith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7250) for the relief of the estate of D. B. Downing, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7251) for the relief of the estate of Madison Stephenson, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7252) for the relief of Bettie Stafford, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7253) for the relief of the estate of B. S. Hallum, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7254) for the relief of the estate of W. S. Hyland, deceased, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of the estate of Edward B. Willis, deceased, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7256) for the relief of James Murphy—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7257) for the relief of Hixey Parker—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7258) for the relief of John Noble, of Bolivar County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CROWLEY: A bill (H. R. 7259) to increase pension of William H. De Bord—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7260) for relief of Jacob Higgins—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7261) to correct record of William H. Hawley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 7262) granting a pension to Anthony Slack—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7263) granting a pension to Mary J. Waugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 7264) granting pension to Hannah C. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 7265) for the relief of J. B. Hall, deceased, of Hinds County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOY: A bill (H. R. 7266) for the relief of Martha A. Murphy—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JACK: A bill (H. R. 7267) granting a pension to Annie E. Hetherington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7268) granting a pension to Christina Holben—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7269) granting a pension to Mary E. Boyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 7270) for the relief of the estate of Franklin A. Davis, late of Orange County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 7271) granting a pension to Anna H. White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7272) for the relief of Jessie Benton Frémont and other former occupants of the present military reservation at Point San Jose, in the city of San Francisco, and to repeal an act entitled "An act to refer the claim of Jessie Benton Frémont to certain lands and the improvements thereon in San Francisco, Cal., to the Court of Claims," approved February 10, 1893—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 7273) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Sarah M. Dunbar, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 7274) for the relief of David C. Stewart, of Seman, Ohio—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7275) for the relief of Ammon McLaughlin, of Sciotoville, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MADDOX: A bill (H. R. 7276) for the relief of C. M. Hall, of Walker County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7277) for the relief of J. S. McLain, of Whitfield County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7278) for the relief of James B. Bone, of Chulio, Floyd County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7279) for the relief of William B. Quinn, of Whitfield County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 7280) to correct the military record of Robert Burton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 7281) for the relief of John E. Lewis, of Crockett County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7282) for the relief of J. M. Sanders, of Gibson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7283) for the relief of Joseph B. Somerville—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7284) for the relief of A. L. Dunlap, of Gibson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7285) for relief of Jesse L. Brandt, of Gibson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7286) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Brooks, deceased, late of Gibson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 7287) for the relief of Thomas Bramble—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 7288) for the relief of E. A. Givens, sr., Arcadia, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7289) for the relief of Mrs. Aurora M. Falconer, of Pointe Coupee Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7290) for the relief of estate of Stephen Roberts, deceased, late of East Baton Rouge, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7291) for the relief of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, late of West Feliciana Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7292) for the relief of the estate of Adelon Vignes, of Pointe Coupee Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7293) for the relief of Hyacinthe A. Morgan, of Pointe Coupee Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7294) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Baum, Baton Rouge, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7295) for the relief of Emily C. McIntyre, of Livingston Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 7296) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Norton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL: A bill (H. R. 7297) for the relief of the heirs of Robert M. Browning, deceased, late of Claiborne Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7298) for the relief of the estate of J. S. Douglass, deceased, late of Tensas Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7299) for the relief of Emma C. Lovelace and Stephen D. Clark—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7300) for the relief of Joseph Cordill—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEWART of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 7301) to remove the charge of desertion now existing on the records of the War Department against John McKeon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STOKES: A bill (H. R. 7302) for the relief of Agnes E. Craig—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 7303) granting an increase of pension to Alfred E. Houghton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7304) granting an increase of pension to Lavina M. Payne—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON: A bill (H. R. 7305) for relief of T. J. Coleman—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: A bill (H. R. 7306) granting a pension to Mary Isabel White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 7307) granting a pension to John W. Parmalee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7308) granting an increase of pension to Harry M. de Hart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7309) for the relief of John Wilkes Moore—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEEKS: A bill (H. R. 7310) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Joseph Tate, alias William Tate, late of the Sixth Michigan Infantry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATERS: A bill (H. R. 7311) to increase the pension of Enos B. Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7312) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Sullivan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7313) to remove charge of desertion from the military record of Charles Williams—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7314) to increase the pension of G. K. Glenn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7315) to increase the pension of William W. King—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7316) for the relief of Peter S. Burke—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7317) granting a pension to Mary E. Dean—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7318) granting a pension to George Herrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7319) granting a pension to William A. P. Fellows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 7320) to remove charge of desertion against William McCutcheon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COWHERD: A bill (H. R. 7321) for the relief of Armilda J. Luttrell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: A bill (H. R. 7322) granting an increase of pension to Frederick E. Vance, of Clay Center, Kans., late of Company A, First Minnesota Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7323) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Canfield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'GRADY: A bill (H. R. 7324) granting a pension to Mary Ragan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL: A bill (H. R. 7325) for the relief of the estate of Felix Robb, deceased, late of Catahoula Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 7326) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph M. Jackson, alias Mennell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 7327) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Paine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7328) granting an increase of pension to John Nicklin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7329) to increase the pension of Lewis Swenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of the Chicago Federation of Labor, Walter Carmody, secretary, relating to public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of George S. Woodruff, of Independence, Pa., favoring amendment of the revenue law in regard to affixing stamps on insurance policies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: Resolution of the Horse Breeders' Association, favoring the Brosius bill relating to dairy and food products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the Missouri State Grange, for the enactment of anti-trust laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COWHERD: Paper to accompany House bill No. 5551, for the relief of F. B. Case—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROWLEY: Papers in support of House bill 5567, for the relief of Riley Shrigley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill 5568, granting a pension to Howard Franklin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 4195, for the relief of Harrison Kilburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 4190, for the relief of Elizabeth A. Swan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill to increase the pension of William H. Debord—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAHLE of Wisconsin: Petition of railway postal clerks of the Second Congressional district of Wisconsin, favoring a bill providing for the reclassification of the Railway Mail Service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GASTON: Petition of O. A. B. Tracy, of Nantucket, Mass., and numerous others residing in other States, urging the abolishment of capital punishment in the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMILTON: Petition of Oliver Wise and soldiers and sailors of Allegan County, Mich., in regard to amendment to the civil-service law—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HILL (by request): Petition of the Connecticut Woman Suffrage Association, favoring a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibiting disfranchisement of women—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: Petition of employees of the Westfield, Mass., post-office, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Woman Suffrage Association of Massachusetts, favoring a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution granting suffrage to women—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LITTLE: Protest of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations against the ratification of the treaty of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, of Oklahoma, with the United States—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LOVERING: Protest of S. O. Bigmy, chairman of the Jewelry Tariff Committee of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, against the French reciprocity treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MERCER: Memorial of the South Orange Live Stock Exchange with reference to a change in the present revenue laws—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of Ruth B. Ferguson and 190 citizens of Portsmouth, Ohio, for the rejection or expulsion of B. H.

Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

Also, petition of J. N. Rainey and several hundred others, favoring an amendment to the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OTJEN: Resolutions of E. B. Wolcott Post, No. 1, of Milwaukee, Wis., against the removal of disabilities of all deserters in the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEARCE of Missouri: Petition of the mayor, aldermen, and over 900 citizens of Frederick City, asking for the passage of a bill reimbursing Frederick City of $200,000 required of said city by General Early in the civil war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGH: Papers to accompany House bill No. 7004 for the relief of Penelope Morton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: Petitions of numerous citizens of the State of Michigan, against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

Also, petition of the Woman Suffrage Association of Michigan for a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the disfranchisement of citizens on account of sex—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPRAGUE: Petition of the railway postal clerks of the Eleventh Congressional district of Massachusetts, for the reclassification of the Railway Mail Service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of the New York State Brewers and Maltsters' Association, protesting against exhorbitant war taxes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Charles S. Paine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Lewis Swenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of the Winona County Medical Society, protesting against the passage of Senate bill No. 34, for the prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of Christian Endeavorers of Rochester and Chester, Minn.; voters of the First Congressional district of Minnesota; Winona Presbytery; missionary societies of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Reform churches, and general missionary committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, all in the State of Minnesota, against the seating of B. H. Roberts, of Utah—to the Special Committee on the B. H. Roberts Case.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama: Resolutions of Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Stonington, Conn., expressing sympathy with the Boers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Papers to accompany House bill No. 7021, in relation to the cob dock opposite the navy-yard, in the East River—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ZIEGLER: Petition of J. A. Smith, agent, Lemoyne, Pa., relating to the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Petitions, etc., for "relief from the paper trust" were laid on the Clerk's desk and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky: Petition of the publisher of the Gleaner, Henderson, Ky.

By Mr. BELL: Petitions of the publishers of the Times, Woodland Park, Colo.; the Morning Sun, Rico, Colo.; the Republic, Buenavista, Colo.

By Mr. BURKE of Texas: Petition of James A. Greer, publisher, of Hubbard City, Tex.

By Mr. CROWLEY: Petitions of the publishers of the Greenup Press, Charleston News, Mattoon Commercial, and Toledo Democrat, in the State of Illinois.

By Mr. GORDON: Petitions of the publishers of the News and Democrat, Sidney; Standard, Celina, and the Democrat, Greenville, all in the State of Ohio.

By Mr. JETT: Petitions of the publishers of the Litchfield Herald, Sullivan Progress, Kankakee Democrat, in the State of Illinois.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of W. W. Lastinger, publisher, of Gatesville, Tex.

By Mr. LATIMER: Petition of the publisher of the Sentinel, Pickens, S. C.

By Mr. MEEKISON: Petition of G. W. Clinton, of the Leipsic Press and Signal, Independence, Ohio.

By Mr. QUARLES: Petition of the publisher of the Spectator, Staunton, Va.

By Mr. RIXEY: Petition of the publisher of the Exponent, Culpeper, Va.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: Petitions of the publishers of the Fremont Herald; the Advertiser, of West Point; the Democrat, of Creto; Teller-Democrat, of York, and the Sun, of Aurora, all in the State of Nebraska.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: Petitions of the publishers of the Lebanon (Mo.) Rustic; Redding Searchlight, Los Angeles Herald, Woodland Democrat, Visalia News, San Francisco Democrat, Santa Barbara Independent, San Bernardino Free Press, all in the State of California; Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va.; Western News-Democrat, Valentine, Nebr.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Petitions of the publishers of the Democrat, Greenup, Ky., and Democrat and Independent, Catlettsburg, Ky.

By Mr. STOKES: Petition of James L. Sims, editor, of Orangeburg, S. C.

By Mr. SULZER: Petitions of the publishers of the Times, Cobleskill; News, Albion; Republic, Brockport; Freie Presse, Brooklyn; Star, Nyack; Republican, Glens Falls; News, Mount Vernon; Gazette, Middleburg; Republican, Albion, and Free Lance, Albion, all in the State of New York.

By Mr. THAYER: Petitions of the publishers of the Progress, Lawrence; News, South Boston; L'Etoile, Lowell; The Sun, Spencer; Journal, Southbridge; The Record, Chelsea, and the Free Press, Holyoke, all in the State of Massachusetts.

By Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS: Petitions of the publishers of the Earlville Gazette-Express, Rockford Poster, Minonk Register, Galesburg Republican-Register, Kendall County News, Antioch News, Piatt County Republican, Fairfield Record, all in the State of Illinois.

By Mr. WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS: Petitions of the publishers of the Henry Times, Beardstown Star, Jersey County Democrat, Winchester Times, all in the State of Illinois.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 25, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HANSBROUGH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, without objection.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVE OF THE TRANSVAAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of January 19, 1900, requesting the President "to inform the Senate, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, if any person has been accredited representative in any capacity to the United States of America by the South African Republic, commonly known as the Transvaal, and if such person was officially accepted and recognized as such representative by the Government of the United States, and if he was not, for what reason official acceptance and recognition was refused him; also to inform the Senate of the name of such person, and when he applied for official recognition, and when and for what reason official recognition was refused him, and if any other government, and if so, what government, or its official representative or representatives, objected or protested against the official recognition of said South African or Transvaal Republic by the Government of the United States," I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 24, 1900.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the message be printed, with the accompanying papers, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Sixteenth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 25, 1900.

FRACTIONAL SILVER COINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, certain information relative to fractional silver coinage for 1899; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

ISLAND SURVEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 9th instant, a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey relative to the geological surveys of islands now under the jurisdiction of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT FORT DU PONT, DEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army explaining the importance of having the provisions of section 355, Revised Statutes, waived so far as they prohibit the expenditure of public money for the purposes of erecting public buildings on a tract of land recently acquired as a site for necessary buildings at Fort Du Pont, Del., before the consent of the legislature of Delaware to the purchase has been given; which, on motion of Mr. HALE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURE OF WAR APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a statement prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Navy showing the allotments to the Navy Department from the $50,000,000 appropriated by Congress under the act approved March 9, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes," etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TEXT-BOOKS IN INDIAN SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the text-books used for instruction in the Indian schools under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5076) to amend the first section of an act to change the time and places for the district and circuit courts of the northern district of Texas, approved June 11, 1896; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. HALE. I submit certain testimony taken by the Committee on Naval Affairs relating to a Pacific cable. I ask that it be printed, perhaps one hundred copies, for the use of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. One hundred copies will be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the board of aldermen of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the deepening and widening of the entrance of the Buffalo River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Tonawanda, N. Y., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented sundry petitions of railway mail clerks of Mamaroneck and New York City, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Van Chemical Company of Albany, of J. Milhaus's Son, of New York City, and of sundry druggists of Tompkins County, all in the State of New York, praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of the Medical Society of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., and a petition of the Geographical Society of the Pacific, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the passage of the clause in the deficiency appropriation bill to prevent a discontinuance of the hydrographic work of the Geological Survey; which were referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., remonstrating against any change being made in the present tariff law that will discriminate against the industries of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., praying for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the adulteration of food products; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of adulterated food or drinks, or the sale of such products under false or misleading labels; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for certain changes in the Weather Bureau Service; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANNA. I present a petition of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, praying for the immediate passage of the bill to increase American shipping. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Introduced by Mr. Van Kevren.]

Whereas in the carriage of American imports and exports, several thousand ocean-going ships are annually employed, but 9 per cent of which vessels are built in the United States and owned by American citizens; and

Whereas the monopoly of our foreign carrying trade now enjoyed by alien ships, to which our people annually pay $200,000,000 in charges for ocean transportation, deprives thousands of American shipmasters and many additional thousands of American officers and seamen of employment; and

Whereas the lack of an American merchant marine in the foreign carrying trade carries with it a lack of American officers and seamen, thus perpetuating our national weakness upon the seas, while our commerce, in affording employment to foreign ships, foreign officers, and seamen, increases the naval, maritime, and commercial strength of our foreign rivals; and

Whereas a bill is now pending in each branch of Congress, introduced in the Senate by Senator FRYE and in the House by Representative PAYNE, providing for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine in the foreign carrying trade: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Asssociation of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, in annual convention assembled, earnestly urges upon Congress the immediate passage of the said pending shipping bill, to the end that American shipmasters, American officers, and American seamen may secure additional opportunities for employment upon the sea, so that the $200,000,000 now paid annually to foreign ships may be paid to American ships and thus kept at home, and in order that the United States may enjoy the prestige and protection that inheres in the possession of an American-built, American-owned, and American-manned merchant marine adequate to all of the needs of American foreign commerce.

Passed unanimously.

A. S. FITTS, Grand Captain.

Attest:

BENJ. F. PERKINS, G. C. C.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Federation of Labor of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent any of the public lands from being ceded to the States or Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Littlefield Drug Company and sundry other druggists of Manchester, N. H., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DEPEW. I present a memorial of the National Board of Trade relative to the needs of the country for a revival of its merchant marine. I will state that the board is now in session in Washington. It represents the principal chambers of commerce and boards of trade in the United States. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, with the names, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the United States vessels in 1826 carried 92 per cent of the nation's imports and exports, 81 per cent in 1845, 75 per cent in 1856, and only 8 per cent in 1899, showing a lamentable decline in our merchant marine in the foreign trade, owing to the fact that it is conducted on a free-trade basis; and

Whereas the tonnage of vessels of the coasting trade, in which foreign competition is absolutely forbidden, increased from 722,330 in 1826 to 1,223,218 in 1845 and to 2,247,663 in 1856 and to 3,965,313 in 1899, thus demonstrating the ability of this country to meet all of its needs in the matter of shipping when properly protected; and

Whereas the United States is now paying to foreign shipowners nearly $200,000,000 annually to do our ocean carrying trade, which sum increases yearly; and

Whereas the enormous decline in our ocean merchant marine is due to the lower wages paid abroad and to the subsidies paid by foreign governments, Great Britain alone, according to document "No. 490, Miscellaneous Series," issued by the British Government in 1899, paying last year $3,206,380 in "postal subsidies" and $283,005 additional to the same steamship lines in "naval subventions," while for mere wages alone the cost of operating an American ship is almost exactly one and a half times the cost of operating a similar British ship, and the same difference in wages gives greater advantages to foreigners in every way, including lower cost in the construction of ships; and

Whereas the protective principle should be extended to our shipping in the foreign trade, that it may be built up as has been done in the case of other industries, including our coastwise shipping; and

Whereas the profitable employment of the surplus productive power of the farms, factories, mines, forests, and fisheries of the United States imperatively demands the increase of its foreign commerce; and

Whereas the merchant vessels, officers, engineers, machinists, electricians, and seamen necessary to the increase of the commerce of the United States are also essential as auxiliary to the forces of the United States in time of war and otherwise, and to the better security of the nation and the protection of its possessions; and

Whereas it is deemed especially expedient to make immediate provision to these ends: Therefore

This memorial of the National Board of Trade, assembled in Washington, January 23, 1900, respectfully represents to the honorable House of Representatives and Senate of the United States, that the delegates now here, representing all sections of our country, find it to be a matter of supreme interest that our foreign exports have now reached the largest figures ever known and offer further opportunities for increase in still wider fields.

To give force and emphasis to these opportunities, and to give some permanence to the exceptional advantages of the past year, this country needs a revival of its merchant marine.

Your memorialists, the National Board of Trade, respectfully represent that the Frye Senate bill or the Payne House bill will be effective to this end. The principles embodied in these bills have met the approval of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Commissioner of Navigation, and they have been indorsed by nearly every trade and commercial organization in the country and by the press to an extent which shows an overwhelming sentiment in their favor.

The argument for an American merchant marine has had the further distinct recommendation of foreign delegates to the recent export convention as essential for the further cementing of trade relations with the countries they severally represented.

In view of these considerations, your memorialists, the National Board of Trade, look with confidence for your early and favorable action on this subject.

Andrew Wheeler, chairman, Philadelphia; M. C. Blain, New York; James Nicol, Chicago; E. P. Wilson, Ohio Valley Improvement Association; H. Lee Early, Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce; Venison B. Smith, Toledo; Frank Barry, Milwaukee, Wis.; John Field, Philadelphia; G. Waldo Smith, New York Board of Trade and Transportation.

Adopted by the National Board of Trade, Washington, D. C., January 24, 1900.

E. O. STANARD, Vice-President.

Attest:

O. P. TUCKER, Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition of the Millers' State Association of Illinois, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1439) to amend the act to regulate commerce. That bill is now before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I move that the petition be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS presented the petition of Virginia C. Clopton, president, and Amelia C. Dillard, secretary, on behalf of the Woman Suffrage League of Alabama, praying that the word "male" be omitted in the suffrage clause to be framed for the government of Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I present the petition of Isabella Beecher Hooker, president, and Frances Ellen Burr, secretary, on behalf of the Connecticut Woman Suffrage Association, praying that in any new government to be established in our possessions women may have the right to vote. There is a letter from Miss Susan B. Anthony accompanying it. I do not know to what committee the petition ought to be referred, whether to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico or to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage. I think, perhaps, it should go to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Similar petitions have been referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be so referred.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I also present a protest of the delegate from the Choctaw Nation and by the counsel of the Chickasaw Nation, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1352 and House bill 905. I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of ex-soldiers of the United States of the civil war, held at Bloomington, Ind., in favor of the enactment of legislation providing that when ex-soldiers of the United States are ordered for examination before any medical board for the purpose of receiving a pension or of being granted an increase of pension the findings of the board shall be final, and the Commissioner of Pensions shall be directed to certify to such ratings or prove by a medical board nearest to the applicant's residence that such findings were contrary to facts; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry railway mail clerks of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Business Mens' Association of Norfolk, Va., praying that an appropriation be made to continue the plan, work, and beneficial results accomplished by the Philadelphia Commercial Museum; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Business Mens' Association of Norfolk, Va., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation changing the present pilot system; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of A. H. Witham and sundry other citizens of Denmark, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish all customs tariff for the island of Puerto Rico; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2681) for the establishment of joint light-houses and fog-signal stations on the coast of Alaska; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 307) for the establishment of joint light-houses and fog-signal stations on the coast of the district of Alaska, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1289) to provide for the construction of an additional light-ship for use on the coast of California, Oregon, Washington, or Alaska, as exigencies may determine, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 983) for the relief of Lindley C. Kent and Joseph Jenkins, as the sureties of Frank A. Webb, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 340) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CARTER (for Mr. GEAR), from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 165) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 945) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE (Mr. KEAN in the chair), from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2708) to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2612) to remove the charge of desertion against Frederick Schulte or Schuldt, to ask to be excused from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The bill refers to a seaman in the Navy.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7) to fix the rank of military attachés, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I present in behalf of the National Academy of Sciences its annual report provided for by statute. The statute also provides for its printing. There is nothing to be done except to present it to the presiding officer and send it to the Public Printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and ordered printed, without objection.

OLMEDO ALFARO.

Mr. HAWLEY. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. R. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, of Ecuador, and I ask for its present consideration. It is the joint resolution to which I referred the other day, and which I withdrew because of objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4602) to authorize the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Reno and Fort Sill military reservations, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: A bill has just been reported by the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, granting a right of way to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway through the Fort Sill Military Reservation. I understand that the road is completed to the line of the military reservation, and it is exceedingly important that this authority should be given. It is recommended by the Secretary of War, is a very short bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, it being a House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What is the Calendar number of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill was just reported this morning by the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a House bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been reported from the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CŒUR D'ALENE MINING TROUBLES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to the resolution which he introduced December 11, 1899, requiring information in regard to the authority of General Merriam, etc. I have been instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report a substitute and recommend the passage of the substitute. The substitute will now be read. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution reported as a substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to make and submit to the Senate copies of any and all orders, instructions, or directions given by the War Department to Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, United States Army, touching the troubles in Idaho between the miners, mine owners, and civil authorities, and to any officer or officers under him; and also any and all orders, instructions, or directions, or proclamations given, issued, or proclaimed by General Merriam and any and all officers under him, and especially the announcement, if any announcement was made, by General Merriam, about May 8, 1899, to the mine owners in regard to employing members of the miners' union and the action if they were employed, and any and all orders, directions, and instructions, if any, in regard to the miners who were employed being, by United States authorities, required to sign any pledges renouncing allegiance to the miners' union and asserting they would never seek membership in the miners' union; and any and all orders, instructions, and requirements by General Merriam and his subordinate officers, if any, in regard to the treatment of civilian prisoners, and by what authority Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam acted, and copies of all reports made by him and subordinate officers in connection with the Cœur d'Alene mining troubles during the year 1899.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. If it will not give rise to any extended debate, I do not object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to it in its present form.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to hear the first part of the resolution read again.

The Secretary read as requested.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The resolution is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection to its consideration?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2682) for the extension of Columbia road east of Thirteenth street, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2683) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter for use in St. Marys River, Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 2684) for the relief of Benjamin F. Shaw; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT of New York (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2685) for the relief of Daniel Joseph Holland; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2686) to reward officers of the Army for distinguished services; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McLAURIN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2687) to define and carry into effect the eight-hour labor laws, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2688) for the relief of Robert Adger and others; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2689) granting a pension to Agnes B. Hoffman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2690) for the relief of Alfred W. Kent; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2691) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Lindsay Ridgway, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 2692) to incorporate the National Association of Manufacturers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 2693) to repeal the stamp tax; which was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2694) to extend to the commissioners of agriculture of the several States the franking privilege; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2695) for the classification of clerks in the first-class and second-class post-offices of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 2696) granting a pension to William Sheppard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2697) for the relief of William Wolfe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2698) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Park; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the decision of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior on certificate No. 248311, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2699) to provide for the employment of women nurses in military hospitals of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 2700) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Neff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 2701) providing for the appointment of a reporter and for the publication and distribution of the decisions of the United States circuit courts of appeals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2702) granting an increase of pension to Leander J. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2703) granting a pension to Mary M. F. Flagler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL' introduced a bill (S. 2704) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Bridgeton, in the State of New Jersey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Marcena Pinchin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2706) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Andrew P. (also borne Andrew J.) Jenkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2707) granting an increase of pension to Prosper L. Knappen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 2709) granting a pension to Marietta Elizabeth Stanton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 24th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 52) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the President had on the 25th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1484) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to change the material to be used in the construction of the dry docks at the navy-yards at League Island, Pa., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to concrete and stone.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5076) to amend the first section of an act to change the time and places for district and circuit courts of the northern district of Texas, approved June 11, 1896, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COLLECTION OF REVENUE IN DEPENDENCIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate full and exact copies of all proclamations and orders that have been issued or made respecting the collection of customs, internal, and other revenues in the islands of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Archipelago since the seizure thereof by the Government of the United States, the rate of such customs, internal, and other revenues, the total amount thereof, a list of the person or persons engaged in such service, where stationed, respectively, and how such customs, internal, and other revenues have been and are being disbursed, and whether the same or any portion thereof have been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

And the Secretary of War is further hereby directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence relating to the collection of the customs, internal, and other revenues in said islands since the seizure thereof by the Government of the United States to this time.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not consent to strike out the last clause in his resolution, which is as follows:

And the Secretary of War is further hereby directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence relating to the collection of the customs, internal, and other revenues in said islands since the seizure thereof by the Government of the United States to this time.

I think the first portion of the resolution covers all the information the Senator desires to obtain, and that the answer to it will be perfectly satisfactory to him.

The reason why I ask the Senator to amend his resolution by leaving out the last clause is that it evidently relates to a very large mass of correspondence, from day to day, with reference to the daily transactions, or weekly transactions, respecting the revenues there, the amount that has been received daily, and all that; and it would be a very great hardship upon the War Office to have to make copies of all those papers; and when received, I imagine that they would not aid in the object which the Senator desires to accomplish. I trust he will strike that paragraph out, and thus relieve the War Department from the immense labor of transcribing all the letters which are received in the daily course of business from Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the first part of the resolution calls for copies of all proclamations and orders that have been issued respecting the collection of customs, internal, and other revenues in the islands of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Archipelago. The second clause, to which the Senator from Connecticut calls my attention, was designed simply to reach that correspondence which might be of a general nature and therefore interesting to the Senate in construing the orders or proclamations and giving general directions to customs officers.

I do not care anything about the daily and perfunctory correspondence between the War Office and those engaged in the collection of revenues in those islands, but if there are any letters that have passed between the Secretary of War or his assistants of a general nature explanatory of the system in vogue in those islands and necessary for our proper understanding of what is going on there, I should like to have them.

I do not think I shall object to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, although it is due that I should say that this latter clause was inserted because of a suspicion I have, whether well founded or illy founded, that there is usually an attempt to avoid information rather than to furnish it, and it was done with a view of bringing that out. However, I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, and let the last paragraph of the resolution be stricken out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will state that my only object is to relieve the War Department of unnecessary labor; and, if when the answer is made to the resolution, the Senator should think that there was anything further that he desires, I would not object to a resolution which he might offer for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall accept the amendment with that view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nebraska to consent to the amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified as indicated. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SEIZURE OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Whereas food products are not in their nature instruments of warfare; and

Whereas the United States is the greatest producer of such products in the world, and it is therefore essential to our prosperity that these products be freely sold and delivered wherever purchased; and

Whereas to permit such products to be declared contraband of war and subject to seizure by foreign nations at war among themselves would work irreparable injury to the great body of our agricultural population: Therefore,

Resolved, That the United States of America will not recognize the right of any nation to declare food products contraband of war or to seize such products belonging to citizens of the United States or being transported in vessels owned by citizens of the United States, and that any such seizure will be deemed by this Government an act unfriendly to the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. As the Senator who introduced that resolution is not at this moment in his seat, I suggest that it stand over for the present.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Dakota is not in his seat, and I think the resolution had better lie on the table until he comes in.

Mr. HALE. That motion ought not to be made in his absence. Let the matter stand over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Holding its place on the table?

Mr. HALE. Holding its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I introduced yesterday may retain its place until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been already granted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Thank you.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. If the morning business is completed, I ask that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill be laid before the Senate. It is very important that it should be passed to-day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6237) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached in order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

Office of the Treasurer of the United States: For the following from February 1 to June 30, 1900, inclusive, namely: Three clerks, at the rate of $900 per annum each; and 3 expert counters, at the rate of $720 per annum each; in all, $2,025.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

Contingent expenses: For purchasing material for binding important records, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 20, to insert:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

That the sum of $100,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service for the fiscal year 1898 is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure for said service during the fiscal year 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 3, to insert:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Post-office and custom-house, Kansas City, Mo.: For painting and installation of passenger elevators, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 7, to insert:

Public building at Helena, Mont.: That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to complete the purchase of block 402, Helena town site, Helena, Mont., as a site for the public building at said place at a cost not to exceed $19,500, and to pay for the same out of money heretofore appropriated for the continuation of said public building under the present limit of aggregate cost.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 12, line 10, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

For surveyor's office: For such employees as may be required in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 13, to insert:

Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum: That the appropriation for salaries for the Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum for the current fiscal year shall be available for the payment of an assistant clerk, a pharmacist, an assistant pharmacist, and a steward at said institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 18, to insert:

Providence Hospital: For the completion of the isolating building at the Providence Hospital, including the necessary grading and paving of the approaches thereto, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 23, to insert:

Militia of the District of Columbia: That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for rifle practice and matches for the fiscal year 1899, amounting to $780.61 is hereby reappropriated and made available for the service of the fiscal year 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 3, to insert:

One-half of the foregoing amounts under the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of said District and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 15, after line 19, to strike out:

National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Marion Branch, at Marion, Ind.: For gas mains to leased land, wrought-iron pipe, gate valves, fittings, line separators, digging trenches, laying pipe, and back filling, and right of way through farms, $9,117.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 16, to insert:

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Southern Branch, at Hampton, Va.: For transportation, namely: For transportation of members of the Home, fiscal year 1899, $575.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 5, to insert:

Pacific Branch, at Santa Monica, Cal.: For household, namely: Expenditures for furniture for officers' quarters; for bedsteads, bedding, bedding material, and all other articles required in the quarters of the members, and for their repair, if they are not repaired by the Home; for fuel, including fuel for cooking, heat, and light; for engineers and firemen, bath-house keepers, hall cleaners, laundrymen, gas and soap makers, and privy watchmen, and for all labor, materials, and appliances required for household use, and for their repair, unless the repairs are made by the Home, fiscal year 1899, $1,634.36.

For hospital, namely: Pay of assistant surgeons, matrons, druggists, hospital clerks and stewards, ward masters, nurses, cooks, waiters, readers, hospital carriage drivers, hearse drivers, gravediggers, funeral escort, and for such other services as may be necessary for the care of the sick; for surgical instruments and appliances, medical books, medicines, liquors, fruits, and other necessaries for the sick not on the regular ration; for bedsteads, bedding, and bedding materials, and all other articles necessary for the wards; for hospital, kitchen, and dining room furniture and appliances, including aprons, caps, and jackets for hospital, kitchen, and dining-room employees; for carriage, hearse, stretchers, coffins; for tools of gravediggers, and for all repairs to hospital furniture and appliances not done by the Home, fiscal year 1899, $473.26.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has the bill in charge whether the committee understand, as the bill says, that hearse drivers, gravediggers, and funeral escorts are "necessary for the care of the sick?" That is the way the bill reads, if I heard it correctly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Maine will allow me to answer the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say that these come under the general heading of the hospital department; and while the deficiency has not occurred in those items to which the Senator has referred, it was thought best to put them under the general head of the items which are appropriated for in that one department.

Mr. HOAR. I should hardly want to enact by law that gravediggers are necessary for the care of the sick. If, however, the committee prefer it in that way, I shall not interpose an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, after line 9, to insert:

Marion Branch, at Marion, Ind.: For household, including the same objects specified under this head for the Pacific Branch, $474.60.

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Pacific Branch, fiscal year 1899, $465.44.

For gas mains to leased land, wrought-iron pipe, gate valves, fittings, line separators, digging trenches, laying pipe, and back filling, and right of way through farms, $9,117.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 21, to insert:

Clothing: For clothing for all the Branches, namely: Expenditures for clothing, underclothing, hats, caps, boots, shoes, socks, and overalls; also all sums expended for labor, materials, machines, tools, and appliances employed and for use in the tailor shops, knitting shops, and shoe shops, or other Home shops in which any kind of clothing is made or repaired, fiscal year 1899, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 4, to insert:

State or Territorial Homes: For continuing aid to State or Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, on account of fiscal years as follows:

For the fiscal year 1898, $4,978.07.

For the fiscal year 1899, $113,731.06: Provided, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Military Establishment," on page 27, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That from the foregoing amount, if in the judgment of the Secretary of War the emergency exists, the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as in his discretion may be necessary, shall be used for the purchase of a site or sites for the location of barracks for the accommodation of a garrison in charge of fortifications.

So as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores; for offices, recruiting stations, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations; for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts: Provided, That no part of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel; and for quarters to officers or enlisted men, $1,000,000: Provided further, That from the foregoing amount, if in the judgment of the Secretary of War the emergency exists, the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as in his discretion may be necessary, shall be used for the purchase of a site or sites for the location of barracks for the accommodation of a garrison in charge of fortifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Naval establishment," on page 31, after line 15, to insert:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

For the payment to the following-named officers of the United States Navy, their heirs or legal representatives, the amounts hereinafter stated, for expenses of subsistence at Key West, or Havana, or both, between February 15, 1898, and May 1, 1898, checked, or directed to be checked, against their accounts: Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee, $137.33; Commander Richard Wainwright, $9; Lieut. Commander George F. W. Holman, $92.63; Lieut. John Hood, $101.33; Lieut. Carl W. Jungen, $95; Lieut. Frederic C. Bowers, $101.33; Lieut. George P. Blow, $95.33; Lieut. Wilfrid V. Powelson, $25.93; Lieut. John R. Morris, $101.33; Ensign Frank H. Brumby, $66.67; Ensign Jonas H. Holden, $140.76; Ensign Wat T. Cluverius, $140.76; Ensign Pope Washington, $84; Ensign Arthur Crenshaw, $84; Ensign Amon Bronson, $101.33; Ensign David F. Boyd, $98.33; Surg. Lucien G. Heneberger, $142; Paymaster Charles M. Ray, $142; Chaplain John P. Chidwick, $140.76; Capt. Albertus W. Catlin, United States Marine Corps, $84; Boatswain Francis E. Larkin, $84; Gunner Charles Morgan, $85.20; Gunner Joseph Hill, $107.33; Carpenter George Helms, $109.04; Pay Clerk Brent McCarthy, $92.33; Pay Inspector Arthur Burtis, $84 (paid on account of Lieut. John J. Blandin, deceased); the heirs or legal representatives of the late Charles P. Howell, commander, United States Navy, $140.76; in all, $2,656.48.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 7, to insert:

That the provision in the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, authorizing payment to the officers and enlisted men comprising the temporary force of the Navy during the war with Spain who served creditably beyond the limits of the United States of two months' extra pay, and to those who so served within the limits of the United States of one month's extra pay, is hereby amended so as to authorize the payment to the heirs or legal representatives of the officers and enlisted men entitled to the benefits of said provision who died, or may hereafter die, of the extra pay therein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 21, to insert:

NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Observation of total eclipse of the sun in May, 1900: For preparation and outfit of instruments and their transportation, the purchase of additional apparatus and materials, including photographic material, the erection of suitable buildings at each station, and generally the expenses of preparation and observation, including the living expenses of parties at the several stations, and the available instruments used in observing the transit of Venus in 1874 and 1882 may be also utilized, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," on page 38, after line 11, to insert:

To pay the Atlantic Building Company for rent of the seventh and eighth floors and four rooms on sixth floor of building used and occupied by the Indian Office, for the months of October and November, 1899, at $500 per month, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 16, to insert:

To pay the cost of repair of certain rooms in the Atlantic Building, Washington, D. C., used and occupied by the Indian Office and damaged beyond the condition of ordinary wear and tear as determined by a board appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to assess damages, $214.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 22, to insert:

For stationery for the Department of the Interior and its several bureaus and offices, including the Civil Service Commission and the Geological Survey, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Geological Survey," on page 42, line 15, to increase the appropriation for continuation of the investigation of the coal and gold resources of Alaska from $25,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Indian Affairs," on page 43, after line 17, to insert:

For the prevention and stamping out of smallpox among the whites in the Indian Territory, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 22, after the word "and," to strike out "ninety-nine" and insert "ninety-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

To complete the work of the commission appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under section 9 of the Indian act approved June 7, 1897, to meet certain expenses under the agreement with the Chippewa and Christian Indians, reimbursable, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Interior Department," on page 44, line 14, after the word "To," to strike out "reimburse" and insert "pay to the widow of the late;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay to the widow of the late Dr. A. H. Witmer on account of salary withheld, and other disallowances, $537.15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 16, to insert:

Reimbursement of John E. Crane: To reimburse John E. Crane, United States commissioner in Alaska, for expenses incurred by him for the relief of destitute and sick Americans at Circle City, Alaska, during 1897 and 1898, $225.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 46, after line 9, to insert:

For incidental expenses and for employment of temporary assistance and workmen necessary for the care and custody of the buildings in the District of Columbia rented by the Department of Justice, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Attorney-General, and to be expended under his direction, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," at the top of page 48, to insert:

To enable the Post-Office Department to be properly represented at the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Universal Postal Union, to be held at Berne, Switzerland, beginning July 2, 1900, by delegates to be appointed for that purpose by the Postmaster-General, who is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to fix a per diem allowance to the same in lieu of expenses, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Out of the postal revenues," on page 48, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in administering the service under this appropriation no deficiency shall be created therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Paris Exposition," on page 50, line 1, after the word "expended," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed to allow such patent models as have been previously exhibited at any international exposition as the Secretary of the Interior may select, to be transported to and from and exhibited at said exposition in the custody of an employee of the Patent Office duly designated for that purpose by the Commissioner of Patents; such models to be returned to the Patent Office at the close of the exposition; but no models shall be removed concerning which litigation is now pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, on page 50, after line 10, to insert:

For six additional commissioners, to be appointed as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved July 1, 1898, who shall perform the duties and be subject to the limitations prescribed therein, at $3,000 each, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 50, after line 16, to insert:

SENATE.

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 23, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 25, to insert:

For repairs of Maltby Building, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 51, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses connected with the reception and unveiling of the statue of Daniel Webster on January 18, 1900, incurred by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee, $700, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Under the Public Printer," on page 52, line 6, after the word "For," to insert "printing and binding for;" so as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding for the Treasury Department, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 11, to insert:

For printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, including the Civil Service Commission, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," on page 53, line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "House Document No. 27, two hundred and forty-two thousand one hundred and twelve," and insert "Senate Document No. 84, three hundred and ninety-six thousand nine hundred and sixty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress at its present session in Senate Document No. 84, $396,967.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 54, line 15, after the word "twenty-six," to insert "and Senate Document No. 99;" and in line 19, before the word "cents," to strike out "twenty-three thousand nine hundred and twenty-five dollars and sixty" and insert "fifty-one thousand six hundred and fifty-five dollars and eighty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 226 and Senate Document No. 99, $2,151,655.82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the total amount proposed to be appropriated by it?

Mr. HALE. About $9,000,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The total amount appropriated by the bill is about $9,000,000?

Mr. HALE. Nine million and odd dollars.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is there any item in the bill to pay for the rent of the custom-house in New York?

Mr. HALE. No; of course there are a thousand items in the bill. I have read it over several times. I am satisfied there is no item of that kind. There is an amendment which was proposed to be offered on the floor touching that, and when the subject was called to my attention I declined to offer it, because it is not a matter that should come into this bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the committee inform me what portion of this deficiency appropriation is for expenses of carrying on the war in the Philippines?

Mr. HALE. Of course I can not segregate that item, because the expenses of the War Department are general. They run over the Quartermaster's Department, the Commissary Department, the Pay Department, the Signal Corps, Medical and Surgery, and the other divisions of the War Department. How much of these War Department reappropriations, which amount to about $45,000,000, will be expended upon the Philippine service I do not know. I do not know whether an inquiry directed to the War Department by the Senate, at the instance of the Senator from South Dakota, would elicit that information. I suppose that approximately it might; but there is nothing in this appropriation bill that conveys to my mind or can convey to any Senator's mind the distinction between that service in the War Department and the other.

I have no doubt that it is a very large proportion of this amount that is being so expended, because the most of the Army is there, the most of the officers are there, and the transportation of supplies and of troops and all the incidents to war touch the Philippine Islands; and the Senator knows, as every Senator knows, that there is no war so expensive as an expeditionary war.

I must ask the Senator to be content with that answer. I did not conceive, as the Senator in charge of the bill, that I would be called upon to furnish anything more definite than that statement. At any rate, I can not furnish it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I am not going to antagonize the passage of this bill. I believe that the entire expenditure of the Government in carrying on a war in the Philippine Islands is unnecessary and unjust, and that there can be no possible excuse found to justify it under any circumstances. The war in the Philippines could cease to-morrow if we should do that which we would insist upon being done if we were situated as the Filipinos are situated.

While I am not going to refuse to vote supplies at this time to the Government, I feel like entering my protest against expending the money collected from the people of the United States by taxation for the purpose of conquering the people of the Philippines and depriving them of the right to govern themselves.

Mr. HALE. It is proper, perhaps, that I should state—it may be that I did not in answer to the Senator's question—that while the appropriations direct are but nine million and odd thousands, there are funds that we have given in our generosity before that are reappropriated, amounting to forty-seven million and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Here is a war, Mr. President, against a constituted government that Congress has not declared, and we propose without inquiry to vote money to carry it on. It seems to me that it is the first duty of this Congress to take up and determine the question of right or wrong, and ascertain whether there is an occasion for the loss of life and the expenditure of money in the effort to conquer those people, and that that ought to be done before we approve any further by the appropriation of money the acts of the Administration in this connection.

I do not care, Mr. President, to discuss this question at the present time, but I do desire to enter my protest against a further approval of this business.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY—THE FINANCIAL BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine I think that ought not to be done unless our friends on the other side will say to us that they do not wish on to-morrow to continue the debate on the financial bill.

Mr. HALE. I had understood that no Senator desires to speak to-morrow. I know that many Senators desire the day for business at the Departments.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know of any Senator on this side who desires to take the floor at this time on the financial bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Or for to-morrow?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Neither for to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. HALE. I was so told.

Mr. ALLISON. In the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who appears to be absent from the Chamber to-day, he asked me to call attention to the fact that the weeks and days are passing without a discussion of this bill, and to urge its discussion in the Senate so far as it may properly be done. Of course, if there is no debate in view and no one wishes to speak upon that question, I do not object to adjourning over, but certainly it ought not to be made a reason for asking or suggesting a postponement of the final vote upon the financial bill upon the day already fixed by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There will be no proposition to postpone the bill. The time was agreed on to vote; Senators know they have that time; and if they choose to take time to prepare a little bit more thoroughly than they would if the bill were being pressed it is a matter certainly that can not be complained of.

Mr. TELLER. There has been some notice at least given of the discussion of another subject on Monday, so that no one will probably have a chance to discuss the financial bill on Monday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Unanimous consent was given when the bill was taken up that the bill should not give way to anything else after 2 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator knows very well that we can not easily say to a Senator who desires to discuss some other question and who has given the notice that he must not do it. It has been the custom of the Senate to allow him to do it. Of course, if the debate is not to go on to-morrow, the Senate can adjourn until Monday, but I do not believe it ought to adjourn over. I know there has been some notice given of a speech on Monday that has nothing to do, I understand, with this financial question. If anyone is ready to discuss the financial bill, I shall insist that he shall have the privilege of doing so, inasmuch as I do not now recall who has given the notice for Monday. But that it is unpleasant to do.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not understand that any notice has been given for Monday.

Mr. HALE. I should not have made the motion if I had not understood that no Senator on the other side or on this side desires to speak to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no notice for Monday.

Mr. HALE. As to what will be done on Monday, I do not think what we do to-morrow or the next day will in any way change that. If we come here in the morning, so many Senators desire the day for business at the Departments and other business that we shall have nothing to do and will adjourn. It will bring only a few Senators here. I should be willing to leave the question pretty largely to the Senator from Iowa, who has large experience in this matter and who is standing now as the sponsor for the bill, but I remind him that we will not get any debate to-morrow, I believe, from what we have heard here to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, for the first time, I hear from the other side that they are not prepared to go on with the debate upon the financial bill either to-morrow or the next day. It was only to facilitate the consideration of that bill that I interposed, and not having had an opportunity to consult about it, and no one suggesting to me from the other side that they did not wish to go on to-morrow or the next day, I of course interposed the suggestion that I made. I only desire now to say that, with the exception of this financial bill, I know of no pressing matter before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Then I will ask that a vote be taken on my motion. If any Senator desired the floor to-morrow, I would not insist upon it, of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to state that if the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] were in the city, I should ask the Senate to-morrow to take up the question concerning a vacant seat in the Senate from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. He is absent, and therefore that case will not be proposed for the consideration of the Senate during this week; but when these intervals of indolence take place in the Senate, I shall bring up that case and ask to have it discussed.

Mr. BATE. I wish to say that the junior Senator from Tennessee is necessarily absent. He was telegraphed for for a special purpose. I understand that he can not return before about Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that the junior Senator from Tennessee would be necessarily absent until next week. As soon as he returns that case will be brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest that several Senators have given notice of speeches to be made on subjects other than the financial question. Some of them have been crowded out, and by the usual custom they will feel at liberty to make their speeches on some other day. Thus we are liable to be crowded into the last of the time and to have no opportunity to make the financial debate without seeming to be discourteous to our associates.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] have notices here on the Calendar to discuss a question that it seems to me is a moot question, but of course they are entitled to discuss it. It is the question as to whether the proposed constitution of North Carolina will be a constitutional constitution or not. If we follow the usual custom of allowing Senators to come in with speeches of which they have given notice, we shall find ourselves at the last with a number of Senators who will want to speak on the financial subject, but who will have no opportunity.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] desires to speak to-day.

Mr. MONEY. I gave notice two days ago that after the business of the morning hour to-day I would address the Senate on the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that to-morrow or the next day have been mortgaged by any Senators.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; there is no notice for speeches on those days.

Mr. TELLER. They are not mortgaged, but what I want to say is that I hope Senators who are going to make speeches on other subjects will make them in time and not interfere with those who will desire to speak on the financial bill. I know several Senators who expect to make a speech on the financial question. I shall feel at liberty to insist that the financial question shall be the question before the Senate if anybody wants to speak on it at any time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to be discourteous to any Senator who would like to speak, but I shall insist after Monday that nothing, not even the courtesy of the Senate, shall allow the financial bill to be set aside if anyone wants to speak on it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suppose we shall have an opportunity to discuss the financial bill on the conference report. I am anxious to make some remarks on the subject, but inasmuch as the House has passed one bill and the Senate committee have proposed another, I thought I should like to discuss the measure which the majority finally conclude to present to the country and I would have that opportunity in discussing the conference report, which will really make the bill which we are to consider. I understand there is no limit to debate upon a conference report, and I prefer, as far as I am concerned, to wait until I ascertain what is presented here finally for consideration.

I am well aware that as the matter now stands a measure entirely different, another scheme entirely, may be presented to this body by the conference committee, and with the latitude we have allowed to committees of conference it can be almost entirely a new measure. Therefore, if it is understood that there is no limit to the debate on the conference report, I should prefer to defer my remarks until that time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa, who speaks for the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whether we are to understand that debate on the opposite side of the Chamber upon the currency bill goes entirely by default?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am not authorized to speak for the chairman of the Finance Committee on that special point. The chairman has already explained his views upon the substitute offered by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER. He said he did not know of anyone else.

Mr. ALLISON. I am reminded that he said he did not know that anyone else upon this side intended to speak upon the subject. I should think that later on perhaps there might be some observations on the bill before its final passage from Senators on this side of the Chamber. I myself may want to make a few observations at some stage of the proceeding; but if the bill could be passed now, or if I could understand the attitude of the Senators on the other side with respect to it, I might perhaps waive any idea I have of making a suggestion on the subject.

I listened to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] as well as I could a few days ago, and I was surprised to find that he places a very different construction upon many of the provisions of the bill from that placed upon them by myself. I wanted to get a little of the trend of opinion on the other side of the Chamber in regard to the detail of the bill before I said very much about it. I do not know that I shall say much about it at any time, but I would not wish to be foreclosed now by the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska so that I would be debarred from making such observations as I might think proper to make later on in this debate.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I had the pleasure of listening to the remarks of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, when this measure was presented by him, and with proper respect for that Senator and the bill he represents I supposed that an additional argument would be offered on the other side of the Chamber in support of the bill. Not a word has been said by our friends on the other side since the Senator from Rhode Island last spoke. It seems to be taken for granted that this measure is so perfect and so complete that no man ought to question its correctness before coming to the support of its provisions on that side of the Chamber. I have been at a loss to know whether it was regarded in that light by our Republican friends or whether, realizing that they had the machine strength, the mere force of numbers to vote it through on the 15th of next month, they intended to remain silent until that time and carry it in spite of all arguments and protests against its adoption.

Now, the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island were so completely overcome and destroyed by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that I supposed the Senator from Iowa or some equally well-informed and experienced Senator would reenforce the Senator from Rhode Island here, but he seems to be left without any support. I especially hoped that something would be said upon the other side of the Chamber that would be in the nature of an argument in support of this most extraordinary measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1) to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. My motion is still pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will wait.

Mr. HALE. Let it at least be considered as pending. I do not care for a vote at this moment.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I had hoped something would be said on the other side of the Chamber in support of this measure, which it took so many months at Atlantic City and elsewhere to formulate and get in shape, so that those of us who do not believe in its provisions or in the policy might have an opportunity to combat the arguments made in this body. Yet not one word has been said here aside from what was said by the Senator from Rhode Island.

An unfortunate death, Mr. President, the deplorable death of the gentleman who was elected to succeed me in this Congress, disconnected me for a time from that continuity of study and thought upon this question that I would have given it if I had expected to return to the Chamber at the present session of Congress. When I left here in March last I turned my attention to another pursuit, and I did not follow my reading and study on the all-important subject of the science of money as I would have followed it if I had remained here or if I had expected to return shortly. Therefore I find myself on my return as a member of the Senate not in a situation to take up the question and discuss it fully at this time. I am trying to prepare myself.

But I want it distinctly understood upon the other side of the Chamber, and by the country, that so far as I am concerned, and so far as those who believe with me are concerned, hostility to the passage of this measure is not at an end.

Why, Mr. President, this measure is a direct violation of every pledge the Republican party has made to this country in the last ten years. It is an open and inexcusable abandonment of every promise. In 1888 the Republicans arraigned the Democratic party for undertaking to demonetize silver. In 1892 it pledged itself to bimetallism, and in 1896, in a qualified way, in favor of international bimetallism.

Now, what has been done to carry out that pledge or those pledges? When the present Administration came into power on the 4th of March, 1897, a commission was appointed under an act passed in the Fifty-fourth Congress, of which the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] was chairman, to visit Europe and see what could be done in the way of entering into an international agreement for the coinage of gold and silver.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a word?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator that all these pledges should be fulfilled, and I expect to say so before the debate closes. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact, however, just now, if it will not interrupt his speech, that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] gave notice several days ago that after the routine morning business to-day he would speak upon the resolution introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], and I do not think that even in behalf of the great principles of bimetallism, which the Senator and I will both advocate on the floor, the Senator ought to take the time away from the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ALLEN. I knew the moment I attempted to assail the position of the opposition and show up its weak places there would be some protest against it, but I did not expect it from the Senator from New Hampshire. I realize what the Senator says, and I shall close what I was going to say in a moment.

That pledge was not fulfilled. When the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] and his associates were abroad, at the time they were attempting in good faith to carry out the pledges of the Republican party, the Secretary of the Treasury, who is a distinguished member of the Republican party, had formulated and caused to be introduced in the House of Representatives a bill substantially the same as this measure, pledging the Government to the single gold standard. At the very time when our commissioners were in Europe, in the midst of the duties imposed upon them by Congress and by the President, the Secretary of the Treasury was before the Committee on Banking and Currency, urging it to adopt this measure pledging the Government to the gold standard. Every party pledge from 1888 down to that time was broken, and when that commission came back, I think in January, 1898, to make their report to the President of the United States they found that every effort had been used in this country to handicap them while they were gone and to destroy their efficiency. So, after that puny and futile effort, the President of the United States and the Republican party turned their backs upon the question presented by the commissioners.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island who is chairman of the Committee on Finance made a speech on this bill. I have no hesitation in saying it was a very able speech, for it seemed to be the purpose of the speech to escape stating what the bill contained, and he succeeded admirably, I think, in that particular. I felt it my duty briefly to speak what I thought of the bill. The Senator from Rhode Island was present on both days when I spoke. The Senator from Iowa was also present. According to the usual custom of the Senate, the advocates and supporters of a bill, if it is misrepresented by a speaker, will generally intervene and at least give their opinion. There was not a suggestion——

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Wait a minute. There was not a suggestion that I was misrepresenting the bill. I should have been most delighted to have heard what was their interpretation of the bill if it was different from mine, but I did not have that opportunity. Now I will hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. If I stated that the Senator from Colorado misrepresented the bill——

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not state it in that form.

Mr. TELLER. Not offensively.

Mr. ALLISON. What I meant to say was that the Senator's understanding, as expressed in his observations, of many provisions of the bill was different from my understanding, and of course at some time I may interpret the bill and its various provisions as I understand them, but I do not care to do so now. Indeed, it may be interpreted by others so that it will not be necessary for me to express any views on the subject.

Mr. TELLER. I expressed my surprise the other day when the Senator from Rhode Island said he did not know that there was to be any further discussion in defense of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not hear him say that.

Mr. TELLER. He said most distinctly that he knew of no other speech that was to be made in behalf of the bill. I expressed my surprise then that a great question of this kind should be submitted in that way.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that if we go on and put such a construction on the bill as we think is justified (and I certainly will put nothing on it that I do not think is justified), it will not do for the Senator and his associates to go on the stump after the bill is passed and say it does not mean what we said it did if they will not here defend their bill.

Mr. President, I propose to submit some further remarks on this bill, and I hope then that if I misinterpret the bill in the slightest degree, any Senator who thinks I am not right will get up and raise the question. I am trying to get at the truth of the bill, Mr. President. I do not care to come here and misinterpret it, nor misinterpret it in any shape or manner, and I have not, in my opinion, in the brief time I have discussed it, talked in any degree about some of the enormities of the bill and some of the evil influences that are to follow. And yet we get nothing at all from the other side. I do not understand that they are to debate it at any time, but it is to go nem con, not because, as the Senator from Nebraska suggested, that they think it is a perfect bill, for I know there are Senators who are going to vote for it who feel it is not, but because they have got in front of the machine that is forcing them on.

I do not mean to be offensive when I say that since the Republican party have surrendered to a caucus and allowed a caucus to dominate them in their judgment in this Senate, we can not expect they will stand up and defend that which their judgment is against. That is the case with some of them, at least, Mr. President. Whenever a man surrenders his judgment to a caucus, he is bound by the caucus. For myself, I never surrendered to a caucus, and I could not surrender to a caucus on a great question involving, as this does, the interests of the whole nation and of all the world because of our great influence.

But, Mr. President, it is the feeling that they have got the votes on their side and they propose to pass the bill and then say to us, as a distinguished citizen of New York once said, "What are you going to do about it?" They say, "We have got the power, and we are going to put this bill through. If you do not like it, you can do the other thing." That is the sentiment which seems to animate, with rare exceptions, the Republicans of this Senate today. I will not include all of them in that statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to say that there has been no Republican caucus on this bill and that there is to be none?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, that is a mere way of avoiding the statement I have made. A caucus was held, and the public were told that a caucus was held, that a committee had been appointed by the caucus to go down to a watering place on the Atlantic coast and take the bill, which had been sent to them from Indianapolis, and see whether it was suitable or not. That is the fact, and it will not do for anybody to deny it. There may have been no Senatorial caucus, but there has been a caucus. A caucus committee reported this bill to the House of Representatives, and this is the first time in the history of this or any other nation of free people when such a bill has been presented, coming from no committee, having had no consideration of the committee of that body, and having had practically no consideration by the committee of this body.

Mr. President, I did not rise to interfere with the Senator from Mississippi, but I shall take occasion before this debate is over to continue some remarks in the line I have started in on to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. I have concluded for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not desire or intend in any way to impugn the motives of Senators on either side of the Chamber or to charge delay in the discussion of this measure to either side of the Chamber.

When the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] proposed an adjournment over until Monday, I suggested that it ought not to be done if Senators on the other side desired to discuss the bill now pending. On the assurances of Senators on the other side that they did not wish to discuss it during this week, I yielded, of course, to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

I take it for granted, not having heard from the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on this subject for some days, that there will be debate on this bill on both sides of the Chamber, that Senators on both sides will express their views as to the details of the bill, and that there will be discussion as to how far the bill as reported by the Senate Finance Committee is a departure from well sustained and supported Republican principles in the past. I made the suggestion to the Senator from Colorado that I place a very different construction on some of the details of the bill from what I understood him to place upon them. I am speaking now of the amendments of the Senate Finance Committee to the bill. I understood the Senator to say that the effect of the Senate amendments will be to withdraw entirely the greenbacks from circulation and substitute bonds for them. I understood him also to say, in effect, that the result would be a withdrawal in time, under the operations of the bill, of all the silver money and silver certificates in circulation. I certainly can not accept that interpretation. I only mention these two as illustrations of the Senator's contention.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, the House bill does that thing beyond question, does it not?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say now whether it does or not. I am only speaking now—I shall perhaps allude to that later on—of the Senate committee amendments as I understand them. I place a very different interpretation as respects the effect of the Senate committee amendments upon the existing currency of our country——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I shall undertake to show, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, that the Senate amendments are so fabricated in their phraseology and in their intent and purpose that it will not be possible for any Secretary of the Treasury or any power in this Government to impound permanently either the greenbacks or the silver certificates or prevent the circulation of silver dollars; but I shall not undertake that debate now. I shall not interfere with the Senator from Mississippi. That, however, is what I meant when I said that I thought the Senator from Colorado misapprehended the true intent and purpose of the Senate committee amendments; and at some time early in the debate, or late in the debate, I shall endeavor to give my interpretation at least of the various provisions in the Senate committee amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now renew the motion made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That an enactment, by constitution or otherwise, by any State which confers the right to vote upon any of its citizens because of their descent from certain persons or classes of persons, and excludes other citizens because they are not descended from such persons or classes of persons, having all other qualifications prescribed by law, in the opinion of the Senate, is in violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States and of a fundamental principle of our republican form of government.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice I gave a few days ago, I purpose addressing the Senate on the resolution which has just been read by the Secretary. There need be no excuse for any Senator participating in this debate. I certainly have no need of any; and if I had, I have been furnished with the excuse in the speech made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], which has brought into this argument the name of my State as one of those which have used "unconstitutional methods" to disfranchise certain of its citizens. I hope that I shall always be willing, if not prepared, to defend my State whenever it is assailed from any quarter.

The Senator states, in the resolution which he has offered and in the speech which he has founded upon it, that three articles of the Constitution of the United States have been violated in several of the Southern States and that there is a proposed violation in his own State, first, of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that—

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, etc.

Then the Senator seriously contended that if the State of North Carolina, through its sovereign citizens, should make an organic law imposing certain restrictions upon the elective franchise it will have lost its republican form of government. It would be very difficult for him to prove that it had lost even the spirit of a republican government; and I can not take very seriously any argument which would go to show that it had lost its form. Certainly there is no contention anywhere, because there has been an absolute concurrence of opinion of all the authorities, that the United States does not anywhere confer upon any being the right of the elective franchise. That is a matter left to the States. The Constitution does, however, place an inhibition against discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Outside of that one restriction the States can range from one end to the other of all the expedients proposed in order to restrict or enlarge their franchise in any manner that they may deem best to promote their prosperity and progress.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina addressed the Senate the other day with considerable oratorical effect, but I think I shall show—at least I shall try—that his speech was more imposing in its appearance than sound in the texture of its material; and I am sorry to say, without any disrespect to him, that it was much more ingenious in argument than it was ingenuous. I dislike to be critical, especially hypercritical, but there is nothing left for me in this matter, after discussing certain general principles, but to follow the text of my friend's speech and to make what I consider appropriate comments upon it. I shall endeavor to prove that the proposed constitutional amendment of the State of North Carolina does not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, according to decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, so as to render it obnoxious to that instrument.

Mr. President, I do not exactly understand—I believe I do understand, too—why this matter has been brought here. There is no question but that the Senate can consider any question which it considers important or unimportant. It can range from the transit of Venus down to the price of putty, and exhaust its mind upon any question which any gentleman may propose. But this case is a serious one, and perhaps the Senator was perfectly justifiable in bringing it to our attention. If, however, there was desired a judicial ascertainment of the constitutionality of this proposed amendment, a case could easily have been made up for the courts on the constitution of the State of Louisiana, of which this proposed amendment is a copy.

But it does not seem so much desirable to have a judicial decision as it is to have a legislative opinion upon this matter; and it seems to me, Mr. President, that the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, together with the amendment, was very much like the newspaper and committee declarations he read on Monday last—mere campaign documents. In other words, it seems to me that the Senator draws upon the Senate of the United States for an auxiliary in a discussion upon the coming contest in his own State. If he can secure an expression from this body that the proposed amendment is unconstitutional, he readily perceives, as you will, that it will exercise an intimidating and deterrent effect upon the voters of North Carolina favoring the amendment. In any State of the Union that would be the necessary result. Many voters will decide at once that whatever this Senate says is the law of the case must be so, and they will not desire in casting their ballots to go against that opinion. They are unwilling to wait for a judicial decision upon it.

In the first place, Mr. President, as to the State of Mississippi, I want to refer to the same authority which was used on Monday by my friend from North Carolina; and I desire to say that I shall cite no other authorities except those which he himself has used. If they can be construed to support his position in this matter, then I will yield the case; but I shall contend that every decision he has quoted here goes against him in the construction that he desires to put upon it. The case of Williams was decided in the State of Mississippi, and the Senator gave his construction of the decision of the court.

I can not see well enough to find what I want, but, in brief, the case was this: Williams took an appeal from the circuit court of Washington County upon a charge of murder, the ground being that the jury was drawn from the electors of a county who were discriminated against in a manner obnoxious to the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The supreme court of the State of Mississippi delivered a very able opinion upon that subject, and that opinion was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, Judge McKenna delivering the opinion. In that case it was said that there was nothing in the constitution of Mississippi in any way obnoxious to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. That is the substance of that decision. I am unable to find the place, although I have the book here before me.

Before I proceed further, Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the speech made by the honorable Senator from North Carolina on Monday last was not based upon the proposed amendment to the constitution in its words, but was based upon what he prints in his speech as the constitutional amendment, which differs from it in various points. In other words, the Senator omits from the fourth section words which are vital to its meaning and makes his argument upon that. Upon a hiatus, created by himself, he founded the superstructure of his argument. Another part of his argument is founded upon a word interpolated by himself in a decision quoted by him. I shall ask the Secretary to read from the laws of the State of North Carolina of last year the proposed amendment. Let the Secretary begin reading at section 5.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 5. No male person who was on January 1, 1867, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under the laws of any State in the United States wherein he then resided, and no lineal descendant of any such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this State by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications prescribed in section 4 of this article: Provided, He shall have registered in accordance with the terms of this section prior to December 1, 1908.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, that is not the language upon which the Senator from North Carolina, on Monday last, predicated his speech. In other words, what he prints in his speech as a copy of the law is not a true copy. He omits the words "or at any time prior thereto;" and the absence of those words is the real foundation of the argument made by the Senator on Monday last.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. The proposed amendment which I quoted in my speech is taken from a certified copy, which was sent to me by the secretary of state of North Carolina. It was certainly not intentional on my part to leave out anything which occurred in the amendment, and I have not done so, as I understand it.

Mr. MONEY. I accept that explanation on the part of the Senator.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I did not base my argument on any such ground.

Mr. MONEY. I think I will show that you did.

Mr. PRITCHARD. But I do say that the amendment is unconstitutional as it was read by the Secretary just now. I do not rely on the other in the slightest degree.

Mr. MONEY. Well, Mr. President, I, of course, accept the explanation of the Senator, as I shall accept another from him a little later on, because I do not believe he would be so disingenuous as to base his remarks upon so flimsy a foundation as that; but, at any rate, I called his attention during the progress of his speech to the words "or at any time prior thereto," and I will show before I get through that he puts his argument upon the fact that there are no such words in the proposed constitutional amendment. We shall see. Mr. President, I am laboring under a physical difficulty that I can not very well get over just now.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If I can be of any assistance to the Senator I shall be glad to find for him what he wants.

Mr. MONEY. I want the language of the court in the case of Williams.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will find it for the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. While my friend is finding the quotation for me, I want to mention for a moment one of the arguments made by the Senator from North Carolina. One of his quotations is as follows:

That each of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as a State of the Union when the legislature of such State shall have duly ratified the amendment of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as Article XIV, upon the following fundamental conditions: That the constitution of neither of the said States shall ever be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of a right to vote in said State.

I suppose every lawyer knows that whatever restrictions may be put upon a State to enable it to enter the Union, yet when a State has been admitted she is the peer of any other State there, and that she can act without any regard whatever to that restricting provision and has power to do what any other State can do. The Supreme Court has said, and the President of the United States during the progress of the reconstruction measures said, that no State had ever been out of the Union at all, and therefore she need not, so far as the power to change her constitution as she pleased was concerned, within the inhibition of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, to make no pledge whatever. As a matter of fact, there was an intense anxiety throughout the Southern States as to what was to be the fate of those States. We did not know what sort of government we were going to have, and the people were willing to accept almost any sort of conditions in order, not to enter the Union again, but to "resume Federal relations."

The Senator from North Carolina endeavors to make a point on section 4 of the proposed constitutional amendment, which reads as follows:

SEC. 4. Every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the constitution in the English language; and before he shall be entitled to vote shall have paid, on or before the 1st day of March of the year in which he proposes to vote, his poll tax, as prescribed by law, for the previous year.

Well, Mr. President, several States of this Union have prescribed an educational qualification, and it can not be said that that violates the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, because the Senator admits that there are 50,000 negro voters in his State who can read and write. So there is no discrimination pointed out there, as has been said in the decision he has now before him in the case from Mississippi. The Supreme Court said that the convention of Mississippi had swept the whole field of expedients to find something that would restrict the right of suffrage; and as they could not find power under the fifteenth amendment to discriminate against the negro, they discriminated against his characteristics. They did so, Mr. President, not as my friend thinks, to maintain the Democracy dominant, but to maintain a civilization that is dependent very largely upon the Democratic party being in control. If 50,000 negroes in the State of North Carolina can read and write, then where is the discrimination in the illiteracy clause?

Now we get to the argument concerning persons disqualified to vote if they were not voters or if their ancestors were not voters on the 1st day of January, 1867, or prior thereto. As a matter of fact, it is recognized that up to 1835 the free colored people of North Carolina were permitted to vote. It is also well known that many of the people of color in Massachusetts and in other States prior to 1861 were voters, and they may be presumed to have some of their descendants still living in the State of North Carolina. That relieves this section from any charge of discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

My friend says:

I call upon my Democratic friends to show me a single individual who, while in a condition of servitude, was entitled to vote.

It is not necessary to show that anybody has ever alleged that, but it was only those who were free in the State of North Carolina up to 1835 and entitled to the elective franchise and their descendants, who are supposed to be still numerous in that State.

Mr. PRITCHARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. May I ask the Senator what is to become of those who had been in a condition of servitude?

Mr. MONEY. If they are illiterate, they will not vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am not speaking of that, but I want to know what will become of them as a class of people. The framers of the fifteenth amendment not only provided that it should not operate against those people on account of race or color, but they went a step further, as the debates will show, and in order that there should be no doubt about the question, they provided that those people should not be discriminated against on account of "previous condition of servitude." Now, I ask my distinguished friend to point me to a single instance wherein any individual in any of the States while in a condition of servitude had the right to vote?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know of any.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I so understand it.

Mr. MONEY. I do not think that is of any importance to this case. This applies to the descendants of those who did vote, and there were a great many of them who were entitled to vote. It does not mean to go any further.

The Senator claims that there is no similarity between the illiteracy clause in the constitution of Massachusetts and that of his State, and he proceeds to read, as I wish I could, from that constitution. His point is that all those who voted at the time the constitution was made in Massachusetts are still entitled to vote, and that it is not so in the constitution proposed in North Carolina; but, as a matter of fact, that distinction is unimportant, because in both instances, in order to preserve the best interests of the country, it was thought best to legislate against illiteracy, and it makes no difference whether a man voted at that time or at any other time. At any rate, he has the time under the constitution to prepare himself for the ballot.

Now, the Senator from North Carolina assumes that if part of this constitutional amendment shall be declared unconstitutional, that part does not carry the remainder with it, and he cites from a decision of Justice Matthews. I should like to find that case.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I think you will find it in 159 United States.

Mr. MONEY. One hundred and fifty-eight United States. I have the case here, I suppose. It is the case of Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, quoting from Sprague vs. Thompson (118 U. S., 90, 95):

The insuperable difficulty with the application of that principle of construction to the present instance is, that by rejecting the exceptions intended by the legislature of Georgia the statute is made to enact what confessedly the legislature never meant. It confers upon the statute a positive operation beyond the legislative intent, and beyond what anyone can say it would have enacted in view of the illegality of the exceptions.

Then, again, the court says:

We do not mean to say that an act laying by apportionment a direct tax on all real estate and personal property, or the income thereof, might not also lay excise taxes on business, privileges, employments, and vocations. But this is not such an act, and the scheme must be considered as a whole. Being invalid as to the greater part, and falling, as the tax would, if any part were held valid, in a direction which could not have been contemplated except in connection with the taxation considered as an entirety, we are constrained to conclude that sections 27 to 37, inclusive, of the act which became a law without the signature of the President on August 28, 1894, are wholly inoperative and void.

That is on the income tax. That is not the case I wanted, although it is to the same point.

In the case of George W. Warren and others vs. Mayor and Aldermen of Charlestown (68 Mass.), the court says:

When the parts of a statute are so mutually connected and dependent as conditions, considerations, or compensation for each other as to warrant a belief that the legislature intended them as a whole, and that if all could not be carried into effect the legislature would not pass the residue independently, if some parts are unconstitutional and void, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional or connected, must fall with them.

That exactly meets the case in point. Now, it is evident that the legislature of the State of North Carolina intended to present a scheme of suffrage to the sovereign people of that State for their adoption. It was a whole scheme; it was something in entirety. It had its several sections, it is true, but, as the court has frequently said, sections are simply artificial and carry no meaning. Two different things may be in the same section, and one thing may be scattered through a dozen sections. Here is the legislature of North Carolina presenting to that people a constitutional amendment upon what? Upon the subject of the elective franchise. And they make their declaration first as to illiteracy.

One must read and write the Constitution. One must pay poll taxes. Then, as a modification of its restrictions as to illiteracy, a liberal condition appended to it, a certain class of people, to wit, those who voted on or prior to the 1st of January, 1867, and their descendants in North Carolina and in other States, are permitted to exercise the franchise.

Now, here is a scheme presented as a whole; and with some regard for the white people of his State I ask the Senator if he believes that that legislature would have presented the scheme minus that section—section 5, I think it is? No, Mr. President; they presented this scheme of suffrage as a whole, one part compensating for another, that called the fifth section moderating the rigor of the fourth section, I believe it is.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has read from two decisions to sustain his contention that if section 5 falls the whole amendment would fall. Now, the Senator no doubt in his researches has found a number of other cases to the contrary; and, I take it, it would be fair, if he is to claim to present to the country what is the consensus of the opinions of our courts on this question, that the decisions which take an opposite position should not be left out and that the weight of authority should be considered. I have on my desk a number of such decisions. I hold in my hand a case with which no doubt the Senator is familiar. It is——

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator wants to ask me a question, he is at liberty to do so, but I object to allowing him to make a speech in mine.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not the Senator willing for a fair statement of the opinions of the Supreme Court on this point to be given at this time?

Mr. MONEY. Not at this time, but in your time.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not the Senator willing for me to put into the RECORD a statement of a number of decisions——

Mr. MONEY. I am willing to be interrupted by the Senator, but I am not willing to have the Senator teach me how to make my speech or instruct me about the line of argument I am to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi decline to yield?

Mr. MONEY. I decline to yield to anything but a question.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not wish to interfere with him if he is opposed to my calling his attention to a number of decisions of the courts which negative the position he has taken.

Mr. MONEY. I am very willing for the Senator to cite all the decisions he may have before him, when he speaks. I am pursuing a line of argument I have selected for myself. I have authorities to support me, and I am not willing to make use of the arguments that he presents to support his side of the case.

Mr. BUTLER. I thought the Senator wanted to get the facts in this case.

Mr. MONEY. I am presenting the facts, and I do not need the assistance of the Senator from North Carolina to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi decline to yield?

Mr. MONEY. I decline to yield any further.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say, in this connection, that I will invite the Senator when I speak to correct any statement I make or to put in any opinions of our courts. I am not afraid of the truth.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator means to infer that I am afraid of the truth, he could have spared himself that observation. It was not necessary for him to do that. I am not afraid of the truth; I am no more afraid of it than he is; but I propose to pursue my own course in this matter; and when the Senator interrupts me and I politely tell him that he can interrupt me for a question, he ought to observe the usual courtesies of debate and not insist upon my taking up his decisions, which, as he says, I must carefully have looked over, and present them as a part of my argument. I do not wish to be at all uncivil to the Senator from North Carolina, but I must beg him to accord to me the respect that he expects from other people.

Mr. BUTLER. I intended the utmost respect to the Senator, and I did not know that it was offensive for me to call his attention to some Supreme Court decisions until he seemed to be displeased. I beg his pardon for interrupting him. I shall not do it any more.

Mr. MONEY. I do not object to the Senator interrupting on material things, but he must not close his remarks by inferring that I do not want the truth brought out. It is not true, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply offered to put into the Senator's remarks this statement of Supreme Court decisions——

Mr. MONEY. I know that.

Mr. BUTLER. If he did not object to it.

Mr. MONEY. I do not intend to let the Senator do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. MONEY. He can present it in his own speech.

Mr. BUTLER. I will do so.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I can not find the decision of Mr. Justice Matthews which I desire.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If the Senator will permit me, I have the book here, and I have two places marked.

Mr. MONEY. Let me see it. [Examining book.] That is not the case I want. I can not find the reference, so I will go on with my observations.

I desired, Mr. President, to quote some decisions which I thought were referred to in the speech of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I do not at this moment find them. I will get to what I said a while ago, when I said the Senator from North Carolina had interpolated a word in the decision, which I will now read, and upon that he does base an argument. It is the case of Yick Wo vs. Hopkins, sheriff:

> Though the law itself is fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered with an evil eye and unequal hand, so as to practically make unjust and illegal discrimination between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

Now, here is what my friend says:

> Here is an explicit statement by Justice Matthews, which declares that although a law may be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is capable of being administered "with an evil eye or an unequal hand," so as to discriminate between persons similarly situated, that the denial of guaranteed rights is violative of the spirit and letter of the Constitution. Will any one deny that the proposed amendment is capable of being administered "with an evil eye and unequal hand?"

The word "capable" is not in the decision.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not understand the Senator to contend that I was quoting the language of the decision when I used the word "capable."

Mr. MONEY. It says "an explicit statement by Justice Matthews."

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator permit me? I will read the section to which he refers, if it will not be an interruption.

Mr. MONEY. Have I not just read that one?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir. I based my argument on that decision, and I gave the Senate exactly what the decision said in regard to the matter.

Mr. MONEY. I can not read this; but what it says is that there is nothing that appears in the constitution of Mississippi which is unfair or partial, but it has not been shown that the administration of the law has been with an evil eye. So it is not whether or not the law can be "capable" of being administered with an evil eye, but whether it has been so administered.

Mr. PRITCHARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Is it not a natural inference that if it was administered with an unequal hand and an evil eye it would be subject to the objection therein stated?

Mr. MONEY. If it had been administered with an unequal hand and an evil eye, then certainly the court itself would have found it was unconstitutional.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is my contention.

Mr. MONEY. But there is not a statute on the books that is not capable of administration with an unequal hand and an evil eye. It depends upon the integrity of the judge who expounds the law and the officers who administer the law. It has been the custom in every legislature and in every branch of the Government to infer that a public servant will discharge his duties conscientiously, and no man can say in advance that a law is to be administered with an evil eye and a partial hand. Yet my friend puts this remark here as being in the decision itself—that if it is capable of being so administered; and his statement if undisputed will certainly have its effect upon the votes of the people of North Carolina.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I certainly did not intend to do any such thing.

Mr. MONEY. Then I hope that the Senator——

Mr. PRITCHARD. I wish to state in this connection, if the Senator will permit me, that I quoted this decision in reply to a statement which had been made by the Senator from Alabama (Mr. MORGAN) the other day, in which he said that the Mississippi cases practically settle the constitutionality of the proposed amendment to the constitution of North Carolina. I quoted the case to show that it had no relation to it, that it had no bearing on the case one way or the other unless it should turn out that the law in Mississippi had been administered with an evil eye and an unequal hand. In that event I am fully satisfied that the Supreme Court would not hesitate for one moment to declare that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. MONEY. That is very true. When a law like this, which is fair upon its face, has been administered with an evil eye and a partial or an unequal hand, I believe the Supreme Court would have decided that it was unconstitutional; but that does not support the language of my friend, the Senator from North Carolina, because that or any other statute is "capable" of being administered unequally and partially.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I may have been unfortunate in the use of my language, but I certainly intended to convey the idea I have stated.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Does the fact that a law is badly administered, contrary to its obvious meaning, render the law unconstitutional, or is it merely a violation of the law by the judge who so administers it?

Mr. MONEY. I understand it in that way—that it does not affect the constitutionality of the law; and that is why I say that this word "capable" gives a new meaning to the law which the courts have never given to it.

I am not proceeding in the order in which I wish, Mr. President, because I can not find what I want to in the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, but I desire to take note of one statement made here, and of course he will do himself the justice in his speech, when he sends it out, to correct the phraseology of the amendment as he has it in his speech made the other day.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That, I understand, was simply a clerical error of the typewriter, and was not intended by me.

Mr. MONEY. I hope not.

Mr. PRITCHARD. In reply to the Senator, I indicated that it applied to those who were entitled to vote on or before the 1st of January, 1867. That was well understood at the time. I do not know why the words were left out.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator said:

> The grandfather clause will not avail those citizens who, in consequence of poverty and misfortune, are unable to pay their poll tax on or before the 1st of March in the year in which they propose to vote, as provided in section 4 of the proposed amendment.

My friend is in misfortune again, because there is not any such provision in the amendment. There is no provision in the amendment that a man shall pay his taxes for 1900 before March 1, 1900, as stated by the Senator, but, on the contrary, the taxes of the previous year shall be paid before March, 1900. In other words, if a man wishes to vote in the year 1900, he must, before the 1st of March, 1900, have paid the taxes of 1899. Certainly the Senator is at fault in that statement; and if it goes to North Carolina uncorrected, we know not what influence it will have, coming from so distinguished a source—a man respected by his own people and a man whose opinions have been received and are received generally and justly. But when he says to them, You have got to pay the taxes of this year by the 1st of March instead of the taxes of last year by the 1st of March, what will they consider? They will take it for granted that it is true; and as a matter of fact the law states that it is not true. The Senator was mistaken again about that. So the plea of poverty on the part of the man who is unable to get up enough money to pay his taxes by the 1st of March disappears, because he has had fifteen months in which to get up those taxes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Is the Senator of the opinion that the grandfather clause will avail those who are unable to pay their poll tax of the previous year, as he has stated it?

Mr. MONEY. What I am speaking of now is the statement the Senator made here that these poor citizens had to pay by the 1st of March the taxes of that year, when the law expressly states that it is for the previous year.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I think I have asked the Senator a very pertinent question, as to whether or not the payment of the poll tax is necessary in order to avail them of the benefits intended to be conferred by section 5.

Mr. MONEY. As I understand it, the poll tax is necessary for everybody in the State.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is to say, no white man will be excluded from the enjoyment of its provisions provided he shall pay his poll tax.

Mr. MONEY. I do not believe there is anybody exempted, and I do not believe there is any State in the Union that exempts anybody from the poll tax.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is what I want to settle. I thought we could agree about that.

Mr. MONEY. No State, so far as I know, exempts anybody from the poll tax. Some States do not make it a requisite for voting. In my State it is required of every man. But certainly the Senator's argument of discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude falls to the ground.

He also in another place amplifies the language of the amendment. It gives me no pleasure, Mr. President, to call the Senator, whom I so highly regard, to account for these little words that come in here interpolated into the law because, as I said, his statement is designed for a campaign document. It will go to every household in the State of North Carolina. The Senator's high character and standing before that people and the country give it great weight with those people, and they will take every word that he says as literally true as representing the law.

Let us see in another case. He says here:

How many men in your voting precinct if called upon to-morrow to write any section of the Constitution in the English language from dictation, would be able to correctly write the same?

There is no such requirement in the law. The law does not say a man shall read it correctly. It says he shall read it. It makes no difference whether he reads it correctly or incorrectly. It is just as in the case of the constitution of the State of Mississippi, where, in order in some way to alleviate the rigor of the clause requiring ability to read, it was said that if the citizen could not read the constitution or a section of it, he should understand it and be able to interpret it, and it was well understood that that was a liberalizing of the provision; that he was not expected to make such an interpretation of it as a lawyer would speaking before a court or a judge from the bench, or an ordinarily intelligent man discussing it on the street corner.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not wish to put the Senator off his guard.

Mr. MONEY. It does not make any difference. The Senator can get up as often as he wishes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think, when it says they must read and write the constitution, that the inference is they must be able to read and write it——

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Write it correctly and read it correctly?

Mr. MONEY. No, I do not. I do not admit——

Mr. PRITCHARD. By what rule of construction does the Senator arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. MONEY. I just simply take the law. The law states that they must be able to read and write. The law does not state they must read and write it correctly. There are a great many people amongst the voters of every State, both black and white, who can read the law, but will not read it correctly, and who can write the law, but will not write it correctly, and they come within this provision and are entitled to vote.

In his speech the distinguished Senator paid a very high and deserved tribute to the brave citizens of North Carolina who went into the civil war under the banner of the Confederacy and returned to homes which had been devastated and ruined, while their antagonists upon the field had gone home to peace and plenty, and all that; and he wants to show us that the descendants of those men will not be able to vote. I think that was the burden of his argument. If the Senator from North Carolina will find it for me, I will be very much obliged to him.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will accommodate the Senator. Does he want me to read it for him?

Mr. MONEY. If you can find that part in which you allude to the return of the Confederate soldier to his home, I will be obliged to you.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Very well.

Mr. MONEY. While the Senator is looking for that, I want to say that there is no man living who has more respect for the people of North Carolina than I have. My father was born in that State, and both of the parents of my wife were born in North Carolina; and her conservatism, her steadiness, and her intelligence have been equal to those of any of her sister States. On any field, whether during the Revolutionary war or the civil war, no troops behaved better. I had the pleasure once of being brigaded with a North Carolina regiment, and no more gallant fellows ever trod upon battlefield. I would go as far as the Senator from North Carolina to resist inflicting upon what he calls the very poor people of the State any sort of deprivation of their rights, but these people have made an experiment of the elective franchise in the hands of the colored men, and when he cites what was said in 1870 and at other times, they were beginning then to try the experiment of negro suffrage.

They have tried that experiment, and while my friend says that there is no fear of domination of North Carolina by the negroes on account of their numerical inferiority, yet I will remind him that he said that ten or twelve counties in his State are under the control of the negroes so far as votes go—that is, they have the numerical superiority in votes—and that the condition of some sections of his State only a year and a half ago was utterly lamentable. I have here, which I may have occasion to have printed, begging leave to do so, the statement made by a gentleman now, I believe, a contestee in the other House, of the condition of things in Wilmington just prior to the election of 1898, and also of Mr. Chadbourn, who was the postmaster at that place, I believe, which shows a condition of things that would simply appear to me to be intolerable.

Now, these gentlemen, having tried negro suffrage, having found that they were unable to preserve the progress of their State and its prosperity, to advance in their civilization, have found, as they think, a peaceful and constitutional way, not amenable to objection, because tried by other States and not found objectionable by the courts of the country, in order to establish themselves more firmly in their civil government, to bring the advantages and benefits of good government to them and to their children.

This race question, which I do not care now to discuss, but which I will discuss later on, is one that is entering vitally into the condition of every one of the Southern States and of the whole Union; and while I claim that there is no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, yet there may be a discrimination on account of the characteristics that may mark one race. It is quite likely that there is, and it was so designed; but it is not what some people have called "skin" government—government according to the color of the skin, which is, they say, a moral unreasonableness, but it is because the skin is the evidence and the indication of certain qualities, the possessors of which have manifested capacity for government ever since the races came upon the globe.

If my friend has found that part of his speech, I will be glad to get it.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Do you desire me to read it?

Mr. MONEY. If you please.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will read what I said:

It is also contended by some that the proposed amendment contains identically the same provisions that are to be found in the amendment to the constitution of the State of Massachusetts.

* * * * * * *

It is unfair to attempt a comparison between North Carolina and Massachusetts, when it is well known that Massachusetts has all the while had the best public-school system of any State in the Union——

Mr. MONEY. I do not think that is the part of my friend's speech? I want him to turn to the part where he spoke of the Confederate soldier.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am coming to that in a moment.

while ours has been weak and inefficient. At the close of the late civil war the soldier from the State of Massachusetts returned to a home of peace and plenty—

Mr. MONEY. That is it.

Mr. PRICHARD—

where his children had enjoyed uninterruptedly the benefits of the public school, while, on the other hand, the Confederate soldier returned to a home of desolation and ruin, to find that his children had been denied the privilege that had been enjoyed by the children of Massachusetts.

Is that sufficient?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir; that is sufficient.

Mr. President, that does not, I think, show that the children of the Confederate soldier are to be excluded from the franchise.

It is now proposed—

He says—

by the leaders of the Democratic party that his children and their descendants—

Speaking of the Confederate soldier—shall be denied the right of suffrage because of their inability to read and write the Constitution in the English language.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. That is correctly reported?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; that is correctly reported.

Mr. MONEY. Does not the Senator know that these very children of the Confederate soldiers are entitled to vote because they are the descendants of people who voted either in 1867 or prior thereto?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator from Mississippi asks me a question. Will he permit me to answer it?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly; that is what I asked you for.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That would certainly be so if the Supreme Court should decide that section 5 is constitutional. But if the Supreme Court should decide that section 5 is unconstitutional, as I am satisfied it will, in that event the white people would be required to undergo this educational test as well as the colored people. In other words, I do not believe that any State legislature has the power to confer the right to vote by inheritance on any class of people residing therein.

Mr. DAVIS. And deny it to another.

Mr. PRITCHARD. And deny it to another class of people who are similarly situated. In the event they should decide that to be the law (and they have already decided that to be the law in every case that has ever been considered, as far as I am informed) the white people of North Carolina will be compelled to stand the same test that is required of the colored people.

Mr. MONEY. I showed a while ago from the decision I quoted, and some which I desired to read I could not find, that when this scheme of franchise submitted by the legislature was passed upon it wou d all stand or all fall together. I do not believe that there is a reasonable doubt of that fact. I read from some decisions that I had in my hand then, and there are others concurring, which I can not now find.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will gladly assist the Senator in any way, if there is any book I can turn to for him.

Mr. MONEY. If I could see it I would be very glad.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If I knew what the Senator wanted, I would take great pleasure in helping him.

Mr. MONEY. Here is Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, a very good authority; everybody so considers. Here is what Cooley says:

Where, therefore, a part of a statute is unconstitutional, that fact does not authorize the courts to declare the remainder void also, unless all the provisions are connected in subject-matter, depending on each other, operating together for the same purpose, or otherwise so connected together in meaning that it can not be presumed the legislature would have passed the one without the other.

That is Cooley on limitation of power, who has used in this matter the very language of the decision in the case of Commonwealth vs. Hitchings, decided in 5 Gray, the supreme court of the State of Massachusetts. Judge Cooley goes on to say:

The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions may even be contained in the same section and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand though the last fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section, for the distribution into sections is purely artificial, but whether they are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. If, when the constitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained.

All that I have read from Cooley is literally quoted from decisions made in 5 Gray, case of Commonwealth vs. Hitchings, 485; Eels vs. People (5 Ill., 512); Robinson vs. Bidwell (22 Cal., 379), and quite a number of cases. Cooley continues:

But if its purpose is to accomplish a single object only, and some of its provisions are void, the whole must fail unless sufficient remains to effect the object without the aid of the invalid portion.

Now, Mr. President, I submit that nothing can be clearer than this. That is taken from the case of Santo vs. State (2 Iowa, 165).

In other words, the Senator from North Carolina bases his argument upon the conclusion in his mind that if the fifth section, "January 1, 1867, or prior to that time," etc., shall be declared unconstitutional, the balance will stand, and, as I said, that therefore those Confederate soldiers' children will be deprived of the right to vote, because they would be put in the class then with other illiterates. I think, from this author, who is admitted to be one of the best upon constitutional law and who here in writing does not give his own language, but the language in every instance of the court itself, I have shown conclusively that if the legislature of North Carolina intended that all these sections should go together and be part of one general plan of suffrage, when one falls to the ground the others must fall, too.

For if it is true, as the Senator states, that the object was to discriminate against the colored man, how, then, can he reconcile that statement with the fact that the legislature did not intend to save the white man and his descendants? In this section, then, that is a material part of the legislative intent. That is a part so material that he knows the legislature would not have passed the other section of the bill, and dared not have done it, without adding this section. There is not a man, I believe, in the State of North Carolina who believes that that legislature would have submitted to the people of that State for their ratification any such frame of law governing suffrage as would in any case exclude these people from the ballot, and therefore——

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to interrupt him, for I am very much interested?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not apparent upon the face of this legislation that if section 5, if that is the one, is declared unconstitutional, the remainder of the statute can stand and would operate alike upon everybody?

Mr. MONEY. It is apparent to my mind that every part is justly fitted to compose the whole. It is all open; one subject inseparably connected, one part compensatory for another part, and it all comes within the decisions of the different courts and of the Supreme Court of the United States. In that case when one falls they all fall.

Mr. DAVIS. But suppose one section is declared unconstitutional as affecting a certain class and the rest of the statute can stand affecting everybody. Why can not that alone be declared unconstitutional?

Mr. MONEY. Because it is not carrying out the legislative intent.

Mr. DAVIS. That is to be adjudged from the statute itself.

Mr. MONEY. The legislature intend a certain thing, and they have used language which, if adopted by the State, will secure that intent. To say now that a material part of that law can be elided from the measure and that the remainder can stand goes against Cooley on the constitutional limitation of power and every decision he quotes here and every one I have been able to find. And yet upon that the Senator from North Carolina has based a great deal of his argument, as I said.

I want to say also (of course he has explained to me that it was an inadvertence) it seems to me that as in the case of the Confederate soldiers here, that their children should not vote, he had based his argument upon the fact that the time "prior to that time" was not to be in the amendment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I did not so intend.

Mr. MONEY. I said I accepted your explanation.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I did not so intend.

Mr. MONEY. I made my statement clearly right, because that appeared from the statement you had printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say a moment ago that it is apparent the poll tax would apply to old men in North Carolina.

Mr. MONEY. No; I did not.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Nobody contends that, I think.

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood you to make that statement in your language in regard to the poll tax in answer to some question from the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MONEY. I made no allusion to any old men at all, for they do not generally apply.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will just mention now, in order to make that matter very clear, that under the constitution of North Carolina the limitation on the poll tax is from 21 to 50 years. Therefore no Confederate soldiers, unless some very small number who in a year or two will be out of reach, will be paying any poll tax at all.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I certainly understand the law to be in my State, and I so declared, that the descendants of Confederate soldiers would be deprived of that right unless they could pay their poll tax. That is what I said.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to speak of old men as though there was no limitation on age.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not think he intended to convey that idea.

Mr. MONEY. There are discriminations that are not considered unconstitutional, although it would apparently be a discrimination. Now, for instance, take the constitution of the State of Mississippi. It has never been objected to the provision there enacted, but it is evidently in some sense a discrimination that is an enlargement of the liberty and a softening of the rigor of other parts of the law—that is, in a case where a man is required to live within a State two years and one year in the county within which he proposes to vote, but clergymen are not required to live so long. Will any man tell me that that statute is unconstitutional because the rigor of the law has been relaxed as to clergymen, who, necessarily from their vocation, change their places of residence very frequently? Why, of course not.

My friend says some of the best people in his State can only make their mark. I have no doubt but that there are a great many of them. Some of the best men I ever knew and some of the most capable men in ordinary affairs of life could not read and had to make their mark. Those gentlemen are protected from the fact that they are voters or descendants of voters in 1867 or prior to that time, and certainly they have until 1908 to register. If they want to vote at all they will make that registry inside of those eight years, and it is impossible that any hardship should fall upon them.

I do not insist myself as strongly as some people do upon an educational qualification in my own State. Not being a part of the constitutional convention, but somewhat active in getting that convention ordered by the legislature, I was explicitly against the whole scheme of literacy as a test. Now, I may have been wrong about that, but I insist more upon brain capacity than I do upon a schoolbook education. I believe in that mysterious and far-reaching influence of blood, that accumulating, intensifying capacity resulting from generations of practice of the individual, until it at last becomes the instinct of the race. I believe in that capacity born in the forest of Germany, upon the banks of the Elbe, and the bogs of Friesland, growing as related by Sir Henry Maine and founded upon the development of the individual and respect for women.

I believe that you might educate the negroes through the common school—every single one of them—and that they would still be incapable of conceiving or executing a self-governing republic like this. He has never yet shown the capacity, I do not care where he may have been situated. In Africa, his native land, he never yet rose to a legislative assembly or a judicial tribunal. It is the oldest continent in the world, if geologists can be believed. Sir Roderick Murchison says so. The negro was there undisturbed for thousands of years. Never by his own effort has he risen to anything like semicivilization.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator allow me? I do not want to break into his speech, but I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. MONEY. All right.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I know the Senator does not want to intentionally misquote me.

Mr. MONEY. No; I do not intend to do so.

Mr. PRITCHARD. And to misquote the proposed amendment to the constitution. I want to call my distinguished friend's attention to the fact that the constitution does read that he shall pay his poll tax on or before the first day of March in the year in which he proposes to vote—that is, the tax which is due for the previous year.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is the only tax that he could pay at that time. Under the laws of North Carolina we give the tax list to the sheriff on the 1st day of September, and that tax list runs until the 1st day of the next September. Therefore he pays the tax on or before the 1st day of March of the year in which he proposes to vote. I take it that my distinguished friend will cheerfully make this correction, because he undertook to put me in the position of saying that the voter had to pay his poll tax in one year when the law required him to pay it in another year.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I contend that I am fully justified in taking the position I did. But he would not be able to pay his tax promptly on or before the 1st day of March in the year in which he was entitled to vote, for it is well known in that State that numbers of individuals do not pay their poll tax now until along in the summer months, and sometimes not until the fall months.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I did not misstate the Senator.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I know the Senator did not do it intentionally.

Mr. MONEY. I did not do it at all, because I read all the Senator said, if he will allow me.

Mr. PRITCHARD. But the Senator put an improper construction on the constitution; that is the trouble.

Mr. MONEY. I am going to read it. I certainly did not intend to misstate what the Senator said, and I do not think I did. Now, here is what the Senator says:

> How many men in your voting precinct, if called upon to-morrow to write any section of the Constitution in the English language—

Now, I invite the attention of the Senator to his language here, which I presume he corrected before he let it go to the press.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. It is the language I read, and the comments that I made upon it I think were entirely justified. I certainly would not want to do him any injustice.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I know you do not.

Mr. MONEY. And I will not permit myself to do so. For the Senator I have the very warmest regard. But I think it is fair in debate to comment upon the printed language, and to derive from it the meaning which generally belongs to that language.

> "Provided such persons shall have paid their poll tax as required by law." That is to say—

Now, I am using the language of the Senator from North Carolina—

> That is to say, the grandfather clause will not avail those citizens who, in consequence of poverty and misfortune, are unable to pay their poll tax on or before the 1st of March in the year in which they propose to vote, as provided in section 4 of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I think I was perfectly justified in saying that he was required to pay the poll tax which was then due. He certainly could not pay a poll tax that had not been assessed against him. That was all I contended, one way or the other; and I am sure my distinguished friend does not undertake to do me an injustice, because I know no man in the Chamber for whom I have a higher regard than the Senator who is now speaking.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, no; I do not intend to do the Senator an injustice. I am glad the Senator has made that explanation. All through the Senator's speech, however, and I believe it will have its effect in the State of North Carolina, as it ought, runs the idea that a great number of white people, sons of Confederate soldiers among others, are to be disfranchised by reason of illiteracy, because of the fact that the whole system falls together.

Now, if he can impress that by reiteration upon the minds of a large number of people in North Carolina, they may be deterred in their resolution to vote for these amendments, believing that they are the excluded or proscribed people. I cited the decisions which show that this is an unjustifiable conclusion, and I have read the text-book authority.

I was proceeding a while ago, Mr. President, to say that the people of North Carolina are justified, by every means that they could use, not unconstitutional, by every peaceful method, to reduce as far as possible a dangerous element in their voting population. As a matter of fact, the capacity of the white man to govern himself has never yet been finally demonstrated. We are making perhaps as grand an experiment as was ever made on the face of the earth, but we are just now approaching what I may call the crucial period in the history of this country, when it is soon to be determined whether the white man, with his inherent capacity, with his sustained resolution, his fixedness of purpose, his intelligence, and his public virtues, will be equal to the task of self-government, at which so many other peoples have failed before in human history.

Mr. President, there is an instinctive feeling of self-preservation in this race, in every race. As I was proceeding to say, we have reached the point in our history when it is to be shown whether the American white man is capable of continuing a self-governing Republic. Already there is a feeling cropping out everywhere, showing itself in the newspapers, in speeches made by the highest officers of the Army, in declarations made by the highest officers of the Navy, in a subserviency, if I may be permitted to use that word, shown in Congress to the will of the Executive—in every way there is a disposition to relax that constant vigilance which is said to be the price of liberty, and in a few years it is to be determined whether we have solved the question or not, whether we are capable of self-government, or whether we shall go the way of all other nations that valued freedom and independence as much as we have and that have failed. But that disposition of power to slip from the hands of the many to the hands of the few is always operating among men, as silently, as powerfully as the attraction of gravitation itself. And now in this struggle to maintain the right of self-government, why should anybody insist that any part of this Union, if otherwise it can be peacefully and constitutionally prevented, should inject into the body politic a devitalizing blood to render it still more incapable of self-government?

It gives me no pleasure to depreciate the African. I know that under certain conditions he has attained a certain degree of civilization, but it has never occurred anywhere on this globe except under the hot-house influence of European or American civilization, and it has always happened, unfortunately, that whenever the sustaining hand of white civilization has been withdrawn he has rapidly reverted to his original savagery. That is a weight that is continually and incessantly drawing us down; and if any State by constitutional methods can relieve itself of this incubus, nobody, in my opinion, who values the prosperity of this country and the permanence of free institutions should make objection.

Mr. President, we know the history of the African at home and in the oldest colonies in the world. We know what he has done under Spanish, English, Dutch, and French domination. We know to-day where the most intelligent black people in the world are found, where their conditions are best. They are those who have been emancipated from slavery in the United States and in the English, the Spanish, the French, and the Dutch West Indies, where they have been sustained like ships floating upon the tide of white civilization; and when that is withdrawn they immediately sink into the mud.

I would not particularly recite the history of Haiti but that Mr. Douglass, the great orator of the colored race, declared that he looked with anxiety to the fate of Haiti, because that was to decide the negro's capacity for self-government. What has been the history of Haiti, the most beautiful island in the world, with the most fertile soil and delightful climate, and where grow the most precious woods? The French brought to them the blessings of the Christian religion, paved roman roads, docks, forts, country houses, mills; and in a spasm of generosity the French, when "Égalité, fraternité, liberté," was the slogan, the intoxicating watchword of the French Revolution, handed it all over to the negroes a free gift.

What is their condition to-day? Those are the people we are to look to as the example of the capacity of the colored race for self-government. When their cities were burned, as they have been, in the numerous revolutions—I believe there have been twelve constitutions in the island in about forty years—they were never rebuilt. Whenever a road was worn out it was never repaired; whenever a mill or a plantation went down it was never rehabilitated. When the rice fields were overgrown with weeds, breeding pestilential fevers, they were never reclaimed. The coffee plantations have been neglected.

Their trade has materially declined. Not only that, but they have arrived at that condition when the Christian religion has been in part rejected; they have returned to fetichism and voodooism, to a belief in snake charmers, and to cannibalism in some places. These are unpleasant facts, but they are true and are taken from the records of the courts of that island, from the reports of consuls and ministers; they are found in the secular and religious press of that island; and to-day the man who is the hero of Haiti, the man who has "his day" on the 1st of January, as we have the birthday of George Washington on the 22d of February, is Dessalines. Dessalines was such a monster that his own people said, "He never spared a man in his anger nor a woman in his lust." He was the man who ordered the massacre of the mulattoes in the island, who plundered the treasury, and murdered and robbed every one of his political opponents.

Toussaint L'Ouverture, the only black man who ever became a great man in that country, who was the greatest of them all, is absolutely neglected, and nobody speaks of him. Why? He was a humane man, a man of brains and of character. He did not impress himself upon his own people, and they speak of the great man Dessalines, a man who slaughters his political opponents and winds up every revolution with a massacre, who plunders both public and private property on the island, as "a strong man." That is nominally a republic—a personal despotism—which has existed there through all these years.

This account was not written by a man who was an enemy of those people. It was written by one of the most distinguished men of the British Empire, by a man who was there sixteen years as their friend, and he said in the second edition of his work that the first was not written in ink, but in rose water. That writer, the great historian, essayist, and philosopher, Mr. Froude, could not accept these conclusions at first. He could not believe such conditions were possible. He attributed the failure of those people to the fact of their French civilization and Catholic religion. He then went to the English West Indies; and in that delightful book, which we have all read, The English in the West Indies, he formulates his conclusions as to the mental and moral incapacity of the African race for any self-government.

Now, under the stimulating effects of ambition it is quite natural that a heathen nation should extend its conquests on every side, attain supremacy, and acquire some of the arts and principles of civilization, but in my judgment—I do not want to be metaphysical or very philosophical in a speech of this kind—there is a limit to the capacity for improvement of every people in the world.

We know that Egypt for thousands of years was an empire upon the banks of the Nile, in that narrow belt, which was the glory of the world. Egypt built the greatest temples, the greatest pyramids; Egypt had the finest architecture and the finest literature of the world. The Egyptians had advanced their religious views until they almost reached the height of the Christian religion; and for three or four thousand years they held the supremacy in the world of literature, of arms, and of commerce; but finally they reached a point where there was no more development, and for two thousand years they have stood as silent as their sphinx, unable to progress, unable to recede; the individual disappeared, the type survived. Everything was fixed, everything was conventional; they had reached the limit of their capacity for development.

The Chinese or yellow race developed a civilization five thousand years anterior to the birth of Christ. They made certain progress; they built cities; they built canals; they invented the mariner's compass, writing paper, gunpowder, and thousands of things which were unknown for hundreds of years in the West; and yet they, too, reached the limit of their capacity. They got to that point beyond which there is no initiative, no self-suggestion, where it was impossible for them to advance. They have stood fixed and conventional for thousands of years.

We now have the African race, which has never made any progress, except in the civilization and under the reflected light of the white people and where they have white civilization surrounding them. When that is removed, they retrograde downward with a velocity that is amazing, as is shown in the example of Haiti since the year 1800, when it was turned over to them as a gift by the French. Yet, because they are here, gentlemen will insist that this incapable mass shall become a part of the body politic; that they shall share with white men the responsibilities of government. Who will hold this generation or the next responsible for civilization and literature and the refinements of life? The black man? No; but the white man. Yet this proposition to share with them this responsibility seems an idea almost intolerable when we must feel, every one of us, that our own capacity, undiluted by such an element, is being taxed to the utmost. Some of them have become orators, because oratory springs from the emotions and not from reason; but I defy any gentleman to show me an example where government has been shared with this inferior race and the result has been good.

We all know that Great Britain freed her slaves in 1832, and paid $100,000,000 to their owners, and that Jamaica, one of the most beautiful islands in the world—we ought to have it, by the bye, although I am not an expansionist—that Jamaica was given what the English call a "responsible government;" that is to say, they had a right to elect their own council, make their own tariff laws, and every other law, only receiving a governor by appointment of the Crown. As soon as this was done, the franchise was conferred upon the negro just as it was here after the civil war. What was the result? The historian tells us that the negro gentlemen who got a few hundred dollars wanted to be magistrates, because the English gentlemen were all magistrates and had power to commit people to jail and to punish them for minor offenses. They were not quite capable, but they wanted that office, and then arose a desire to have the land without paying rent. Then came an armed insurrection and a bloody official execution, until the sense of England was outraged, and the white people of Jamaica said to the Crown, "We surrender this responsible government. It is impossible to share its duties with this race;" and the Crown took back this largess of liberty, and Jamaica became what is called a Crown colony.

In Natal a responsible government was proposed. The administration of Great Britain at that time—that has been several years ago—said to the people of Natal, You can have a responsible government whenever you are willing, but you must share it with the blacks. They met in convention and they sat there six weeks. The condition included also the elective franchise in the hands of the Kaffirs. The Kaffirs are the most superior Africans of whom we have any knowledge. These English gentlemen, colonists and farmers, concluded, after six weeks' deliberation, that they would not have free government—responsible government—with even the right to fix their own tariff against the mother country and their own fiscal laws, because they were unwilling to share the government with their black neighbors.

So with the most enlightened of the dark races—the brown man in Hindostan, the negro in the West Indies, the negro in Africa, the aborigines of Australia. Except only the fast perishing Maoris of New Zealand, none are permitted to share in the government.

Mr. President, I want to abide by the Constitution of the United States. I do not want a State to pass any act that infringes that Constitution. I know the Supreme Court would declare it unconstitutional if it did, and why should we kick against the pricks? I say, however, that the people of the South are justified, and it would be inexcusable if they failed, by every constitutional measure in their power, to preserve in their own hands the power of government in their own States, they being responsible for their welfare, their education, their business interests, and the interests of civilization.

My friend the honorable Senator from North Carolina says there is no danger of the domination of the negro. That is true, so far as the whole State is concerned, I presume, but is it true as to all parts of the State? Does the condition of affairs that was presented to the public in Wilmington, N. C., in 1898 show that the people, at least in that section, should not use every means possible to rid themselves of the government inflicted upon them by the negro vote? Should not every white man in the whole State of North Carolina and everywhere, whatever his party politics may be, sympathize with people who were oppressed as they were by ignorance and vice?

I have here a statement made by a gentleman in the other House, Mr. BELLAMY. I shall ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on page 243 down to the end of what is marked on page 245. That illustrates the condition of things in Wilmington, N. C., which was a more potent factor in urging the legislature of North Carolina to this measure than anything else; and the pledge which my friend says was made that the blacks should not be interfered with was, as I am informed, that the legislature itself would pass no law restricting the franchise in any way, and now they propose a scheme of franchise that is to be submitted to these very people themselves.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. MONEY. Yes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. In reply to that statement, I desire to say that the Senator will find, by referring to a statement which was issued by the Democratic executive committee, entitled "A reply to the People's Party Handbook," a statement that the Democrats, if elected, would not submit any proposition which would deprive anyone of the right to vote.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator give me the date of that?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; I can give it to you with pleasure, if you have the RECORD there containing my speech.

Mr. MONEY. Let the Secretary first read from the book which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Very well.

The Secretary read as follows:

John D. Bellamy, the contestee, in the case of Oliver H. Dockery, contestant, against John D. Bellamy, contestee, in the case of contest in the Sixth Congressional district in North Carolina, for the contestant's seat in the Fifty-sixth Congress, before J. J. Fowler and T. E. Wallace, notaries public at Wilmington, New Hanover County, N. C., on the 10th day of April, 1899, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

Q. What is your name, age, and place of residence?

A. John D. Bellamy; just 45 last week; residence, Wilmington, N. C.

Q. Are you the Congressman elected from this district?

A. I am.

Q. Did you read the testimony of one S. M. Cole, a witness for Oliver H. Dockery, the contestant, taken at Laurinburg, February 27 last, in the present case?

A. I did.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If the Senator desires, I will read this.

Mr. MONEY. What is the date?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is on page 1059 of the RECORD containing my remarks, and reads as follows——

Mr. MONEY. I merely want the date.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not remember the date of this circular.

Mr. MONEY. I do not want the text. I have that.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I want to show the Senator what they said in the text.

Mr. MONEY. I know what they said.

Mr. PRITCHARD. They said they would not submit any proposition to the people to proscribe anyone.

Mr. MONEY. You spoke of that the other day. I want the date.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is what the handbook says.

Mr. MONEY. I want to know the date—that is the essential thing.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I have not the date when the circular was issued.

Mr. MONEY. I am sorry you have not. I hope the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading, and read as follows:

Q. Please state in substance that testimony.

A. One S. M. Cole stated that in a private conversation had with me at Old Hundred that I said that they, meaning the Democrats, were going to have the election if they had to carry it at the point of the bayonet. He further stated upon a question in reference to it who was present. He said that no one was present except himself and me.

Q. Will you please state whether the testimony given by S. M. Cole in that particular was a truthful quoting of what you said?

A. I will state that his statement is absolutely and positively false; that I did not entertain such a thought; I did not express such a thought, and would have been opposed to any such idea if I had thought that my party desired or expected to resort to such a thing. I will state that I never saw the man before that day, and never have seen him since from that day to this; that I do recollect upon going from Gibson Station, where I had spoken the day previous, to Old Hundred to take the train, while waiting for the approach of the train I saw several parties who were said to have been voters. I sought an introduction to every one of them, and had something pleasant to say to each, and I think possibly, and exceedingly very probable, that I spoke pleasantly to this man Cole, but as to using such language or intimating such language or entertaining such a thought, I will say every word of it is untrue.

Q. Did you read the depositions of one Secrest, a witness for Oliver H. Dockery, the contestant in this case, taken at Monroe, Union County, in the present case?

A. Yes; I did read it.

Q. Will you state, in substance, what that testimony was?—A. Although I hardly think it is necessary to contradict the statement of Mr. Secrest, as his character has been shown by a number of witnesses to be very bad, I will do so. He stated that he was present at a political speaking where I addressed the assemblage at a schoolhouse in Union County, and that I stated that the people of Wilmington were armed with Winchester rifles and were going to carry the election if it was necessary to shoot down the negroes. I say in reply to that, that statement of Mr. Secrest is absolutely false. What I did say, and what has been testified to by other witnesses who heard me, was this: After I had discussed the policy and principles of the Democratic party and its position upon national questions, I came down to the question of the bad government of North Carolina under fusion rule in State affairs, and then finally in local matters. I stated to the assemblage as a reason why the Fusionists should be hurled from power and control in North Carolina was that they had subjected the citizens of Wilmington, Newbern, and Greenville to the horrors of misgovernment and negro domination and all that that implied, and after briefly stating how the town of Greenville had been gerrymandered and put under negro control, and how the city of Newbern had been likewise treated, I then came to the city of Wilmington, where I resided and was familiar with the state of affairs.

I stated that as a result of Fusion legislation the city had been put under negro control, substantially; that although the white people owned about 97 per cent of the property and paid that much of the taxes of the city, that we had a board of aldermen with a white man for mayor who didn't own a foot of land in the county and paid comparatively little or no taxes; that three or four of the board of aldermen were negroes; that forty of the magistrates were negroes; that from fourteen to seventeen of the thirty on the police force were negroes; that nearly all of the deputy sheriffs in the county were negroes; that the register of deeds of the county was a negro; that every health officer of the city, a very important position, was held by negroes; that one of the three county commissioners was a negro; and the result of it was that a horrible state of misgovernment had been brought about; that night after night burglaries and robberies took place in town without any detection; that within about 800 feet of the city hall six burglaries had been committed within ten days without a detection; that one burglar had been arrested in a lady's residence, a negro burglar, was captured and held by the ladies until a police officer arrived, and that, although the offense was punishable by death and not bailable, he was taken to the city hall and there let off on his own recognizance or a straw bond, I have forgotten now which, and the negro escaped; that murders and crimes of all characters were of constant occurrence; that within about a year six murders had taken place in the county; that the negroes showed an utter disrespect for and defiance of the law; that the city authorities, in the exercise of their discretion upon sanitary matters, had located a hospital for infectious diseases on the outskirts of town, and the negroes, several hundred in number, a complete mob, armed with guns, pistols, and other weapons, went out, attacked, shot into, and burned it down, and the mayor and policemen, although remonstrating, were powerless to resist it, and none of the said negroes were ever arrested or tried for the offense; that in the trial of causes in the court-house it was impossible to convict a negro of crime where a question of credibility arose between white witnesses and negro witnesses; that the juries composed partially of whites and partially of blacks would retire and a hung jury was the result, the negroes always voting solidly in the jury box in favor of the acquittal of the negro, if a negro was on trial.

I recollect especially reciting an instance of my own experience, where I told them that I prosecuted for Mr. Hamme, a very gallant and reputable citizen, a hat merchant of this city, who was assaulted in broad daylight in his store by Richard Holmes, a negro policeman, and struck between the eyes with a pair of brass knuckles and felled senseless to the floor, and that on three trials, although the defendant himself, Holmes, did not take the stand, that the jury, although the evidence was uncontradicted, failed to agree a single one of the three times, standing the first time nine whites for conviction and three negroes for acquittal; the second trial taking place at the next term of court, all the white men on the jury stood for conviction and the negroes on the jury for acquittal; on the third trial, which took place at a subsequent term, it likewise stood eight or nine—I have forgotten the number—whites for conviction and three or four negroes for acquittal, according to the number of negroes on the jury, and that finally the Fusion solicitor, although I myself was associated in the prosecution, nol prossed the case without even consulting me; that day after day white ladies while walking the streets of the city were insulted, and in one instance a reputable young lady going to the cemetery was shoved from the sidewalk by a negro woman and struck over the head with an umbrella; that the daughter of one of the ablest divines of the city was brusquely hurled up against the fence and bruised by a negro on the streets in the broad daytime; that indecent remarks were made to ladies walking the streets by negroes, and complaint after complaint being made to the city authorities, which were the ones I have before related to you, they found themselves unable to repress it; that property and life were not safe, and that good order could not be secured in the town; that the city authorities were totally inefficient to secure it; that the chamber of commerce, a representative business body of the city, presided over by a Republican as president, passed resolutions stating the city authorities were unable to secure law and order substantially, and calling upon our people as a matter of business and self-preservation, without regard to politics, to change the existing order of affairs.

That in consequence of this demoralization that I had been informed that the white people of the city had ordered several thousand Winchester rifles to protect the lives, the property, and the welfare of the people, and that I deplored any conflict, and that I hoped none would come, but if it did come and a race riot ensued that a very fatal result would come to the negroes. I did not state in that speech or in any speech made in the campaign that the whites were going to carry the election by force or fraud or any illegal means, and if I had thought so I say most positively that I would not have countenanced it, and I would have advised against it; and I say further that as far as my knowledge, information, and belief extends, there was no such purpose on the part of the Democratic party or the white people to carry the election by force or fraud, but there was a determination by every legal, peaceable, and energetic means, such as argument and the like would prompt, as a matter of self-preservation to our people, to hurl from power the Fusionists then in control and restore peace, law, order, and good government to our distracted State. I will state further that having made those statements in that speech and substantially the same thing in many others that I delivered during the campaign, I now again affirm that the statements made are a statement of the true condition of affairs as they existed in Wilmington, and if I have failed in the statement, it was in not stating other and greater wrongs which actually occurred and which I forgot to mention, among them being the publication in a negro newspaper published in the city of a vile and slanderous attack upon the virtue and reputation of the white women of our State.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to read just two paragraphs in a letter addressed to Senator J. C. PRITCHARD by Mr. W. H. Chadbourn, who, I understand, was a postmaster. Among other things, he says:

For the sake of any fancied political advantage I can not afford to make a one-sided presentation of the situation in this city and county, and by naming only the white officials and leaving out the colored doubtless some advantage has been taken and a false color given to the actual situation, to which the business people and taxpayers, regardless of party, have made serious objections.

As a matter of fact, there are in this county thirty-six colored magistrates and a colored register of deeds, and various other minor officials, besides some Presidential appointees, and the property owners, taxpayers, and business men seriously object to this state of affairs, and there now exists here the most intense feeling against any sort of negro domination.

Mr. President, I think the apprehension of negro domination is quite justifiable, at least in that part of the State, and we know what happened in the fall of 1898 in that city. Do not the white people in other parts of the State owe something to their friends and kindred living in Wilmington and in the twelve black counties of that State? If they can protect them from these disorders, and if the taxpayers and the business men, without regard to party, labor under such intolerant ignorance and corruption and vice as is depicted there in the statement of Mr. BELLAMY, a member of the other House, under oath, and by Mr. Chadbourn, who says he is a Republican appointed by the President as postmaster there, then ought they not to be permitted to do so, and not be intimidated by speeches made here or elsewhere?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that some time prior to the date of the letter from Mr. Chadbourn which he has read, Mr. Chadbourn addressed a letter to me, and said that the statement that there was negro domination in the city of Wilmington was without foundation.

I also desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that a number of gentlemen waited upon him, as I am informed—I do not know whether it is true or not—and with a pistol at his head they induced him to write the second letter from which the Senator has quoted. I shall ask to incorporate in the RECORD the first letter which Mr. Chadbourn wrote to me, which completely negatives the statement which my distinguished friend has read.

Mr. MONEY. I admit that a pistol at the head is a very persuasive thing.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It seems to have been in that instance.

Mr. MONEY. It seems to me the last statement made by the Senator from North Carolina is contradictory of the first, and the first is contradictory of the second, that there has been a better development of things since the first letter was written; but certainly the Senator will not deny the statement made by Mr. BELLAMY under oath that forty of the magistrates were negroes, and that many other officers of that city and county were also negroes, and the condition of things which existed there during the time of that canvass.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am not prepared to deny what Mr. BELLAMY has said about the matter, but I am prepared to show that there is not a single instance wherein one of the colored justices of the peace to whom my distinguished friend refers ever attempted to exercise jurisdiction in a case wherein a white man was concerned or interested, either in property or otherwise.

Mr. MONEY. That may be true.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MONEY. I do not doubt but that you think so; but it is a very queer magistrate who discards jurisdiction because of the color of the man who comes before him—a very queer sort of a magistrate.

Now, this condition of things exists in a part of North Carolina. There is not a particle of doubt about it, and the legislature has sought to put an end to it. Now, my friend thinks—he has here so stated in his speech, I believe; I am pretty sure he did—that one of the results of the restriction would be some Congressional action, taken under the fourteenth amendment, to reduce the representation in the other House, and therefore that North Carolina and other Southern States would lose a numerical proportion of their influence. I want to ask my friend, will he vote for a resolution or a bill that reduces the representation of the State of North Carolina if these constitutional amendments are adopted and are not declared unconstitutional?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, realizing as I do that the provision of the fourteenth amendment to which my friend refers is mandatory, I feel that it is my duty, as well as the duty of the Senator, to do everything to preclude the possibility of the enactment of such a law, and therefore I shall do all I can to see that every man residing in the State which I have the honor in part to represent is accorded the right to vote, in order that he may be counted in the Federal enumeration, as contemplated by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MONEY. The remark of the Senator is very creditable to him, but no answer at all to my question. My question was this: If this constitutional amendment is carried by the vote of the sovereign citizens of North Carolina and the courts shall declare it is constitutional, then, whether, under the fourteenth amendment, if a bill is proposed here to curtail her representation in Congress, he will vote for it or not?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I never cross a bridge until I get to it. It will be time enough to talk about that matter when the people of North Carolina adopt such an amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I think myself the prudence and discretion of the Senator are very sound. It certainly would not do for him to say here and to go before the people of North Carolina, for whom he has such an affection and such care, and say to them that he would vote to cut down their representation because a measure was passed which was declared constitutional by the courts. I for one do not believe that any serious attempt will ever be made anywhere to cut down the representation in Congress because of the restriction to vote. I do not believe that the public mind in any section of this country will entertain seriously such a proposition as that. Every man of intelligence will recognize that the progress of every State in this Union is material to the progress of every other State, and that a vicious and ignorant vote anywhere is felt everywhere within the confines of this country——

Mr. CHANDLER rose.

Mr. MONEY. Even in the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is, how does he justify his present attitude? The Senator almost persuaded me in his remarks a few minutes ago to treat this as a white man's question. Now, assuming it to be a white man's question alone, upon what principle does he advocate the elimination—I will use that word; it is a mild word—of the negro from the suffrage, the suppression of the colored vote at the South, and yet advocate the 39 Congressional votes and the votes in the electoral college which are given to the South by reason of the negro population? How can the Senator in all fairness say on the one hand that the fifteenth amendment shall be nullified by the suppression——

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon. I do not say that.

Mr. CHANDLER. By the suppression of the colored vote and that the fourteenth amendment shall not be enforced by reducing representation? Is not that a fair question?

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes; it is a fair question.

Mr. CHANDLER. How do you advocate holding on to the 39 Congressional and electoral votes because of the seven or eight million colored people and yet propose to destroy the colored vote?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir; that is a fair question, and it is put with the usual adroitness and skill of my friend the Senator from New Hampshire; and I am perfectly ready to answer him. According to the original meaning of the makers of the Constitution there was no representation based upon votes at all. The negro, though a chattel, was represented in two-thirds. Women and children were represented as well as negroes. They are citizens. The right to vote is not a natural right. It does not inhere in mere citizenship. It is a result of political action. It is the result of law.

I am not willing to pass any amendment that I believe comes in conflict with the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. It would be a work of supererogation for me to favor such a proposition, because the Supreme Court would at once declare it null and void. But I want the Senator to say what he would do in such a case. I am willing to retain the representation, if it will suit the Senator from New Hampshire, because it represents human beings whether they vote or not. My children do not vote, but they are represented. My wife does not vote, but she is represented. Thousands of people do not vote, and yet they are represented. I did not say that the power did not reside in Congress to reduce representation, but I do doubt the wisdom of exercising it. That is a question which I will debate, as my friend says, when we get to it.

But I stated that I had such confidence in the good sense and the public virtue of the people of all sections of this country—North, South, East, West—as to feel that they would not deliberately retard the progress of the Southern States by attempting to fix negro suffrage upon them if it can be avoided in a peaceful and constitutional way, and that the people there (I care not whether they vote or not) are entitled to representation. Now, we did not go to war, as my friend from North Carolina seems to think, when we achieved our independence of Great Britain to secure the right to vote, but to secure representation if taxed. That is all. For whom? For everybody, represented by a few, as a matter of fact.

A statement has been made here, and I may as well allude to it now, about the State of Mississippi. My friend addressed himself somewhat to my State the other day as an example of those States which had used unconstitutional methods (that was his language) in carrying elections. Yet, on the only attempt to try the constitutionality of the new constitution of Mississippi, abridging the right to vote, the constitution was declared to be constitutional. Then where are the unconstitutional methods? Was it individual action? Was it organized political action? I can say to the Senator that he can not point me to a complaint made of fraud, intimidation, or violence in Mississippi since the year 1876, when the great civic revolution was had, not one.

I will say, as I said the other day, that one Democrat held his seat here upon a certificate based upon an election technical in nature, and that that gentleman was unseated and a colored man was seated by a Democratic House, and the ousted gentleman went over the next day to the Republican party on the ground that the Democrats had not stood by him. I say that another contest was waged in what is called the black district of Mississippi, the Delta country, and then the contestant attempted to prove that certain practices were used to convey over the river and get rid of certain colored voters, and other offenses of that sort to the prejudice of a fair election; and it all fell to the ground, and the Republican committee kept the contestee in his seat.

Now, gentlemen, if we have pursued unconstitutional methods—the court has not said so as to our statutes and our constitution—if we have pursued unfair and unconstitutional methods, there has been no charge against any organization or any individuals at the polls at any of the elections since 1876. I defy any gentleman to show me one, and I object that the fair fame of my State should be assailed unless the gentleman can produce some proof of the assertions he makes.

There has been no disturbance in Mississippi. There is absolute freedom there; and I want to tell my friend here that the year after the constitution was adopted 10,000 negroes came from his State, where they had an unrestricted right to vote as much as the white man, and emigrated to Mississippi and are living there to-day, and they have lately come, this winter, in such numbers from the State of Georgia into Mississippi that the farmers of Georgia have appealed to the authorities to protect them from the invasion of the agents who are carrying the negroes to Mississippi, where they are to be trampled under foot by unconstitutional methods, as some would have you believe. Negroes are still coming to Mississippi. They seem to understand very well what they want, and they get it when they go there. They get a good wage, fertile land, and plenty of employment.

I was alluding a while ago to the difficulties of government under any circumstances. We thought when we established this great Republic that we had solved the problem. We saw the Republics of Greece, of Venice, of Rome, and others perish away and merge into monarchies; and we thought that by having States bound together by one Constitution, with a Federal head and two depositories of political power, one power could never absorb them all; and we recognized, as we thought, in that fact the safety and permanence of popular institutions. Now we are called upon to say what this State shall do in the election. In other words, we are to issue from this Chamber a pronunciamento, a declaration of opinion as to the constitutionality of a measure not voted upon. There is no disposition to take it into the courts and make a test of it. A case can be made instantly in Louisiana, where the law is the same. But it is to deter the free and independent voter of North Carolina from declaring his own sovereign will at the polls. I hope that no man in North Carolina will permit himself to be diverted from his intention, whatever it may be, to vote exactly as he thinks best for the protection and the prosperity and the well-being of his State.

Mr. President, the question that has now been brought up is not likely to end very soon, and I think the foreign questions that are likely to press upon the attention of the American Congress will still further put in the background this contention about the vote of the negroes. We are engaged in a contest for self-preservation while we are expanding. While imperialism has its advocates, there are some people who still want to preserve the Republic, and this effort to purify the governing element of this country, as far as is safe under the Constitution, is one that is so obviously right and proper that I do not see how any assault can be made upon it except for political advantage.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina declared the other day that all these methods were used simply to keep the Democratic party in power. That may be true, according to his way of thinking about it, but it was not the idea in my State. The idea was simply to put the intelligence and the public virtue of that State in power as best for the State, for the interests not only of the white people and the Democratic party, but of the black people and the Republican party in that State. When we look at the genesis of this matter, and when we see through these miserable six years of reconstruction, more humiliating and degrading and terrible to the South than the four years of bloody war, when we saw measures declared by our own courts to be unconstitutional passed day after day, despite the protest of the President, and when we recollect that suffrage, when it was proposed for the negro in the South, met its strongest resistance in this Chamber and in the House from such men as Roscoe Conkling and Oliver P. Morton and men of that character, who were the founders and the champions of the Republican party, then we recollect the purpose for which it was put upon us. It was done for two purposes—to perpetuate Republican rule and to punish the South.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does not the Senator know that impartial suffrage was adopted because the Southern States rejected the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know that, but I suppose it is true if you say so. I will admit it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will say to the Senator that that is a very bold charge he has made.

Mr. MONEY. I say I do not know it, but I will take it if you say so.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nobody regrets more than I do that the Southern Senators, the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Mississippi, have reopened this Southern question.

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon. I did not open it.

Mr. CHANDLER. But something is due to historic truth. The Senator must know very well, because I do not know of any more careful student of American history than he, or of the history of the world, for that matter, that the Southern States rejected the fourteenth amendment, which simply said if the negro did not vote he should not be counted in the basis of representation.

Mr. BERRY. It said more than that.

Mr. CHANDLER. And then, and for that reason only, impartial suffrage was enacted by the Congress of the United States and the fifteenth amendment was adopted. If it had not been for the rejection of the fourteenth amendment by Andrew Johnson's reconstructed governments, the fifteenth amendment would never have been adopted.

Mr. BERRY. The fourteenth amendment did much more.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not much.

Mr. BERRY. It disfranchised a large number of people, as I recollect.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to reply to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will reply to the Senator from Arkansas first, and then the Senator can pitch into me.

Mr. MONEY. No; I will not do that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The disfranchising clause simply provided that where any citizen of the United States had taken an oath as an officer of the United States to support the Constitution of the United States and had then gone into the rebellion he should be disfranchised until Congress, by a two-thirds vote, removed the disability. That is all; and the Senator, I think, ought to admit that that was a very light disfranchisement. Congress went to work and proceeded almost immediately, by two-thirds vote, to remove all the disabilities. So the case which I made to the Senator from Mississippi, before the Senator from Arkansas kindly interposed, was that negro suffrage was not imposed upon the South by the legislation of Congress until after the fourteenth amendment had been unanimously rejected by every one of Andrew Johnson's reconstructed governments. I ask the Senator now, in order to give him a text to start on—he needs no text, however—whether he approves the Southern rejection of the proposition that if the negro did not vote the negro population should be excluded from the basis of representation.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me one word?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I had no disposition or intention to get into this debate, but the Senator from New Hampshire recited a part of the fourteenth amendment and then ceased. One of the strong reasons why that amendment was rejected by the South is that we were called upon to put a brand upon the men who had previously held office of any character and who had served in the Southern army. We were asked to vote to disfranchise the men who had done exactly the same thing that we had done, and we did not feel that it would be honorable and just on our part—those of us who did not come under this disfranchising clause—to vote it upon our men, with whom we had been associated, and who had been guilty of no greater wrong, if wrong at all, than we had. I deny that we were ever guilty of any wrong, but certainly there was no difference in the character of the acts of those who had held office and those who did not, and there were many of us who did not come under that clause who were unwilling to vote it upon our associates. We refused to do it, and I have always rejoiced that we refused.

Mr. CHANDLER. The only thing I say is that the rejection of the fourteenth amendment is what caused the adoption of the fifteenth amendment, and not the motive which the Senator from Mississippi so ungenerously imputed to the whole Northern people.

Mr. MONEY. I did not impute it to the whole Northern people. There was a gallant band here that opposed it the whole time. They were members of the Democratic party and some of them were leaders of the Republican party.

I want to answer my friend the Senator from New Hampshire. He says that because Mississippi refused to ratify the fourteenth amendment negro enfranchisement was put upon us. Mississippi had no representation here, nor did she at that time have her new constitution. In other words, she had not resumed her Federal relation when the fourteenth amendment passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was a reconstructed State government in Mississippi. Will the Senator tell me who was the provisional governor appointed by President Johnson?

Mr. MONEY. It was under the military government of the department commander, and Adelbert Ames——

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; there was a provisional governor appointed by President Johnson. I can think of his name in a moment. The Mississippi reconstructed State government, through its legislature, by an almost unanimous vote, rejected the fourteenth amendment. The Senator from Arkansas has stated the reason that influenced him and others. I do not deny that they may have been partly influenced by that argument, but I stand upon the proposition that negro suffrage was brought upon the South solely by reason of the rejection, by the reconstructed South, of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. MONEY. Permit me to correct the history of my friend the Senator from New Hampshire. In the first place, there was no provisional governor appointed for Mississippi. In the second place, the people elected Benjamin Humphreys as governor. In the third place, he was ejected by bayonet. Yes, I believe Sharkey was appointed. General Ames became the military governor, and a military governor, who had never had a shirt washed in the State before he came there, signed his own certificate to this Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Was not Mr. Sharkey—the Senator called the name—the provisional governor?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator for teaching me the word. Governor Sharkey, under the direction of Andrew Johnson, who certainly was a friend of the South after a little while until he got over his rage; and the provisional government was organized in Mississippi, a legislature was elected by the people of Mississippi without negro suffrage and without the disfranchisement of a single Southerner, and that reconstructed legislature almost unanimously rejected the fourteenth amendment. That is history. The Senator knows that.

Mr. MONEY. I am willing to accept it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I knew you would. I want you to tell me whether you think, on the whole, at this distance of time, thirty-three or four years, when we ought to be done with fighting these old and sectional questions, but since you introduced them, it was a wise thing for the South to reject the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. MONEY. In the first place, the Senator is mistaken about who introduced this measure. The Senator who introduced this business is the Republican Senator from North Carolina. I had no such intention.

Mr. CHANDLER. He introduced his resolution, and without hearing from him one word about it—perhaps he might have gone up and withdrawn the resolution if the Senator had hinted that it was disagreeable to him—without hearing a word from him, the Senator from Alabama takes the floor and maligns the North, and he is being followed up by the other Senators from the South, and very unwisely, as I think, very mistakenly, as I think, very injuriously, as I think, they are reopening the whole question——

Mr. MONEY. Do you not think you have had enough of my time?

Mr. CHANDLER. The whole Southern question upon the floor of the Senate, without the slightest occasion for it.

Mr. MONEY. I am not going to try to take care of the Senator from Alabama. I am sorry he is not here to take care of himself. He is quite capable of doing that. If he has maligned anybody in the North——

Mr. CHANDLER. I will show him when he comes back from his quest for reelection.

Mr. MONEY. As long as our historical reminiscences are being brushed up by the ever-elert and bright Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that when we voted upon a constitution it was that submitted to us by the Federal Government, and in that election every single nigger in the whole State was permitted to vote upon the question whether he was to be a voter or not. It did disfranchise the very best people in that State—the very best. The cream of the State was disfranchised, and we rejected it, although the negroes voted, and it was a very strong vote.

There is one more matter that I want to allude to, and I know I am detaining the Senate too long. The Senator from North Carolina asserted the other day that the very fact that a very small poll of votes occurred in Mississippi and other Southern States was proof to his mind that they were prevented from voting; that they would have voted if they were not prevented from voting. He alluded to the fact that at the last election only about 48,000 votes were cast in Mississippi, and that the total white vote is 134,000. I do not know whether that is true or not. According to the census of 1890 it was 119,000. Does he think that the 48,000 white men prevented the balance of the white men from voting? Who can compel a man to vote? You can lead a horse to water, but you can not make him drink. Has not this thing occurred elsewhere without any challenge?

I explained at that time that the reason why the poll was so small at the regular election was this: The nominations had been settled at primaries or mass conventions. Then the voting force of the party turned out and the election was with such small opposition that it was a mere ratification. That may be unwise or not, but it does not argue anything unlawful or anything unconstitutional, because our State provides by law for a system of primaries, and consequently the thing being already done, simply to be ratified, the people did not trouble themselves to go to the polls and vote. So it can not be considered, even remotely, to be evidence that anybody was prevented from voting.

Let us go to some other State. I will take the State of Massachusetts, and I do not select Massachusetts with any intention whatever of in any manner derogating from her dignity, because I believe it is one of the greatest Commonwealths in this Union in every respect. But here is what Massachusetts did: In 1890 she cast 285,000 votes, and yet she had 665,000 voters. What became of the other 400,000 votes? Will the Senator from North Carolina rise and say that these 285,000 prevented the other 400,000 from voting? What reason is there, then, in such a charge?

Mr. TILLMAN. In the absence of the Senator from North Carolina, I think the Senator from New Hampshire ought to answer the question. He is a neighbor of that State.

Mr. MONEY. I would be glad if anybody would tell me, although I am not asking for information. I am only illustrating the point.

Mr. CHANDLER. Any question that either of the two Senators will put to me I will be most happy to answer, if I understand it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Mississippi can repeat his question.

Mr. MONEY. I do not want any answer to the question, particularly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire has invited me, and I will ask him the question, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The question was why it was that in 1890 the State of Massachusetts polled only 285,000 votes, when she has a voting population of 665,000?

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senator from Mississippi tells me why they do not cast more than 20,000 or 30,000 votes in Mississippi——

Mr. MONEY. You have not been listening to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. You are dodging. You do not usually do that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not both Senators at once. When the two Senators have explained the pitifully small vote in their two States, I will examine the returns from Massachusetts and see why——

Mr. MONEY. Please do not leave.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am simply going to get a vote to confute the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. Do not leave, please. I do not want you to get the book right now. You have enough. The Senator, as I said the other day, was talking to somebody else and not listening to me. I was meeting the argument of the Senator from North Carolina. You were not paying attention to me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have got the book. Now, go ahead.

Mr. MONEY. All right. I was endeavoring to answer the argument of the Senator from North Carolina that because of the small vote in Mississippi and South Carolina and other States necessarily those who did not were prevented from voting. I denied that proposition. I gave the reason why the vote was small. Then, I said, take the State of Massachusetts, which in 1890 polled 285,000 votes and yet had 665,000 voters. I have not called upon the Senator or anybody else to explain why there were not more. It is their own affair. No law can compel a man to vote. He can go fishing if he wants to or do anything else that pleases him on that day; but if Massachusetts dropped 400,000 votes in one election, why should not Mississippi drop a hundred thousand? Why should it not be done in the good old State of Connecticut? I see my friend the distinguished Senator here present. In 1890 Connecticut voted 125,000, and yet had 224,000 votes. Now, no one questions or should question the right of those people to stay away from the polls.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In what year was that?

Mr. MONEY. In 1890. Those voters had a right to stay away. They have a right to vote as they please and no man has a right to question them, and no man has a right to impeach the State where such things have obtained. It is simply the individual preferring to do one thing to another thing.

But I want to say if there had been in the State of Massachusetts or in the State of Connecticut or in the State of South Carolina or in the State of Mississippi a question that would be vital to the interests of the people of that country and parties were close you would have seen the whole vote polled, just as in 1896, I believe, when one vote was cast for every two and a half inhabitants in the State of Ohio. But it is the question, the race, the contest that brings out the vote; and there is no necessity for everybody the polls going to when nothing is up.

I have some other lists here on some other points, but these are simply taken as samples. It certainly does away with the argument of the Senator from North Carolina and all others that because people do not vote they are prevented from voting. I know there never was any attempt to prevent anybody from voting in my State since 1876, that I ever heard of.

As for the question of illiteracy, I can speak of that State, having traversed almost the whole State in 1895. I think I made about eighty speeches, and I traveled from March until November. I made it a point to inquire in every county I visited of the circuit clerk, who was the keeper of the book of registration. I inquired whether anybody had ever been objected to because he could not read the Constitution or could not understand it or interpret it when read to him, and in every case he answered that no man had been rejected, and that the exclusion of those who attempted to register was on account of the nonpayment of their taxes. Now that is the fact. I was myself opposed individually to inserting anything of the sort in the constitution, but I was not a member of the constitutional convention.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate very much longer than I intended, and on account of my inability to see the citations which I have brought here with me I have not made the legal points as broadly as I wished; but I have read from the standard authority upon constitutional limitations and from the decisions of the court, which that author literally quotes, to show, in the first place, that these constitutional amendments are not contrary to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, and second, that if one falls the whole scheme falls together, for it is inseparably connected in representing the legislative intent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, allow me one word. I think in justice to the absent Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] I ought to quote the language which he used in which I said he maligned the North. He said first that he was a soldier of the Confederacy:

> I was a soldier of the Confederacy, and, while I have always regretted the necessity that put me under arms in open hostility to the flag of our common country, I feel, as every Confederate soldier feels, that it is a peculiar honor that we were the only white men ever called upon, as soldiers, to defend the white race against a fanatical attack of so-called reformers and the deliberate organization of ambitious politicians, who forced us into war by their cruel design to put negro slaves on a political and social footing of equality with us.

Now, here is a deliberate declaration, made a third of a century after the war closed, that the war for the Union was occasioned because of the deliberate organization of Northern politicians with a cruel design to put negro slaves on a political and social footing of equality with the white people of the South.

Now, Mr. President, I denounce that charge as a slander upon the North and as a reflection upon every Northern soldier who volunteered for the war and fought for as sacred a cause as soldiers ever fought for.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Alabama, certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Would it not be more decent to wait until the Senator from Alabama returns before he makes his denunciation?

Mr. CHANDLER. I intend to wait, but I want the senior Senator from Alabama, who is absent, I want the junior Senator from Alabama, who is now here, and I want the Senators from the Southern States who have reopened this question, which I supposed was forever dead, in the Senate to tell me whether the North is to be expected to allow a charge made upon this floor to go unanswered that the war for the Union, which was a war growing out of a Northern determination to prevent the extension of slavery into free territory, was a war of ambitious politicians with a cruel design to put negro slaves on a political and social footing of equality with the Southern whites. Now, if Southern Senators wish to discuss that question, they will have plenty of time before this session ends.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2179) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, further insists upon its amendments Nos. 1 and 2, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate, and had appointed Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. GRIFFITH managers at the conference on the part of the House.

POLICY REGARDING THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday, immediately after the completion of the routine morning business, I shall call up the various resolutions on the Philippine question and ask the leave of the Senate to submit some remarks thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to move an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 25, 1900.

POSTMASTERS.

Elizabeth J. Hudspeth, to be postmaster at Nashville, in the county of Howard and State of Arkansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William M. Newell, to be postmaster at Mesa, in the county of Maricopa and Territory of Arizona, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after October 1, 1899.

Leonard S. Calkins, to be postmaster at Nevada City, in the county of Nevada and State of California, in the place of J. E. Carr, whose commission expires February 1, 1900.

Frederick A. Smith, to be postmaster at Colchester, in the county of New London and State of Connecticut, in the place of C. B. Rogers, whose commission expired December 19, 1899.

R. Clifford Tyler, to be postmaster at Chester, in the county of Middlesex and State of Connecticut, in the place of G. F. Stearns, whose commission expired January 15, 1900.

Mary N. Herrick, to be postmaster at Seabreeze, in the county of Volusia and State of Florida, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Hugh M. Pierce, to be postmaster at Moultrie, in the county of Colquitt and State of Georgia, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Moses C. Thomas, to be postmaster at Homer, in the county of Champaign and State of Illinois, in the place of Harriet S. Coffeen, whose commission expired January 23, 1900.

W. N. Burdick, to be postmaster at Postville, in the county of Allamakee and State of Iowa, in the place of J. N. Leithold, whose commission expires February 13, 1900.

Clark H. Barker, to be postmaster at Portland, in the county of Cumberland and State of Maine, in the place of G. L. Swett, whose commission expires February 1, 1900.

George P. Bliss, to be postmaster at Florence, in the county of Hampshire and State of Massachusetts, in the place of G. L. Beals, whose commission expired January 15, 1900.

Samuel E. Walker, to be postmaster at East Northfield, in the county of Franklin and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Samuel E. Walker, whose commission expired January 7, 1900. (Reappointed.)

Evert J. Pruim, to be postmaster at Zeeland, in the county of Ottawa and State of Michigan, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Jesse A. Maxwell, to be postmaster at Fulda, in the county of Murray and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

George B. Tretbar, to be postmaster at Lamberton, in the county of Redwood and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William G. Kitchen, to be postmaster at Bloomfield, in the county of Stoddard and State of Missouri, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Henry C. Wright, to be postmaster at Webster Grove, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, in the place of A. B. M. Thompson, whose commission expired December 30, 1899.

Harry L. Jaques, to be postmaster at Jamesburg, in the county of Middlesex and State of New Jersey, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Charles G. Bacon, to be postmaster at Northville, in the county of Fulton and State of New York, in the place of A. J. Smith, deceased.

O. H. Willard, to be postmaster at Randolph, in the county of Cattaraugus and State of New York, in the place of D. C. Adams, whose commission expires February 11, 1900.

William H. Holt, to be postmaster at Graham, in the county of Alamance and State of North Carolina, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William E. McGuire, to be postmaster at Pawhuska, in the Osage Nation of Oklahoma Territory, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Isaac W. Rush, to be postmaster at Stroud, in the county of Lincoln, Oklahoma Territory, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William H. Leitner, to be postmaster at Huntington, in the county of Baker and State of Oregon, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William G. Bassler, to be postmaster at Zelienople, in the county of Butler and State of Pennsylvania, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William P. McMasters, to be postmaster at Munhall, in the county of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Elizabeth L. Bampfield, to be postmaster at Beaufort, in the county of Beaufort and State of South Carolina, in the place of S. J. Bampfield, deceased.

John Harvey, to be postmaster at Meridian, in the county of Bosque and State of Texas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after October 1, 1898.

Eli Hawks, to be postmaster at Juneau, in the county of Dodge and State of Wisconsin, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after April 1, 1899.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS IN THE UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

Harold C. Reisinger, at large.
Frank Edgar Evans, a citizen of Wisconsin.
Harry Randolph Lay, at large.
Thomas A. Mott, a citizen of North Carolina.
St. John L. Caffery, a citizen of Louisiana.
John C. Beaumont, a citizen of Maryland.
Charles B. Taylor, a citizen of Virginia.
John W. Wadleigh, a citizen of New Hampshire.
William Radford Coyle, a citizen of the District of Columbia.
Henry D. F. Long, at large.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 25, 1900.

APPOINTMENT IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

James Ross, of Washington, to be a captain, Forty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers.

POSTMASTERS.

John F. Newlin, to be postmaster at Chrisman, in the county of Edgar and State of Illinois.

Charles W. Fleming, to be postmaster at Arthur, in the county of Moultrie and State of Illinois.

Frederick Dilg, to be postmaster at Mascoutah, in the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois.

John W. Campbell, to be postmaster at Morrisonville, in the county of Christian and State of Illinois.

Jacob F. Shuler, to be postmaster at El Dorado, in the county of Union and State of Arkansas.

Lewis A. Groff, to be postmaster at Los Angeles, in the county of Los Angeles and State of California.

Joel P. Watson, to be postmaster at Ashley, in the county of Washington and State of Illinois.

Cadwallader J. Pride, to be postmaster at Rockhill, in the county of York and State of South Carolina.

Minnie M. Cox, to be postmaster at Indianola, in the county of Sunflower and State of Mississippi.

John N. Sandlin, to be postmaster at Minden, in the county of Webster and State of Louisiana.

Robert J. Morrison, to be postmaster at Newark, in the county of Newcastle and State of Delaware.

Isaac A. Smith, to be postmaster at Tennille, in the county of Washington and State of Georgia.

Frank W. Rollins, to be postmaster at Ellsworth, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 25, 1900.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the sixteenth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 24, 1900.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 70. Joint resolution diverting and setting apart $50,000 out of the sums heretofore appropriated for jetty work at Cumberland Sound, in the States of Florida and Georgia, for sluicing and dredging at the entrance of said sound;

S. R. 34. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 35,000 copies of Bulletin No. 24, Department of Agriculture, entitled "A Primer of Forestry," for the use of Congress and the Department of Agriculture; and

S. 32. An act for the relief of George W. Weston.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6777) relative to the widening and extension of Sixteenth street, in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2179) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses and giving to the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1 and 2, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. HALE, and Mr. MCENERY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 32. An act for the relief of George W. Weston—to the Committee on Claims.

S. R. 34. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 35,000 copies of Bulletin No. 24, Department of Agriculture, entitled "A Primer of Forestry," for the use of Congress and the Department of Agriculture—to the Committee on Printing.

S. R. 70. Joint resolution diverting and setting apart $50,000 out of the sums heretofore appropriated for jetty work at Cumberland Sound, in the States of Florida and Georgia, for sluicing and dredging at the entrance of said sound—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

NORTHEASTERN JUDICIAL DIVISION OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 947) to create a new division in the eastern judicial district of the State of Tennessee.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a new division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Tennessee, to be known as the northeastern division judicial district of Tennessee, be, and the same is hereby, established, to be composed of the following counties, to wit: Johnson, Carter, Unicoi, Sullivan, Washington, Greene, Hawkins, Hancock, Cocke, and Hamblen; and said counties be, and the same are hereby, transferred to said northeastern division of said eastern district of Tennessee, but no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district.

SEC. 2. That a term of the circuit court and of the district court of the eastern district of Tennessee shall be held at Greeneville, in said State, each year, on the first and fourth Mondays in August and February, after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the clerks of the district and circuit courts for the eastern district of Tennessee, and the marshal and district attorney for said district, shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said courts, and except when court is in session, and a judge present, the clerk's office of the said courts may be at Knoxville, where all records for said courts may be kept as of the same court, and all duties performed as though the clerk were at Greeneville; but should, in the judgment of the district judge and the clerk, the business of said courts hereafter warrant the employment of a deputy clerk at Greeneville, Tenn., new books and records may be opened for the courts herein created, and kept at Greeneville, and a deputy clerk appointed to reside and keep his office at Greeneville.

SEC. 4. That all suits not of a local nature in the circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitants of said State, must be brought in the division of the district where he resides; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of the district, such suits may be brought in either division. All issues of fact in said suits shall be tried at a term of the court held in the division where the suit is so brought.

SEC. 5. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable within such division, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed in the eastern district as heretofore constituted shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 6. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 7. That in all cases of removal of suits from the courts of the State of Tennessee to the courts of the United States in the eastern district of Tennessee such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts.

SEC. 8. That each of said courts shall be held in a building to be provided for that purpose by the county or municipal authorities and without expense to the United States.

SEC. 9. That this act shall be in force from and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1900, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

(1) By inserting immediately after the word "in," in line 11, page 1, the words "or for;"
(2) By striking out the words "a term," in line 12, on page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "terms;"
(3) By striking out the word "eastern," in line 13, on page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "northeastern division judicial;"
(4) By striking out the words "first and," in line 14, on page 1;
(5) By inserting, immediately after the word "courts," in line 6, on page 2, the words "of said northeastern division judicial district;"
(6) By striking out the word "the," in line 17, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "said;"
(7) By striking out the word "inhabitants," in line 18, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "inhabitant;"
(8) By striking out all of section 4, after the word "division," in line 22, on page 2;
(9) By striking out the word "subdivisions," in line 2, on page 3, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "divisions of said district;"
(10) By inserting, immediately after the word "courts," in line 20, on page 3, the words "held in said northeastern division judicial district;" and
(11) By inserting, immediately after the word "acts," in line 2, on page 4, the words "so far as."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear a statement from the gentleman from Illinois. I understand that this creates another division, and not only provides another place for holding the court, but it creates another division or district, and I would like to know the necessity for it.

Mr. WARNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It does not create another district, but makes a subdivision of the eastern district and fixes another place for holding the court in that district; and we provide for no additional officer, except under certain exigencies, if they should arise, there may be an additional deputy clerk to be placed at Greenville, where this additional court is to be held. It makes no additional expense, except that which may be caused if it should be necessary to have this deputy clerk at Greenville; and, on the other hand, it will save thousands of dollars to the United States. It takes in ten northeastern counties of Tennessee.

The present place for holding the court of that division is at Knoxville. These counties range all the way from 60 to 160 miles in distance from Knoxville. That is a mountainous country, and by the usual routes of travel in going to and returning from court witnesses, parties to suits, and attorneys have to travel double the distance to Knoxville from their places of residence. There is a great deal of criminal litigation from that section of Tennessee, all of which now must be heard at Knoxville. The Government has to pay all the expenses of having witnesses taken to and from their places of residence; and as they all claim mileage on the usual and customary routes of travel, that makes the expenses very great for the Government.

There will be a very great saving of money on account of the expenses of witnesses if this new division is created, much more than any additional expense that may be incurred by reason of having an additional deputy clerk. The judge of the district court for the eastern district of Tennessee writes a letter, which is made a part of the report on this bill, stating his views on the question, and saying, while it will make him some additional trouble and work to go over to Greeneville and hold that court, he is perfectly willing to do so, on account of the benefit it will be to those people. Instead of it being a measure that will create additional expense, it will be an economical measure, and I am of the opinion that it should be passed. The bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I am directed by that committee to present the bill and ask its passage.

Mr. MADDOX. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was if this was unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. WARNER. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALARY OF THE POSTMASTER AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if this is to take any time I will have to object.

Mr. LOUD. It will not take more than sixty seconds.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6272) fixing the salary of the postmaster at Washington City, District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to adjust the salaries of postmasters," approved March 3, 1883, as fixes the salary of the postmaster at Washington City, D. C., is hereby repealed, and the salary of said postmaster shall hereafter be adjusted, as provided in the cases of other postmasters, under section 1 of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LATE HON. EVAN E. SETTLE.

Mr. GAYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House that Saturday, February 10, after the hour of 1 o'clock, be set apart for the purpose of paying fitting tribute of respect to my late predecessor, Hon. EVAN E. SETTLE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that Saturday, February 10, after the hour of 1 o'clock, be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to his late predecessor, Hon. EVAN E. SETTLE, of Kentucky. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMPILED STATUTES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) providing for the distribution of Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia to committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver, from the number now in his care, one copy of the Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia to each standing committee of the Senate and of the House of Representatives not now supplied therewith, for its use.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls up the unfinished business, and recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, almost ever since the election in 1898 the members-elect to this Congress have received petitions and requests from various persons all over the United States, asking that certain and specific action be taken with reference to the member-elect from the State of Utah, Brigham H. Roberts. I here read one of those petitions, as follows:

To the Hon. —— ——, Representative-elect of the —— Congressional district of the State of —— to the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, legally qualified voters of the said —— Congressional district of the State of ——, do hereby most respectfully and most earnestly call upon you as our Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure the prompt expulsion of Mr. B. H. Roberts, of Utah, the avowed polygamist and covenant breaker, from the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of the National Constitution in Article I, section 5, paragraph 2, which reads as follows: "Each House of Congress may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member."

We also do most earnestly and most respectfully call upon you to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure action by the Fifty-sixth Congress proposing an amendment to the National Constitution, and submitting the same to the legislatures of the several States, defining legal marriage to be monogamic, and making polygamy, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States, punishable by severe penalties, including disfranchisement and disqualification to vote or to hold any office of honor or emolument under the United States or any State or Territory therein.

That petition asks for certain specific action. It asked for two specific things—one the expulsion of the member-elect and the other an amendment to the Federal Constitution making parties guilty of polygamy ineligible for office.

When we came in here on the first day of the present session of this Congress, petitions stood piled up there in front of the Speaker's desk 7 or 8 feet high, wrapped about with the national colors, said to contain 7,000,000 names, asking that such specific action be taken by this Congress. If there was any other action asked by any petition filed, I never saw or heard of it. They asked further that the expulsion take place not contrary to the Constitution of the United States, but in accordance therewith, and pointed out the very section under which they asked this Congress to act.

I say that in view of the language of these petitions members came as I did to this House, no doubt a majority, with no other idea than that no other action would be attempted on the part of this House except expulsion, provided we acted in accordance with the requests of these petitioners. I confess I had not studied any other feature. But when the resolution was brought in it made specific charges, and I wish to read the first two sections in relation to that:

Whereas it is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas such charge is made through a member of this House, on his responsibility as such member, and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers evidencing such ineligibility.

Then for the first time the charge was made in form that Brigham H. Roberts was not eligible, that he was ineligible, and action might follow the charge of ineligibility which was not in accordance with the prayer of these petitions, not in accordance with the generally received construction of the law applying to such a case. It struck me as new; but then was read by the gentleman from Ohio having charge of the resolution a section of the law from McCrary on Elections, as follows:

The regular certificate of election, properly signed, is, as we have seen, to be taken as sufficient to authorize the person holding it to be sworn in. It is prima facie evidence of his election, and the only evidence thereof which can be considered in the first instance and in the course of the organization of a legislative body. But there are questions which may be raised touching the qualifications of a person elected which may be investigated and decided as a part of the prima facie case and as preliminary to the swearing in of the claimant.

Time. If a specific and apparently well-grounded allegation be presented to the House of Representatives of the United States that a person holding a certificate of election is not a citizen of the United States, or is not of the requisite age, or is for any other cause ineligible, the House will defer action upon the question of swearing in such person until there can be an investigation into the truth of such allegation.

McCrary was cited as authority by the gentleman from Ohio and read. McCrary was cited as an authority by the member-elect from Utah and read. It seemed to me that McCrary on Elections was regarded as sound and good authority, and if he was I could see no reason why we should not, preliminary to being sworn, investigate questions relating to the eligibility of the member-elect from Utah. The very language of the resolution precludes an inquiry into the grounds proper for expulsion.

Eligibility is a question of law and does not necessarily carry with it anything in the nature of degradation or penalty to the person. To say he is ineligible is equivalent to specifying that he lacks some or all of the qualifications required by law to constitute eligibility. Where do we find the law? In the Constitution of the United States. It prescribes the grounds of eligibility. It says what a member must possess to be eligible. Then for a member of this House to charge, upon his responsibility as a member, that a member-elect is ineligible upon evidence by affidavits and court records, going to the question of naturalization, or citizenship, or age, is enough to warrant this House in assuming and presuming, and it could come to no other conclusion than that the charge was that he did not have some of the qualifications required by the Constitution.

Every man, regardless of his opinion as to expulsion, could vote for that resolution, and in so doing has not committed himself to the idea of exclusion upon grounds that are pertinent alone to a question of expulsion.

Now, what are the qualifications? They are stated in the Constitution. Has this House or Congress as a body ever added another? The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution did add one for certain parties, prescribing that they should not be eligible to office provided they had taken a certain oath and afterwards participated in the rebellion. That provision is no longer the law; but the very fact that those who wanted to render ineligible parties who had taken such an oath and afterwards were guilty of participating in the rebellion, sought it by means of a constitutional amendment, was an admission on the part of those who brought about that amendment to the Constitution that they believed it to be the only way by which it could be done.

It is alleged and contended that under that section of the Constitution which says that each House may judge of the qualification of its members the word "judge" includes the right to exclude upon grounds not heretofore established by the Constitution and laws of the United States; in other words, that this House, acting alone, may impose a qualification, may create a qualification, along with those already created by law. I contend most earnestly, Mr. Speaker, that such a construction is stretching the words of the Constitution beyond warrant. To judge of qualifications is to judge of qualifications existing at the time a man becomes a member-elect. To contend or to admit that this House at any time preliminary to administering the oath of office, after a member has been elected, may by its action alone create a qualification for office is certainly a very dangerous doctrine, and if it can enlarge or add to the specific provisions of the Constitution, why can it not do away with or release us from some of the obligations imposed therein? Why can it not reduce the age limit or increase it?

I can not for a moment admit, whatever may be said of Congress as a body in a general law imposing additional qualifications of eligibility, that this House alone can add to the Constitution, or can make qualifications equal in effect to those made and created and contained in the Constitution, and which have afterwards been made by amendment to that Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, we hear much said upon the floor of this House which seems to me to be a little in the nature of pettifogging, about protecting the American home in our action. Is it to be supposed for a moment that if Brigham H. Roberts is guilty, as charged in the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], that any man in this House is so lost to proper self-respect and to a proper estimation of his duties that he will not do right when the occasion presents itself in a proper and orderly way?

I want to say that the American home depends largely upon the organic law of this land for its being what it is. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] I believe said something about going in a straight line—no isosceles triangle in the matter—about going in a straight line to do that which you want to do. Why, that is the very language used by the mob. If a man has been guilty of a crime for which his life might be forfeited by law, the mob says—there being no doubt of his guilt, he admitting his guilt—why not go in a straight line and break his neck, and not go through the circuitous isosceles triangle of a trial to do that which it is admitted ought to be done?

I want to say to the members of this House that there is no straight way for us to do anything except that way that goes hand in hand with the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] I want to say further that if there is any doubt in the mind of a member as to whether a course is constitutional or not, he should give this sacred instrument the benefit of that doubt. [Applause.] The American home without American institutions would not be worthy of the name. [Applause.] And I say it is pettifogging to speak of such a thing. I am willing to concede and do concede that gentlemen who take the opposite side of this view are sincere, for I thought it was the correct view until I investigated it myself.

I have no quarrel and no charges to make; but if you can accomplish the purpose and accomplish it according to the Constitution and according to established usages and precedents, and it is as effectually accomplished when done as in any other way, I ask you why not do it? To presume that more than one-third of this House will not vote for expulsion under the facts alleged by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] is to presume that more than one-third of this House ought themselves to be expelled. [Applause.] Are we going to say that you shall not go according to law in doing that which is desired because you are afraid that a sufficient number of those who are authorized to carry out the law will not execute it? Has the fear of a failure to execute the law ever been a justification for acting in an illegal manner? I certainly think not.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining. He has spoken fifteen minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of course, it is impossible to go over this case in detail and at length in twenty minutes, and I have only sought to go over it in a hurried manner; but I want to say that I can see nothing inconsistent in a member of this House who voted for the original resolution upon the charges contained on the face of it now voting against the conclusions of that committee as expressed in the majority report. We are not bound, because, upon sufficient charges, we created a committee to investigate and report back certain facts, to agree with that committee upon the conclusions of law which they reach upon the findings of fact.

And I think that every member of this House, regardless of party politics, regardless of how he voted on that question, should vote now as he thinks is right, after full and fair investigation, and vote in accordance with the law of the land, in accordance with constitutional provisions, and not here at this time, in this way, seek to add qualifications which never have been created by the lawmaking power, either in the organic law or in this Congress acting as a body. Therefore I contend that no man is estopped from voting against the majority report in this case because he voted simply to create the committee to make the investigation upon the charge of ineligibility. Expulsion is for personal conduct of the member, and I will concede, as far as I am able to determine, that it must be conduct of which he has been guilty after becoming a member-elect, after the 4th of March following his election. I take no stock in this argument that after he is brought in here and sworn in, he must be guilty of polygamy after taking the oath.

But suppose that it should come to that and there should be no other way to expel him—no right to expel him except for conduct which he had committed after taking the oath? Should we here and now deliberately and willfully violate the Constitution of the United States in order to punish Roberts for what he had done for fear he will not continue his wrongdoing? Certainly that does not appeal to one who will think and reason upon this matter. I say I believe he can be expelled, and expelled as soon as a vote can be taken after proper proceedings, after the oath is administered. Now, why try to bulldoze or browbeat members of this House with the idea that if you swear him in he will behave himself, and you can not expel him for something unless he has done it after taking the oath? I think the law and the precedents are all against those who make that contention, and I think that argument is made for the sole purpose of getting members to vote for exclusion, Constitution or no Constitution.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this Government is a Government of limited powers. The Constitution is the instrument of that limitation, and I have been taught all my life as a Democrat to construe that instrument strictly and not liberally so as to avoid the plain provision and effect of its terms. I am not afraid of such a vote from a liberty-loving, law-abiding people, and if I have got to go out of this House because I vote to uphold what I honestly believe to be the plain dictates of the Constitution, let me go. [Applause.] I would rather be outside with the Constitution and Roberts than to be inside with neither the Constitution nor Roberts. [Applause.] But I have no such fears. Those who have asked and petitioned our action in this case have not asked or petitioned us to violate the law or disregard the Constitution in doing so, but have asked us to do the only thing that we can do lawfully, and that is to expel the member-elect from Utah.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have a conference report here that will only take a moment, and, in lieu of a written statement, with the indulgence of the House, I will make a brief oral statement on the action of the conferees of the House on Senate bill 2179.

There were four amendments adopted by the House to the bill, and the Senate on the amendment numbered 3——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is there no written statement?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know; but I think we ought to have the written statement which is called for by the rule, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. HOPKINS. The conference report is written.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know; but there should be a written statement accompanying every conference report.

The SPEAKER. The point is well made.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Speaker, with interest I have read the report of the committee in this case, together with the views of the minority thereof.

The report is an able one and replete with strong, exhaustive legal argument on the grave constitutional questions involved, and the committee is to be commended for the research made and the patience and energy with which it has discharged its duty, as well as for the legal learning exhibited in the report; especially is this true of the concise and convincing argument presented in the views of the minority.

I have also listened with equal and even greater interest to the arguments adduced pro and con, and especially to the masterful, logical, constitutional argument of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and, in my humble judgment, it is so strong and forceful that as yet it has not been answered and is unanswerable.

Upon a careful review and consideration of the report of the committee I am unable to yield my assent to the conclusions reached by it, and to the resolution proposed by it for the action of this House, but thoroughly agree with the views expressed in the report of the minority, and, briefly, these are my reasons:

It is not questioned—indeed, it is conceded—that the member-elect from Utah at the time of his election possessed all the constitutional qualifications requisite to entitle him to a seat on the floor of this House and to become a member thereof as an organized body.

It is neither asserted nor claimed that since his election he has lost or been deprived of any of these constitutional qualifications or that any change has taken place in his status.

Again, whatever his status was under the laws of the United States operative in Utah prior to her admission into the Union as a sovereign State, it has not and can not with reasonable plausibility be argued that the laws of the United States in force in Utah before her statehood can have any force or bearing upon her status or that of her people after her statehood became complete.

Whatever may have been the force and effect of the Edmunds or the Edmunds-Tucker law while in force upon the question of the eligibility or noneligibility of the member-elect from Utah, they can not affect the question as to his now eligibility or ineligibility as the Representative of a sovereign State.

If it be conceded that the member-elect from Utah, who asks to be admitted to take the oath as a member of this House, at the time of his election possessed the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution, and has not since his election lost any of these, then it is difficult to conceive how his right to be sworn in as such member can be denied, whatever may be the final action of the House hereafter as to his right to retain his seat.

I can not see—I do not find any warrant in the Constitution that convinces my judgment or enlightens my conscience that this House possesses the right or the power to exclude the member-elect.

Nor do I find anything contained, urged, or argued in the report of the committee that convinces me that such power or right exists.

Nor do I find any authority in the Constitution that leads me to believe that this House, as such, that is without the concurrence of the other branch of the lawmaking power of the Constitution, can add disqualifications where they did not before exist.

It is true the committee cites numerous authorities and some apparent precedents for its conclusions, but upon a close examination of the text-books referred to by it and precedents cited, it will be found that the statements from the text-books are largely the expressions of opinion of the authors and sustained by no authority, and most, if not all of the decisions of courts relied on as precedents are cases either wholly inapplicable to the facts of the case under consideration, or are merely obiter dictum.

The committee has found, as shown by its report, that the member-elect from Utah was, at the date of his election, and since, and now is, a polygamist—having three wives. However criminally abhorrent this may be to the precepts of our Christian religion, and however much this may be opposed to the spirit and genius of our Christian civilization, and however much we may detest and abhor this relic of barbarism and of the act of the grandson of Cain, the murderer of his brother, by whom it was first inaugurated, yet this Government of ours is a constitutional Government and a Government of law and order, and we can not afford to tread even lightly upon the Constitution and exclude a duly elected Representative of a sovereign State of this Union on doubtful grounds when we have a plain, simple constitutional method by which we may quickly solve the problem, to wit, explusion.

We are told that we can not expel him, because the offense for which we propose to rid the House of his presence is not one related to his duties as a member of this House. Is this true? Let us see.

The Constitution, section 5 of Article I, provides:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Some of the meanings or definitions of the word "disorderly," as given by Webster in his dictionary, are, "Not regulated by the restraint of morality; unchaste; of bad repute, as a disorderly house."

The Apostle Paul, in his first letter to the Thessalonians, third chapter, sixth verse, admonishes his brethren:

> Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly.

The word "disorderly" has a broad and comprehensive meaning when applied to the various forms of human conduct and action, and must be likewise construed as broad and comprehensive when used by the Constitution in its application to members of this House.

However exemplary may be the conduct of a member of this House in its presence, yet many instances may be cited where he may, not in the presence of the House, be guilty of acts which would tend to disgrace it as a legislative body and bring it into scandal and disrepute and make it contemptible in the eyes of the good people of the country and disentitle it to the respect and confidence of the people; and if he should do so, he most certainly would be guilty of "disorderly behavior" in the sense above stated and within the meaning of the Constitution.

It is made most manifestly to appear by the report of the committee that the present status of the member-elect from Utah is that of a polygamist, and his continuance as such is an affront to this House, its dignity, and sense of decency, and shows that his conduct is "not regulated by the restraint of morality," that he is "unchaste" and of "bad repute," and is therefore now guilty of continued "disorderly behavior," for which he should be expelled, but in accordance with constitutional methods, in the way pointed out by the Constitution—in decency and in order.

His offense therefore has a relation to his duties as a member of this House, in his contact and association with its members, and his cooperation in its business.

Giving due consideration and weight to the report of the committee, with due deference to its opinion, still so cogent is the legal argument and reasoning presented in the report of the minority why the member-elect from Utah should not be excluded, and believing that neither constitutional nor legal power exists in the House to exclude him, and that the grounds of objection to his being sworn in are not valid and sufficient in law, I shall vote for the minority report; but believing that his continuance in polygamy is "disorderly behavior" within the meaning of the Constitution, I stand ready to vote for his expulsion; and in this way I believe I shall discharge my constitutional oath.

It may be—indeed, has already been argued—that proceeding in this way would be wholly superfluous and unnecessary, and even to pursue this course would be ridiculous. This may so appear to some gentlemen who do not have conscientious scruples about the Constitution and constitutional methods. Short methods may be justified in some things, but can not well be excused in dealing with grave constitutional questions.

We can not afford to put out the eyes of the Constitution and the law and establish what may become a very dangerous precedent.

I know some persons regard the Constitution as an obsolete, antiquated, musty old document, of not much binding force except when they want it to be binding, but a very elastic and expanding sort of instrument when they want to expand.

Let us not be swerved from our fidelity to the Constitution and our duty to ourselves as men by mere sentiment. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time that all members be allowed to print their views on this case for ten days after the vote is taken.

The SPEAKER. All members who have spoken?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. All members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all members be allowed to print remarks on the special order for ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, as varying bells make the perfect chime, it may not be uninteresting to sound a different note from those to which we have listened in this debate and look at the case from another point of view. We have heard able and exhaustive arguments from the view of the majority and minority reports, and we have listened to a review of the case from the personal point of view of the member-elect from Utah. We have heard the profound lucubrations of the constitutional lawyer and the deep reasoning of the parliamentarian and the political philosopher. Now let us glance at the case from the point of view of the people of the United States. Let us stand in the American home, by the firesides of the common people, where dwell the fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, who make up this Christian nation, and see what view we get from that pure-aired elevation.

I shall vote to sustain the majority report, because I approve their findings of fact and their conclusions of law. The argument of that report on the legal and constitutional aspects of the case I believe to be absolutely sound. On those two aspects the case is fatal to the contention of the gentleman from Utah, and it remains to be seen whether there exists a third view which is also fatal. Ordinarily two fatal wounds would suffice without looking for a third to explain a homicide, and the proposal to look for a third ground of action in this case can not fail to suggest the unconscious humor in the answer of the untutored physician who, when asked if the injuries to his patient were fatal, replied that two of them were certainly fatal and as to the third time will tell.

As a basis for the brief reflections I desire to submit from the point of view of the people at large, I call attention to the findings of fact unanimously agreed upon by the committee.

FINDING OF FACTS.

We find that Brigham H. Roberts was elected as a Representative to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, and was, at the date of his election, above the age of 25 years; that he had been for more than seven years a naturalized citizen of the United States and was an inhabitant of the State of Utah.

We further find that about 1878 he married Louisa Smith, his first and lawful wife, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since their marriage has borne him six children.

That about 1885 he married as his plural wife Celia Dibble, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since such marriage has borne him six children, of whom the last were twins, born August 11, 1897.

That some years after his said marriage to Celia Dibble he contracted another plural marriage with Margaret C. Shipp, with whom he has ever since lived in the habit and repute of marriage. Your committee is unable to fix the exact date of this marriage. It does not appear that he held her out as his wife before January, 1897, or that she before that date held him out as her husband, or that before that date they were reputed to be husband and wife.

That these facts were generally known in Utah, publicly charged against him during his campaign for election, and were not denied by him.

That the testimony bearing on these facts was taken in the presence of Mr. Roberts, and that he fully cross-examined the witnesses, but declined to place himself upon the witness stand.

From these facts it appears that the gentleman from Utah is a polygamist in principle and in practice; that he is the husband of three wives all in full life and the father of at least two sets of children, who are being reared contemporaneously under the wings of their respective mothers. It only accentuates the situation without altering its character to say that the husband of these wives and the father of these children could not remove with his families, his entire domestic establishment, to any other State in the Union or into any country on the face of the earth where the common law or the canons of our Christian faith prevail and live outside the penitentiary.

It is a situation most extraordinary, and derives its momentous importance from the fact that it is shocking to the moral sense of the country and abhorrent to the Christian feelings of the American people. The people of the United States are a Christian people and have a deep-seated and ineradicable conviction that the whole course of human history has demonstrated that the dualized unit of humanity, the one man and one woman, the twain making one flesh, to nurture offspring in the peace and harmony of Christian marriage, is the essential requisite to a sound social formation and a progressive Christian civilization. They believe that the family based upon monogamy is the only true or possible foundation of a wholesome social order and necessary to the honor, dignity, freedom, and elevation of womanhood as well as to the proper nurture, well-being, moral character, and the civil and spiritual interests of children. They believe—

> There is no holy matrimonial vow
> Save where one sole pair to love's soft fetters bow.

They hold to the estimation of the love borne a single wife, depicted by the Knight of the Sleeping Leopard in the "Talisman," when he likened it to the gem on the Saracen's finger. Said he:

> The love a true knight binds on one only fair and faithful is the gem entire. The affection thou flingest among thy half-wedded slaves is as worthless as the fragments of that gem if I with this ax should break it into twenty shivers.

They believe the harem and the home are incompatible and can not exist in the same country; that the teaching and practice of polygamy are demoralizing to society and destructive of the essential principles upon which our free institutions and our Christian civilization rests; that it is a malignant growth, a cancer fed and fattened upon immorality under the cloak of religion; that it is an offense that smells to Heaven, a blighting, blistering, blasting bondage to woman, and a withering curse to children, and therefore they hold that the State of Utah, in sending Mr. Roberts here as their Representative, perpetrated a gross indignity upon the people of the United States which we are bound in honor to rebuke by sending him back to his people, and that seating him as a member of the House of Representatives would be an outrage upon the moral sense of every Christian citizen of the Republic, a shameless assault upon every Christian home, and an insult to every honest woman in America.

This characterization of the situation does not overstate the attitude of the public mind toward this case. With this profound moral conviction, deep-rooted and all-pervasive feeling of the ineffable disgrace and reproach upon the nation of admitting this loathsome moral contagion into the nation's Congress, the people are not overzealous to find express constitutional warrant for excluding Mr. Roberts from membership in the House. They will not be astute to find ingenious and subtle reasoning to sustain a proposition the logic of which they are wholly unable to comprehend, that we have the right to put him out after he is in, but no right to keep him out before he gets in. They may concede the powerful logic brought to the support of that contention, but they will remind you of the argument of Aristotle to prove the finiteness of the universe, of which, it was said, it was wholly unanswerable, and yet it never convinced a single human soul. They will not hear you say that he has a constitutional right to his seat, but no constitutional right to occupy it.

They will not even see the humor in that proposition and will regard the contention of the minority report as to the mode of procedure, after the concessions they make as to the merits of the case, as too trivial for the dignity of statesmanship. It will at least remind them of the deep philosophy in the observation of an English judge who, after pronouncing sentence, said:

> I seem to have been pronouncing sentence not against the prisoner, but against the law itself.

The proposal of the minority is to first pronounce sentence against our Constitution, our country, and our civilization by admitting the claimant to his seat, and then pronounce sentence against him by expelling him. They would rather say, in this crisis of the nation's good name and fame, as was said in a crisis of the nation's life, if the warrant is not in the Constitution, it ought to be there; that it is a casus omissus due to the impossibility of our fathers anticipating the occurrence of the incident we are now considering; and they command us to act as if it were there, and save the honor, good name, and fame of the American people.

If you suggest to them that some authority ought to be shown for such heroic treatment, they would answer as William Wirt did when in the trial of a case he stated a proposition the soundness of which was questioned by his opponent, who asked for his authority, book and page. Wirt replied:

> Sir, I am not bound to grope my way among the ruins of antiquity and delve in black-letter lore in search of a principle which is written in living letters upon the heart of every man.

They will easily see that the case presents but two questions—a question of power and a question of right. They will insist that the Constitution imposes no limitations on the right of this House to judge of the qualifications of its members. They will concede that this does not authorize the House to do a wrong or an unjust act in excluding a member-elect who, on grounds of general reasoning in view of justice, right, and good morals, ought to be admitted; but, on the other hand, they will hold that it authorizes the House to exclude a person who, on every ground of right, justice, and good morals, ought to be excluded, and that the House in the nature of the case must be the sole judge of the exigency which calls into requisition the exercise of the power of exclusion.

This is the voice of the public opinion of this nation—a mighty assembly which without visible session ever legislates, and without army or navy, marshal or constable, ever executes its decree. And that decree, when the American people are stirred as they only can be by a great moral question which marshals the conscience of the nation, is quite likely to reaffirm a law higher than the mere lex scripta. It was of the other "twin relic of barbarism" that William H. Seward was speaking when he declared there was a higher law than the Constitution, and that every human enactment which is just and right is a reenactment of the law of God. The people in this crisis appeal from all subtle reasoning, fine-spun distinctions, and refinements of logic to the higher law of right, justice, and Christian morals. Nor is this august tribunal of public opinion without citations of authority for its appeal from the omitted letter to the higher law of the spirit of the Constitution and the invincible will of the nation.

Senator Berrien, of Georgia, on February 12, 1850, said:

> There is no warrant in the Constitution for the Missouri compromise act; but in what was considered a great crisis, menacing dangers of a serious nature, they felt that they were authorized under the pressure of the occasion to assume the power which they exercised, relying upon the good sense, intelligence, and patriotism of the people to justify the assumption of a power which the Constitution did not confer and which they had no specific power to exercise. In other words, I consider that the Missouri compromise was admitted under the influence of the principle salus publica suprema lex.

When the Louisiana purchase was before the public mind Thomas Jefferson said:

> The Constitution has made no provision for our holding foreign territory, still less for incorporating foreign nations into our Union. The Executive in seizing the fugitive occurrence which so much advances the good of the country has done an act beyond the Constitution. The Legislature in casting behind them the metaphysical subtleties and risking themselves like faithful servants must ratify and pay for it and throw themselves on their country for doing for them unauthorized what we know they would have done for themselves if they had been in a situation to do it.

So in this crisis, menacing danger, dishonor, and reproach to this nation before the eyes of the on-looking world, we might well consider, if we found no warrant in the letter of the Constitution, whether we were not justified under the extreme pressure of the situation in assuming the power which the people themselves possess and which they, by a spontaneous and united acclaim without a parallel in the history of the country, command us to assume. Happily, we are not driven to this alternative; but if the circumstances of the case made it necessary for us to choose between the shame and reproach of seating this man, and assuming for a moment and for a righteous purpose the sovereignty of the people, to carry out their will, there are some, I am sure, who would not hesitate long to accept the latter responsibility, and, as Jefferson said, throw themselves on their country for doing for the people, unauthorized what we know they would do for themselves if they were in a situation to act; and if any accuser should arise who has more reverence for the mere letter of authority than for the good name and fair fame of his country their sole reply would be, "The letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive," and "the public good is the supreme law." [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it seems unfortunate that the committee to whom was referred the right of the member-elect from the State of Utah to a seat in this House should have divided as to the method by which he should be kept out of the House, when all are agreed that he ought not to participate in its deliberations. Fortunately, however, the division is not on party lines, and the two reports present two methods of reaching the same result. The first is to refuse to the member-elect the oath and never admit him to membership. The second is to allow him to take the oath, which admits him to full fellowship in the House, and then expel him.

WHY SWEAR HIM IN IF HE IS TO BE EXPELLED?

Now, as a matter of plain common sense, the question will at once be asked, Why swear him in if he is to be thrown out a few minutes later? Mr. Speaker, as a matter of plain sense, this is not an easy question to answer, nor, sir, is it an easy question to answer when you open the technical volume of legal refinements upon constitutional limitations and parliamentary usages.

It is under these refinements and manifestly against the plain sense of plain people that the minority frame their argument in favor of swearing in Roberts and then expelling him; and this, in brief, is the argument. That when the Constitution says, "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," it means so far as the right to be sworn in is concerned; that the House can consider and judge only the negative qualifications prescribed by that instrument, among which are those recited in the clause which reads as follows:

> No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

In other words, the minority contends that the House must accept and swear in whoever may come with a certificate of election from the governor of his State, providing he be 25 years of age, seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State when elected, no matter what crime he may be guilty of; no matter if he be a forger, bank robber, horse thief, or murderer, or, as in the case at bar, a polygamist and bigamist. This, Mr. Speaker, is what the minority report resolves itself into.

Inasmuch as the minority recommend the expulsion of Roberts after he is sworn in it would seem to follow as a necessary inference that they admit that the House may prescribe for members other qualifications than those negatively enumerated in the Constitution. This with some is a mooted question, but seems not to be involved in this discussion, inasmuch as the reason for the expulsion of Roberts, as given by the minority, is in no way specified in the Constitution. But here again the question recurs, Why does the minority insist that the member-elect shall be sworn in at all if he is not to remain a member of the House? Manifestly in deference to the custom which has sprung up of allowing the member-elect who comes with the certificate of the governor of his State to receive the oath and take his seat in the House, even though some one else may be contesting his right to the seat and may ultimately displace the person so admitted.

This is the invariable practice of the House, and, as for that matter, of legislative bodies generally, where the question is upon the election of the member; but that is not the case before us. The question here is whether the member-elect from Utah is entitled to take his seat at all. Whether, in short, in the judgment of the House he ought to be admitted to membership. The minority say emphatically in their report that he ought not to be; and here again the question thrusts itself upon us, Why admit him and straightway cast him out? The reason given by the minority is that the Constitution requires it. Does it so read? No, say the minority, it does not exactly so read, but the proper construction of certain clauses, the clauses I have just read, entitles the member-elect with the certificate of the governor of his State to be admitted to membership, no matter what his crimes may be.

DIFFERENT READINGS OF THE CONSTITUTION.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is the way the minority would make the Constitution read. For one, sir, I can not make it so read. When it says that "no person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years, and have been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen," and stops there, it simply means that no one shall be a member without these qualifications, and leaves all else as to the admission of members to the House itself when not regulated by act of Congress. But how can it be said that because a member-elect has these qualifications, even though he be a polygamist and bigamist, as in the case at bar, or perchance be guilty of the foulest of felonies, or possibly of high treason, that there is no power in the House under the Constitution to prevent him from taking his seat?

Mr. Speaker, this view of the Constitution reminds one of the conclusion reached by a high official of this Government forty years ago, who could nowhere find in the Constitution the power to coerce a State. But the American people found that power, and in this case the House has found and has already exercised the right to stop the member-elect from Utah at the bar of the House and send his case to a committee. And it turns out on investigation that he is guilty of all that is alleged against him. The minority so inform the House, but at the same time ask it to say in substance that its action in stopping him at the bar was wrong; was, in short, unconstitutional; that under the Constitution as read by them he was entitled to receive the oath and could then be dealt with.

The House will, of course, if satisfied it is not in the right, promptly seat this man, notwithstanding his polygamy and notwithstanding his continued violation of the laws of Utah against polygamy, made permanent by its constitution.

BOTH REPORTS ABLE AND HELPFUL.

The House and country are to be congratulated upon the able and exhaustive investigation of this important question by the committee having it in charge. Both reports are models of research and statement and in the best sense helpful to the House. In the brief time at my disposal no full analysis can be presented of these long and learned reports. But a careful examination of them side by side will, I think, justify these conclusions: First, that the House may rightfully under the Constitution refuse to admit a member-elect for crime or any other offense which in our enlightened civilization should disqualify a Representative of the people, even though he possess all the requisites enumerated in the Constitution.

Second. That the House may assert this right when the member-elect presents himself to receive the oath.

Whether or not this be the constitutional right of the House, certain it is that the House has in repeated cases exercised that right, and in no instance cited in either report, where the question has been raised, has the House declined to take jurisdiction on the ground that the member-elect was entitled first to receive the oath.

PRECEDENTS ALL SUPPORT MAJORITY REPORT.

The precedents on this point, really the only point in controversy between these two reports, all support the majority view. The fact can hardly be given too much emphasis that no instance is cited by the able and learned gentlemen submitting the minority views where the House has ever held otherwise. One can not help admiring the ingenious plausibility with which they attempt to explain away the force of the precedents; but the cold fact remains that in every instance the record stands against them. And should the House sustain the majority report, instead of making a precedent, as some have asserted, we shall only be acting in accordance with precedents.

But some say the majority proposition is a dangerous one; that it will make possible revolutionary proceedings by which, in times of great excitement, the House might be prevented from organization.

The reply is, that something of that intelligence, candor, and conservatism which in the past have preserved the dignity and integrity of this body should be conceded to its future.

In the hundred and more years of the history of the House only a few cases have arisen in which the power of refusing admission has been invoked. During the sixteen years I have had the honor of a seat here there has been but one case—that of George Q. Cannon, a Delegate from Utah while a Territory. It was in 1892.

Cannon, on a contest against Allen G. Campbell, was found by the committee to have been elected, but was also found by the committee to be a polygamist and ineligible on that ground. This was before the passage of the Edmunds law. Before the case came up for consideration in the House the Edmunds law was passed. The Committee on Elections, however, before the passage of the law, had declared him ineligible on account of polygamy.

I remember well the temper of the House on that occasion. It did not doubt that it was a duty it owed itself and the country to protect its membership from the admission of criminal characters, such as was Mr. Cannon under the Edmunds law.

The House also held the same view of duty in 1870, when one Whittemore, a member from the State of South Carolina, was found by a committee of the House to have sold a cadetship, and who, to avoid expulsion, resigned his seat. He went home to his constituents, was reelected, and returned to the House with a certificate in due form, supposing, in accordance with certain precedents, that if indorsed by his constituents the House could not expel him. But the House said it would not disgrace itself, and summarily refused him admission, not even referring his case to a committee.

Then there are the Kentucky cases, so called, disposed of in 1867, directly to the point. But other precedents need not be cited.

BROKEN COMPACT.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if there were no precedents for this proceeding, to my mind there is ample ground for the proposed majority action in the broken compact entered into by Congress and the people of Utah when admitted as a State. It was then distinctly understood that the people of Utah had accepted in good faith the provisions of the Edmunds law; that polygamy, both as a religious belief and as a practice, had been abandoned and would never be revived. Glance with me for a moment at the conditions under which Utah came in as a State, and note the strong assurances of the abandonment of polygamy under which she came in. On September 26, 1890, Wilford Woodruff, first president of the Mormon Church, preparing the way for statehood, issued a manifesto in which, among other things, he said the endowment house, in which plural marriages had formerly been solemnized, had been torn down. In this manifesto he used the following language:

> Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.
>
> There is nothing in my teachings to the church, or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teachings he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.
>
> WILFORD WOODRUFF,
> President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

And later, on application for restoration to the church of the property which by the Edmunds-Tucker law had been escheated to the State, both Wilford Woodruff, then first president, and Lorenzo Snow, as counselor and now first president, testified that they construed the above manifesto to prohibit the continuance of polygamous relations in cases where the marriage was entered into before the passage of the Edmunds law as well as afterwards.

On December 19, 1891, a petition was addressed to President Harrison, signed by Wilford Woodruff, first president, and by George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, his counselors, and the twelve apostles also, praying for amnesty for those under judgment of the Edmunds-Tucker law, and from that petition let me read the following extracts:

> To the President of the United States:
>
> We, the first presidency and the apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, beg respectfully to represent to your excellency the following facts:
>
> We formerly taught to our people that polygamy, or celestial marriage, as commanded by God through Joseph Smith, was right; that it was a necessity to man's highest exaltation in the life to come.
>
> That doctrine was publicly promulgated by our president, the late Brigham Young, forty years ago, and was steadily taught and impressed upon the Latter-Day Saints up to September, 1890. Our people are devout and sincere, and they accepted the doctrine, and many personally embraced and practiced polygamy.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> According to our creed, the head of the church receives from time to time revelations for the religious guidance of his people. In September, 1890, the present head of the church in anguish and prayer cried to God for help for his flock, and received permission to advise the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints that the law commanding polygamy was henceforth suspended.
>
> At the great semiannual conference, which was held a few days later, this was submitted to the people—numbering many thousands and representing every community of the people in Utah—and was by them in the most solemn manner accepted as the rule of their lives.
>
> They have since been faithful to the covenant made that day.
>
> At the late October conference, after a year had passed by, the matter was once more submitted to the thousands of people gathered together, and they again in the most potential manner ratified the solemn covenant.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> As shepherds of a patient and suffering people, we ask amnesty for them and pledge our faith and honor for their future.
>
> And your petitioners will ever pray.

President Harrison granted amnesty November 1, 1893, to all who had abstained from polygamous practices after November 1, 1890. But this would not include the member-elect from Utah, who the committee report married his second plural wife, Celia Dibble, in 1885, and has lived with her as such ever since, she bearing him twins August 11, 1897, and is now the mother of six children. But to return to the conditions on which Utah was admitted.

Now here was the manifesto of September 26, 1890, construed by the solemn oath of Wilford Woodruff, then first president, and Lorenzo Snow, now first president, to prohibit polygamous relations of every kind, and to enjoin obedience to the law. Here was also the petition for amnesty, signed by all the higher officials of the church, and closing with the following solemn promise:

> As shepherds of a patient and suffering people, we ask amnesty for them and pledge our faith and honor for their future. And your petitioners will ever pray.

On the strength of these unequivocal declarations, approved and ratified in the most solemn manner, as the church officers informed President Harrison, by two of their general conferences, the Committee on Territories early in 1893 reported a bill enabling Utah to form a State government on condition that polygamous or plural marriages are to be forever prohibited. On December 12, 1893, when this bill came up for consideration, to satisfy the House and the country that polygamy was dead in Utah, Mr.

RAWLINS, then Delegate and now Senator from Utah, in the debate said:

Governor West in his report, which I have in my hand, one of the chief men who opposed it, perhaps more violently than any other, says:

"The practice of polygamy has been abandoned by the church and the people. Polygamous marriages are forbidden by the authorities of the church. The people or church party has been dissolved, and the conditions existing in the Territory are now in no wise different from those in vogue in the States of the Union."

Further on he said:

I think I understand the sentiment that prevails among those who are uppermost in the councils of the political parties in the Territory of Utah, and who would be likely to dominate its affairs in case it be admitted as a State; and I am prepared to say upon my conscience that I believe these people can be safely intrusted with the full measure of self-government which would be accorded under statehood.

And again:

The eradication or discontinuance of polygamy is perhaps first due to external pressure, but still more largely to the efforts of people within the Mormon Church itself to bring about the reform of the organization in that respect.

It should be borne in mind that a very small proportion of the Mormon people have ever practiced polygamy. Those who did not practice it saw the evil consequences which followed from its practice, the unhappiness which it caused in families, and that it rendered the people of Utah obnoxious to the prevailing sentiment of the age. Its practice disturbed the tranquillity, impeded the progress, retarded the growth, darkened the character, and destroyed the prosperity and happiness of the people.

And speaking of the manifesto of September 20, 1890, already referred to, he used this strong language:

The elders of the Mormon Church got up and said that this came to the people with all the force of a revelation and was binding upon them, and many of the Mormon people have testified in court, when occasion has arisen when such testimony would be relevant, that they regard that as a revelation from Almighty God; that they no longer believe polygamy and its practice to be right, and in effect it is not only discontinued as a practice, but, so far as the great mass of the Mormon people is concerned, it is eradicated as a belief. But the people of Utah—I think I can speak for them on this question—mean, I believe, what they say. They are engaged in no scheme of fraud or treachery by which to deceive the nation. Having made this pledge, and on this pledge asked this action by the American Congress, I think I can say for them that they will stand by it though the heavens fall.

On the strength of these assurances from the governor of the Territory, the president and counselors and apostles of the church, and of Delegate RAWLINS, the enabling act was passed, and Utah became a State.

To those of us who were charged with the responsibility of the admission of Utah and who heard these words of solemn assurance as they fell warm from the lips of Delegate RAWLINS in this Hall, it seems a clear case of bad faith on the part of her people to now send a polygamist to represent them in this body.

Mr. Speaker, it is the blackest kind of fraud and treachery, the very thing that Mr. RAWLINS assured us against, and I think honestly, too. If not fraud and treachery on the part of the Mormon people, it certainly is on the part of the man Roberts, who is now knocking at the door of the very place where the fraud was made effective. But of this I will speak later.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is not claimed that there is any constitutional provision against doing as one agrees, nor any against the people of Utah doing as they agree. There is no provision against common honesty and decency, and both, as well as proper self-respect, require that we say to Mr. Roberts, "Not only have you deceived us, but you are a polygamist, an offensive character to Christian civilization, and are also a constant violator of the constitutional provision of Utah, which you yourself helped make for the sole purpose of working Utah into the Union, and we do not want and will not have such an odious character in the House, not for a few minutes even. We say to you, go back to your constituents, who will go unrepresented in this body until they select some one who is not a polygamist. We are going to resolutely hold the people of Utah to the agreement made when we clothed them with statehood." This is good morals and good law.

Mr. Speaker, it is a principle in both law and equity that whoever comes into court asking the benefit of a contract or its enforcement must show that in every particular that he himself has kept the contract. This principle is older than constitutions, and is of such high moral scope that I shall hope there will be no claim that it is unconstitutional.

Now, let us apply this principle to the case at bar, not as a court deciding between parties and hedged about with the limited jurisdiction ascribed by the gentleman from Maine, but as one of the high contracting parties and as clothed not only with judicial power over matters rightfully before us, but with that creative power also which is the distinguishing function of all legislative bodies.

Let us view it as the holders, for the time, of the sovereignty of the people, and the medium through which that sovereignty can be expressed without limitation, except as prescribed in the Constitution, which in terms says:

Each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

JUDGE WILSON'S ADVICE.

Let us apply the above rule and do what Judge Jeremiah Wilson, counsel for the people of Utah in 1887, when they were asking admission, said Congress could do if they did not live up to their agreement, viz:

You could shut the doors of the Senate and House of Representatives against them; you could deny them a voice in the counsels of the nation because they had acted in bad faith and violated their solemn agreement by which they succeeded in getting themselves into the condition of a State.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, do just what this eminent counsel, when pleading for the admission of Utah as a State, said we could do; and he being their counsel, his language is their language. Let us "shut the door of the House against them" so long as they flagrantly violate their pledges and send a polygamist to represent them in this body. Let us, in the literal language of the learned counsel, "shut the door," and not go through the farce of asking Roberts in and, after giving him a seat, then ask him to go out. I say the farce, because the cause for which the minority would expel Roberts is the identical cause for which the majority would exclude him, and confessedly that cause is outside of the qualifications negatively enumerated in the Constitution. Then what becomes of the elaborate argument of the minority that the House can not add to the three enumerated qualifications, for they must add the cause upon which they would expel him, and it does not satisfy sound reason to say that as against a two-thirds vote qualifications may be added, but not as against a majority.

PRECEDENT WHOLESOME AND NOT DANGEROUS.

But some fear the precedent. Mr. Speaker, the precedent created by the adoption of the majority resolution will rest upon grounds so distinctly peculiar to itself that it can never be invoked unless it be in some future case from the State of Utah, in which violated pledges shall again cry out in the name of honor and decency; and the sooner the people of Utah learn that the doors of this House are barred against the entrance of a polygamist the sooner will the young men of that State learn that the way to honor, in this world at least, is not in plural marriages; the sooner will the Mormon Church realize that the taint of polygamy hopelessly bars its way to fellowship with Christian civilization; the sooner also will the State itself discover that this relic of barbarism is the only hindrance to a brilliant and prosperous future, the only blot on the otherwise good character of this fair sister of the mountains.

Mr. Speaker, the minority position, briefly stated, is this: That whoever has the governor's certificate, is 25 years old, seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he comes, shall be seated as a matter of absolute right, simply because the Constitution says the member must have these qualifications, but does not say that Congress or the House may not require others. The minority seem to lose sight of that other clause, that "each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members." The only judgment which the House has under the minority view is, whether a man is 25 years of age, has been seven years a citizen, and was an inhabitant of the State at the time of election—three very heavy questions indeed for the representatives of the sovereign people to judge.

I submit that these things are all matters of ascertainment rather than of judgment. And if the framers of the Constitution intended to limit the power of the House to these three things, they would have used the word "ascertain" as more applicable to this inquiry, so that the clause would read, "Each House shall judge of the election and return and shall ascertain the qualifications of its own members." The framers of the Constitution understood well the use of language; and if they had intended this limitation, they never would have used the word "judge" in that connection.

The majority claim that under the word "judge" the House may not only ascertain if the member is qualified as the Constitution says he must be, but when charges are preferred against a member-elect that ought to disqualify him as a Representative it is the duty of the House to look into them and, if true, judge whether the offense he may be guilty of ought to exclude him from the House.

TEST CASES.

Now, let us test the minority views by some extreme cases, which, on the authority of Chief Justice Shaw, prove the rule. Suppose a lunatic presents himself with the governor's certificate, and he possess the three prescribed qualifications. According to the minority, he must be sworn in, no matter what confusion and danger he may bring into the House. Suppose a leper comes with a certificate and the three qualifications—and one may some day come from Hawaii, though there be lepers in the United States—the minority, following the logic of their position, must say he should be sworn in, thus making a pesthouse of this Hall. But suppose a murderer raises his hand, still red from the fatal fray, for the oath. Gentlemen of the minority can not help saying he should receive it and sit down with the representatives of the people.

The minority may reply: "After admission these men might be expelled, of course, because one is a lunatic, the other a leper, and the other a murderer. It would, of course, be because of these disqualifications." But these are not enumerated in the Constitution, and your position denies the power of the House to add any others. It will trouble the ordinary mind to understand, if the House may add to these qualifications for expulsion, why it may not for exclusion, Thus do we see the argument of the minority running into the face of itself.

The majority view is, that when the Constitution says the House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its own members, it means just what it says, and it may, if it so determine, refuse admission to all such characters as above described; may, in short, exclude any person whose entrance into it would affect its integrity, compromise its dignity, or be a blot on its morality; and I do not care whether you call this the power of prescribing additional qualifications or of self-preservation and self-protection. Mr. Speaker, I believe if this question ever gets into the Supreme Court, that that tribunal will never take away or in any way abridge the power of the House to keep itself respectable.

Now, apply this principle to the case at bar. Brigham H. Roberts is a polygamist, and is such in violation of a law kept on foot by a provision in the constitution of Utah which he himself helped place there in order to bring the State into the Union, when at the very time he was living in violation of that law and has been from that time until now, thus adding to the crime of polygamy hypocrisy and falsehood. Shall we admit such a man to a seat in the House?

POLYGAMY, HYPOCRISY, AND FRAUD.

Here are the facts: The enabling act authorized Utah to form a State government on condition that polygamous and plural marriages be forever prohibited. This provision was incorporated into the constitution, and it was also moved by C. S. Varian, of Salt Lake, to insert the following clause declaring in force the laws of the Territory against polygamy:

The act of the governor and legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah entitled "An act to punish polygamy and other kindred offenses," approved February 4, 1892, in so far as the same defines and imposes penalties for polygamy, is hereby declared to be in force in the State of Utah.

And on this motion Mr. Roberts, who was a member of the convention, spoke as follows:

Mr. President, I am in favor of adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Salt Lake. I think, sir, that it should prevail. First and principally that it may appear, without any equivocation whatever, that in perfect good faith the people of Utah intend to carry out the condition upon which statehood is to be granted to the Territory, for Congress did require, by its enabling act, an express stipulation upon this subject, and I believe its intention was to have a declaration that would be effective and not merely an empty assertion, and I think a provision of this character is absolutely necessary to the document we are drafting, in order to establish beyond question the fact that we intend to carry out to the letter our agreement as expressed in the compact with the United States.

It was on February 4, 1894, that Mr. Roberts uttered the foregoing. He was anxious to have it known that the people of Utah were acting "in perfect good faith" and were intending "to carry out to the letter their agreement as expressed in the compact with the United States," from which it seems Roberts perfectly understood there was a compact.

Now, let me ask, what kind of faith was he exercising at that very moment, living, as he was, with Celia Dibble, his plural wife, whom he married in 1885? And what kind of faith has he exercised since by continuing his relations with this second wife "ever since," as the committee find? And, further, let me ask what kind of "faith"—that is his word—did he exercise three years later, in 1897, when he took another wife, Margaret C. Shipp?

Not only this, but while Roberts was before the people of Utah for election, in reply to Governor Wells, who is a Mormon, but who protested against Roberts's election on the ground of his polygamy and that it would be a violation of the admission compact, said in an interview which appeared in the Salt Lake Herald of November 6, 1898, and signed by him, among other things, the following:

He knows that while technically a law which crept into our statute book by what may be called an inadvertence—viz, that the code commission put into the code what was considered before statehood an unconstitutional law, and then the code was adopted by the legislature, a number of whose members have said to me personally that they were not aware such a law was in the code—he knows that the law has not been executed; thatthere has been no public sentiment that demanded its execution, and that, like some of the blue laws of Connecticut, which exist on the statute books under similar circumstances, it has not been enforced. And one of Governor Wells's associates in the attack upon me—Judge Goodwin—is authority for the statement that a law is never enforced against the sentiment of a community.

Governor Wells knows all this, and yet he is craven enough in his soul to join hands with lifelong enemies of his father and his people and attack me for doing, if the charges are true, what, as a private citizen and a member of the Mormon Church, he dare not lift his voice against; for discharging these moral obligations, which, if his charges are true, under all the circumstances, would be an act of honor.

When the sow that has been washed returns to her wallowing in the mire we smile at it.

When the dog turns to his vomit we sicken at it.

When the bird fouls his own nest we are filled with disgust.

But when a man, and that man a governor of a State, discredits the marriage system which gave him birth, stamps the brand of dishonor on his own parents, and assumes an attitude that, carried to its legitimate conclusions, would put his own sisters beyond the pale of the law and mark them as outcasts, then there is no comparison that can express one's contempt and disgust for such a craven.

Thus do we find this man solemnly parading his "good faith" in the constitutional convention, professing himself in favor of legislation prohibiting polygamy, while at that very moment he was himself a polygamist. Later we find him repudiating these provisions and airily brushing aside as a dead letter the very law he had favored, speaking of it as having "crept into the statute book through an inadvertence;" and now he is posing before the House as an honest man under persecution from the intolerance of the suspicious and inquisitive.

Thus does,

He wire in and wire out,
And leaves us still in doubt
Whether the snake that made that track
Was going east or coming back.

Mr. Speaker, out of his own mouth Brigham H. Roberts stands convicted of being not only a polygamist, but of being a hypocrite and a fraud; and what shall be said of his supreme audacity in now asking this House to allow him to sit down with those on whom he has practiced this imposition and here flaunt his polygamy and hypocrisy in the face of the House and of the world?

The minority report would let him do this. The majority report says the House is the judge of all this under the Constitution, and they recommend that he be not allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, his own bad faith, and that this, coupled with his polygamy, ought to be an absolute bar to his entrance into the House.

Mr. Speaker, the House has already been told that the majority report is in direct line with its precedents and with all of them. No instance has arisen in its history where the question has been raised and the House has refused to judge of the qualifications of a member-elect when challenged at the bar.

RESULTS UNDER MAJORITY PLAN.

Under this rule the Kentucky members were sifted in 1867 and the disloyal ones kept out of the House. Under it the cadet broker was kept out in 1870, and in 1892 Cannon, the polygamist, was kept out on account of his polygamy; and the country has survived what, according to the gentlemen holding the minority views, must have been a terrible wrench to the Constitution; and the people have said amen every time.

RESULTS UNDER MINORITY PLAN.

Under the minority plan of purging the House of unworthy characters by expulsion, the record is a dismal one.

First of all, it left Cannon, the polygamist, in the House in 1874, and his victory gave him such standing that he held on for eight years longer, when the majority plan sent him home.

Under the minority plan a long list of dubious and shady characters have been left in the House unmolested. I do not wish to make unnecessarily public the names, but it left one man charged with murder and several charged with bribery and bribe taking and other corrupt practices.

PRECEDENTS MAKE ROBERTS'S EXPULSION DOUBTFUL.

Mr. Speaker, all the cases of attempted expulsion hold that it can be done only for some cause connected with service in the House, and in the very term, too, in which the attempt is made. Under this rule, supported by an unbroken line of precedents, how could Roberts be expelled immediately after admission, in the absence of proof of some fresh act of polygamous cohabitation? What has he done connected with his service in the House which would justify it? But enough; the House understands the issue between the two reports. It is principally a question of constitutional construction, and each member will say for himself how he will read that instrument, not only in the light of legal learning but of common sense and legislative experience.

Mr. Speaker, for myself I shall stand by the precedents of the House, believing they are constitutional and essential to the wholesome discharge of its duties. I shall vote to exclude Roberts from the House. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I voted to exclude the Utah Representative without any regard to his alleged prima facie rights to be formally sworn in as a member of this body. I felt that the country had been so outraged by the election of an avowed and notorious polygamist to Congress that I paid little attention to the technical question as to the legal form of exclusion. It was a case, in my estimation, Mr. Speaker, of such abhorrent and defiant immorality that I did not stop two seconds to think whether he ought to be kicked in and then kicked out or whether the more decent thing to do is to keep him out entirely. [Applause.]

I acted on the broad principle that the man was unfit to be a member of this House. I have read the evidence carefully, notwithstanding my early convictions of the man's guilt. I would give a dog the benefit of any doubt I might have if its reputation or life were at stake. I have no doubt in this case. This accredited Representative has no place in this House, and the sooner it is clear of this case the better and cleaner it will be. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, the majority report has interjected a point in the case that, in my opinion, is unnecessary, unwise, and unwarranted.

The third paragraph of the report declares that Mr. Roberts's "election as Representative is an explicit and offensive violation of the understanding by which Utah was admitted as a State," and for that, among other reasons, should be denied the right of membership "in this" House.

Commenting upon this declaration of the committee, the New York Press (January 22), the leading Republican newspaper in the country, says:

> Utah deserves a forced return to the Territorial condition. Since there is no such means, the committee majority has taken the most signal way possible of rebuking the Mormon combination of insolence and ill faith by denying to its Representative the privilege of a seat in the House long enough even for expulsion.

This House nor this committee has nothing whatever to do with the question of statehood introduced in this controversy. It ought not to have been introduced. Whatever its purpose, it has no business in this dispute at this time. I hope it will be eliminated from the report. Leave that question to the courts, where it properly belongs. Let the House of Representatives attend strictly to its own business.

There is altogether too much flippant talk, Mr. Speaker, about the power of Congress and the duty of Congress to coerce and punish States by the most drastic restrictive legislation. It is boldly and persistently attempted to reduce representation in this House and in the electoral college upon the census report of the voting population of certain States. And why? Because in the very words of this majority report the election in these States was an explicit and offensive violation of the understanding (referring to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments) by which they were admitted as States. Only this week, at the other end of this building, has this new Republican gospel of reconstruction been proclaimed. It is a very important and very serious matter. The danger is not only not remote, but in the immediate future. [Applause.]

Another Republican House is a possibility—the merest possibility. If the almost impossibly unexpected should happen and the next House has a Republican majority, what is there to prevent the exclusion of every Representative from every Southern State upon the declaration of the majority that these States have "explicitly and offensively vetoed" the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments?

I would like to have my mind disabused of this impression. I would like to vote for the majority report, and expect to vote for it, but the paragraph I have quoted is "explicitly and offensively" objectionable to my sense of duty and to my perception of the fundamental law of the land. But there are others. Others are to be admitted to statehood if the Republican policy is carried out.

We are soon to enjoy the relics of ancient Mexican civilization in the admission to statehood of Arizona and New Mexico. Then follows the State of Hawaii, the State of Luzon, the State of Puerto Rico, and others, perhaps. Hawaii is right at our door. A bill has been reported at this Congress for its admission as a Territory. Its population is composed of 100,000 Kanakas, Portuguese, Japanese, and lepers, and 3,000 Americans. So that no flippant, partisan, or political agitation of this statehood question should be tolerated.

I hope the chairman of the committee will agree to strike out the objectionable paragraph.

I shall vote for the majority report heartily if this objection is removed. Otherwise I shall vote only under protest as to this paragraph for the adoption of the report. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, after the masterly arguments of the gentleman from Maine and other accomplished lawyers who have expounded the true law of this case, it is difficult and hardly necessary to discuss further its legal aspects. It is a "consummation devoutly to be wished" that gentlemen who gave such admiring attention could yield the sanction of their votes to the control of their convictions.

Of course unlawful cohabitation, politely called polygamy, is a heinous sin against society and the law. In fact, when aggravated by the formality of a felonious marriage celebration, statute law fixes the status of the ultrauxorious perpetrator as entitled to membership in the penitentiary, rather than in Congress. The more odious the crime, however, the greater the indignation and resentment aroused and the more furious the storm of condemnation and demand for punishment; therefore the greater danger that passion may silence reason, override law, and break down constitutional safeguards.

If the gentleman from Utah "is in open rebellion against the law," "up in arms to overturn society" by leading a life of open shame with plural women, as declared by the majority report, it is "not being done in a corner." It is capable of easy and satisfactory proof by fair method, and it is due to the dignity of this House and the decent respect for the Constitution which overshadows and protects us all, if we are protected, that we deal with the case in a regular and legitimate manner. If the accused have full effect given to all his substantial rights, be fairly tried and proven guilty, not two-thirds alone, but, in my judgment, every member of this House would vote to expel him. In my judgment the argument that he must be excluded because of fear that he could not be expelled is not well founded in fact or probability, while doing violence to reason and justice. It is a reflection on the House and unworthy of its distinguished authors. There can be but one correct course. The longer we neglect our duty by refusing to adopt it the greater the confusion and danger.

It has been our duty every minute since we unlawfully stood the member-elect aside in our organization and still is our duty to administer to him the oath in recognition of the certificate from a sovereign State, thereby investing him with the duties and responsibilities of membership, whatever else betide him hereafter. Then he may be accused, tried, and expelled. To be accused and tried is one of the liabilities attending the responsibility of membership, and a legal trial is one of the rights of membership. [Applause.] Neither liability nor right attaches to any but full-fledged members. If a certified member should do as some profess to fear in this case would be done, should expulsion fail, walk away and refuse to be sworn, the seat would be declared vacant, not by raising any question of polygamy, but by reason of the fact that the certified member failed to appear and enter upon the discharge of his duties.

When sworn as a member he occupies vantage ground in many respects by enjoying certain prerogatives and prestige of which he is wrongfully deprived when barred at the threshold and placed beyond the pale of membership and under the ban of prejudgment. If there could be legal trial at all before the oath was taken, it would manifestly involve the loss of substantial rights, the deprivation or curtailment of which might taint and discredit the finding. Three hundred and fifty-seven members are elected, and four months thereafter their term of service begins according to law—that is the period of two years, during which they are authorized to legislate whenever, either in regular or extraordinary session, they take the prescribed oath, without which they can not participate in legislation. All have credentials, identical in character, importing absolute and conclusive verity as to the matters covered by them, but having no reference or relation whatever to the subsequent conduct of members.

All possess the same common right to appear and take the oath, participating mutually in the organization of the House. No man having such certificate can ordinarily be denied the right of being sworn except by unconstitutional and revolutionary proceedings. Per contra, neither the House nor any member thereof is afterwards estopped from investigating reprehensible conduct by reason of the fact that the guilty member had taken the oath. In organization nothing is judged or acted upon. Persons certified are placed on the roll and sworn. Nothing can be properly known at the time about personal conduct. If misconduct during the term renders the member unworthy of membership, there is no obstacle in the way, but every consideration demands that he be arraigned, tried, and expelled, nor is there any rule to govern the vote to expel except the dictate of sound discretion, guided by enlightened conscience.

The suggestion that the member-elect be excluded in limine as a rebuke to the State of Utah for an alleged violation of compact is utterly untenable. Like every other theory invoked to justify exclusion, it prejudges the case, assuming continuing guilt from previous conditions, ignoring and reversing all salutary presumptions in favor of innocence and rectitude, and, in the language of high authority, "blowing down the wind" the time-honored doctrine that there is a place for repentance both in law and religion. Furthermore, it implies that Congress may indulge in child's play, fashion States to-day and demolish them to-morrow, on the plea that it may rue a so-called bargain or compact because, forsooth, individuals made extravagant statements which were not verified, thus destroying and impairing statehood, ignoring the rule which merges all preceding words into a subsequent contract, and, worst of all, darkly suggesting harrowing memories and possibilities of reconstruction, sometimes more horrible than bigamy, polygamy, multigamy, or wars, famines, and all other baleful calamities that may afflict mankind. [Loud applause.]

But there was no compact. There could be none. No State of Utah existed until its creation, when it needed no compact. Besides, the idea of compact between a State of the Union and the General Government is new, and its value will have to await demonstration. There was a time when respectable authority maintained that a compact between the several States created the Union and formed the General Government as a general and common agent for certain well-defined and limited purposes. Passion declared its allegiance to "a higher law than the Constitution," which is the same wicked assertion attributed to the gentleman from Utah by the majority report. Yet in support of that claim, now denounced as heresy, the thunders of the greatest war of all time seriously impaired the practical force and application of the compact doctrine and retired it from the governmental business. [Laughter.] When Congress out of its Territory and from among the citizens thereof erects a new State by authorizing a State government, and afterwards by proclamation places the new State in position among her sisters in the very hour and article of her birth she eo instanti is invested with equality of privilege and function with all her sister States, inalienable and indefeasible except through revolution or by usurpation and tyranny.

But while exercising exclusive control of internal and domestic affairs, and electing and certifying Representatives to Congress, the conduct of such members comes within the purview and jurisdiction of this House, and regardless of the policy of the State, real or imaginary, on moral questions, we are the sole judges of our fellowship here. While we could not lawfully undo or humiliate a State, nor dictate the morals, statutes, nor domestic polity thereof, we can and will expel from our ranks for any conduct violative of good morals or the honor and dignity of this House, the popular branch of the greatest Legislature of the greatest country and the greatest people that ever graced this earth. [Loud applause.] States may certify members and place their names on our roll by virtue of constitutional right, but upon being sworn they immediately become amenable to our judgment for conduct during the term for which certified, and can be expelled for any sufficient cause, no matter how regarded in said State.

I fear that "the bogy man" referred to so often in this case has been improperly located. [Laughter.] If that interesting person really exists, I apprehend that it is in a mistaken idea of what the people have demanded. If there are timorous members alarmed about the popular view of this case, let them take courage and examine coolly the manifestations of their people's will. Not only do the leading newspapers take the correct view of our duty, but every one I have examined among the much-talked-of monster batch of petitions asks that we expel the member-elect according to specific provision of the Constitution, with the implied proviso, of course, that he is found guilty. Not one in my knowledge demands exclusion at the threshold. The people are usually right. In the main they are intelligent and law abiding. They appreciate the importance of constitutional guaranties and abhor its violation as subversive of their liberties and destructive of their rights and interests. They hate polygamy with unspeakable hatred, because it is obnoxious to morality and offensive to society. They would not, however, outrage law and morality to punish any crime, however grave, when the same end may be reached as surely and more effectively by legal and orderly methods. [Applause.]

If any panic-stricken member surrenders his convictions and votes for exclusion because he imagines the people have demanded it, when they have plainly requested constitutional expulsion, he grossly deceives himself and unnecessarily underrates and misjudges the people whose intelligence and patriotic devotion to law and morality at least equal his own. Let us give effect to the certificate attesting the equal right with ourselves of the member-elect to take the oath of office. Then if he is proven guilty we will unanimously expel him. [Applause.] Nobody will be deceived by any simulation of righteous zeal or assumption of superior virtue and morality. Nobody will believe from profession that any member abhors polygamy more than we who insist upon the constitutional course in dealing with the case. But there is danger that some members may be suspected of thinking more lightly of the sacredness and inviolability of the Constitution and of exercising less scrupulous and jealous regard for the dignified, orderly, and rightful procedure of this honorable and exalted body. [Loud applause.]

During the delivery of the above remarks the time of Mr. ADAMSON expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a minute or two more to conclude my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised as to the time. That is controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], whom I do not see now, agreed that I might have time to conclude my remarks out of his time. It will only take a moment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield sufficient time for the gentleman to conclude his remarks.

[Mr. ADAMSON resumed and concluded his remarks as above.]

TWELFTH CENSUS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill S. 2179.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2179) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, and giving to the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 3, fixing limit of expenditures for law books, etc., and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "five" in the amended bill insert the word "three."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 4, regarding payment to heirs of deceased supervisor or enumerator.

As to amendment numbered 1, relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and amendment numbered 2, relating to mines, mining, and minerals, the conferees have been unable to agree and ask for further instructions.

A. J. HOPKINS,
CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.
THOS. H. CARTER,
EUGENE HALE,
S. D. McENERY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2179) relative to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 3: Limits the amount that may be expended for purchase of books to $3,000, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 4: Authorizes payment to the widow of a deceased supervisor or enumerator, and if there be none, to the legal representatives of such supervisor or enumerator, such sum as may be just and fair for services rendered, as proposed by the House.

The conference committee have been unable to agree on amendments Nos. 1 and 2.

A. J. HOPKINS,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House still further insist on amendments numbered 1 and 2. They are the amendments relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and mines and mining; and also move to agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. What did the Senate do with amendment numbered 4? Did they agree to that amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. That was a House amendment, which was disagreed to here.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not in this conference report?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not in this at all. The only disagreement now between the two Houses are on amendments numbered 1 and 2. No. 1 relates to the deaf, dumb, and blind, and No. 2 to mines and mining.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that the House insists on its amendment relating to the deaf, dumb, and blind?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the Senate insists that it shall go out?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House still further insist on its amendments numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. GRIFFITH.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect from the State of Utah, stands indicted before the bar of this House of the offense of being a polygamist, having at least three wives recognized by him, with all of whom he cohabits.

This polygamous status now exists and has existed for many years last past. In 1887 he pleaded "guilty" in open court to the crime of unlawful cohabitation, the result of his polygamous status and practices.

A committee of this House, duly authorized, has reported the fact stated, which Mr. Roberts does not attempt to deny, but he answers in effect that it is none of our business. The offense charged is not only contrary to public morals and decency as understood and declared by the whole civilized world, but contrary to and in violation of the laws of the United States in all places where it has exclusive jurisdiction, and of the State of Utah, where

Mr. Roberts resides, and which State he claims the right to represent on the floor of this House.

His right to membership here having been challenged, he was stopped at the bar of the House when he presented himself to take the oath, and we are now to decide whether he shall be sworn in and become a member of this body or refused a seat, excluded, and his seat declared vacant. Our right to exclude Mr. Roberts is challenged on the ground that he was duly elected, that he possesses the qualifications required by the Constitution of the United States, and is therefore entitled to his seat.

Section 2 of Article I of that Constitution declares that—

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States;

And then prohibits certain persons from being members by use of the following language:

> No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

This clause is prohibitory both in language and construction. In no place does the Constitution attempt affirmatively to define, specify, or enumerate the qualifications of a Representative in Congress. That instrument, with the restriction or prohibition just quoted, relegates that whole question to the House itself, and declares in section 5 of the same article that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

It can not reasonably be supposed that the power to "be the judge of the * * * qualifications of its own members" confers only the power to determine the age, the citizenship, and its duration, and the residence or domicile (inhabitancy) of the member-elect. Has the Constitution, by a negative or simple prohibition, imposed three disqualifications and by implication declared every person, whatever his moral or mental or physical condition, qualified to be and to sit as a member if not within the prohibition? In prohibiting persons under 25 years of age, persons not seven years a citizen, and nonresidents of the State from which elected from being Representatives in Congress, did the framers of the Constitution affirmatively declare that every other person is qualified for and eligible to hold the position? Was it important to provide in the Constitution that a bright, intelligent, well-educated, and patriotic young man 24 years of age is not qualified to be a member of this House, but that insane men, idiots 25 years of age, and criminals are?

Were the framers of our Constitution guilty of such an absurdity? I think not. I am of the opinion that each House is, under the express provisions of the Constitution, the judge of the qualifications of its own members, and that in judging qualifications when the member-elect presents himself to be sworn in we are not restricted by the Constitution. In the exercise of this power we must be controlled by honesty of purpose and good sense, the same as in judging the elections of members.

Every legislative body must and does possess the inherent power of self-preservation. It may and must preserve and protect its dignity and integrity, and hence every legislative body possesses the inherent right and power to expel a member, and may also exclude a person whose qualifications are such that he is not entitled to a seat.

That clause of the Constitution of the United States which says "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member," confers no powers the House would not possess had they not been specifically recited, but, on the other hand, is restrictive of such power in that it requires a two-thirds vote to expel a member. But for such provision a majority of this House might expel a member. The clause is also restrictive in that it confines, by implication at least, the power of expulsion to causes arising after the member is sworn in. And uniformly it has been so held.

The question arises, When may we exercise the inherent power to protect and preserve the integrity of this body? May it be done in the process of organization, or must we exercise the power thereafter and by expulsion only?

Section 2 of Article I says:

> The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers.

The members-elect, before being sworn in, elect the Speaker, and the validity of such action can not be questioned. We may, when organizing, ask any member-elect to stand aside for further action, and if he refuse we may summarily set him aside—refuse him the oath and a seat in the House.

> Each House shall be the judge of the * * * qualifications of its own members.

And hence the question of the power of Congress—the Senate and House—by law, and with the approval of the President, to prescribe qualifications for membership in the House of Representatives is not involved in this controversy. In my judgment no such power exists. No law of this or of any prior Congress can bind this House in determining the qualifications of its own members. The Constitution has vested that power in the House itself, and in each House for itself.

Precedent and law may and should enlighten the conscience and guide the judgment of members, but can neither confer nor take away the jurisdiction nor limit the power. Each House, by constitutional provision, has been made the judge of the qualifications that a person must possess to entitle him to sit—that is, take and hold his seat—in the organized body and also of the election of each member. In judging of the election of a member we judge of his eligibility, for no ineligible person can be lawfully elected. Age, length of citizenship, and residence at the time of election are not, in my judgment, "qualifications" in the sense in which that word is used in the Constitution. We determine all those questions in determining the election, and then is added the power to determine the moral, intellectual, and physical fitness—the qualifications of the member-elect. It is said that such doctrine infringes the right of a constituency to elect and be represented by whom it pleases. So it may, indirectly, but there is far less danger in permitting the majority of the House to determine the question of fitness to sit in the House than in permitting a Congressional district, controlled, perchance, by viciousness and lawlessness, to send a pronounced and possibly a red-handed criminal to represent it and forcing the members of the House to sit with him.

There are qualifications and disqualifications by the common political law, and these disqualifications, unless expressly removed by the words of the Constitution, prohibit the person subject thereto not only from the exercise of the elective franchise, but from holding office. Says Cushing (Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 13):

> By the common political law of England and of this country, when not otherwise specified in a particular State by its constitution and laws, certain descriptions of persons are deemed to be excluded from exercising the right of political suffrage, even though not prohibited therefrom by any express or constitutional provision. The persons thus excluded are minors, idiots, and lunatics, women and aliens.

And at page 24 he says:

> The same descriptions of persons, namely, minors, idiots, and lunatics, women and aliens, who have already been mentioned as excluded from the right of suffrage by the common political law, are also prohibited, and for the same reasons, from being elected to any political office whatever. Such persons, consequently, can not be members of a legislative assembly, even in those States where the constitution is silent with reference to their eligibility.

See also Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 599.

It is evident that the framers of our Constitution did not intend to do away with these common political law disabilities, but only to extend them. The alien who under the law spoken of would become eligible to be elected to office as soon as naturalized does not become so under the prohibition and restriction of the Constitution until he has been such naturalized citizen for seven years, and while but for the Constitution a district might elect its Representative from any State in the Union, under the restrictive and prohibitory provisions of that instrument he can only be chosen from the residents of the State from which elected. Who will contend that the Constitution removes the common political law disability of an idiot to be elected to and hold the position of Representative in Congress? And the same argument applies to women.

For more than a quarter of a century the people of the United States have been struggling to suppress polygamy in the Territories and in the States. Laws making polygamy and polygamous cohabitation a crime in all places where the United States has exclusive jurisdiction were early written upon the statute book and there they remain; and Congress went further and enacted:

> SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Thus are the policy and purpose of the Government declared, and thus the conduct and present status of Brigham H. Roberts are characterized by written law. This section of the law applied to Brigham H. Roberts until Utah was admitted to the Union. Utah as a State has a similar statute, although it does not purport to render the polygamist ineligible to a seat in Congress. No State law could lawfully do that.

Brigham H. Roberts, a criminal in the eye of the law of the United States, in the eye of the law of his own State, declared ineligible "to hold" or to be elected or appointed to any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument under the United States when offending in any place where the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, and a moral leper and offender against decency and the sanctity of the home wherever civilization reigns, comes into this House armed with a certificate of election which he claims to have received by the votes of a constituency that approves polygamy and begs no mercy, promises no reform, but, defying the law, demands as a right that he, a notorious lawbreaker, be made a lawmaker in the highest legislative body of this nation or of the world.

And gentlemen tell us that this House, armed with the constitutional authority and power to determine and judge the qualifications of its own members, has no power to refuse to make him one of our number, to refuse to clothe him with the robes of office, because, forsooth, he is not barred by express words in the Constitution, and for the further reason that Roberts not having brought his bevy of wives with him into the District of Columbia, this House has no jurisdiction of his offense. His wives may not be here, but his status as a thrice-married man is. He is here; his offense is here and there and everywhere; the offending is in the man, his defiance of and contempt for the law of the nation, and therefore, in the exercise and discharge of my constitutional right and prerogative to judge of the qualifications of Brigham H. Roberts to sit and act as a member of this House, I declare him by common political law unfit and disqualified. He should not be put in only to be expelled. It should never be said that Brigham H. Roberts, the polygamist, the criminal, was ever a member of the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States. The privileges of this floor for the years to come are not for such as he, but for those who, respecting and obeying the law, are fit to become and to be lawmakers. This House must not be inconsistent.

There is no danger to the Republic or to the integrity of this House in refusing this man the seat he claims and declaring it vacant, but there is grave and impending danger when the open, persistent, and notorious lawbreaker is permitted for one moment to be clothed with the powers of a lawmaker.

If by the common political law of all civilized nations the minors, the idiots, the aliens, and the women are precluded from being Representatives in Congress, as they are, there being no permission granted them by the Constitution, I am in favor of adding to the list so precluded that other class of which Brigham H. Roberts is the type and representative. It can not be that our Constitution is so weak that we may not refuse him a place as lawmaker within this Hall, where law is made to guide and control 80,000,000 law-abiding and God-fearing people.

Once admit and swear in such unfit person, and a factional majority, to increase its power, or a factional minority, to increase its powers of opposition, might and probably would, in some cases at least, refuse to expel, and so the spectacle would be presented to the world of a House made up in part of open and notorious lawbreakers engaged in making laws for the protection and guidance of the millions.

In many cases the vote of such a member might determine the fate of measures in the House, and so the lawbreaker would become the arbiter in determinining what may or may not be the law of the land.

There is nothing in the language of Alexander Hamilton quoted by the minority of the committee that denies to each House of Congress the right to determine the qualifications of its members and refuse a seat to a member-elect for mental incapacity or moral unfitness. He says:

> The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution, and are unalterable by the legislature.

Everyone concedes that a constituency is at liberty to elect any person to this House not prohibited by the Constitution, and that the Congress can not add, subtract, or fix, or even judge the qualifications of any member or of any member-elect. But this is very far from declaring each House may not for itself judge the qualifications of its members and reject a moral or physical leper, an insane man, an idiot, or an open and notorious criminal.

In construing and giving effect to our Constitution we are to keep in mind the common law and the common political law.

Says Cooley in his admirable work:

> In the same connection it may be remarked that the constitutions are to be construed in the light of the common law and of the fact that its rules are still left in force. By this we do not mean that the common law is to control the constitution, or that the latter is to be warped and perverted in its meaning in order that no inroads, or as few as possible, may be made in the system of common-law rules, but only that for its definitions we are to draw from that great fountain. In judging what it means we are to keep in mind that it is not the beginning of law for the State, but that it assumes the existence of a well-understood system, which is still to be administered, but under such limitations and restrictions as that instrument imposes.

And again he says:

> And yet nothing has been more common than to subject the Constitution to this narrow and mischievous criticism. Men of ingenious and subtle minds who seek for symmetry and harmony in language, having found in the Constitution a word used in some sense which falls in with their favorite theory of interpreting it, have made that the standard by which to measure its use in every other part of the instrument. They have thus stretched it, as it were, on the bed of Procrustes, lopping off its meaning when it seemed too large for their purposes and extending it when it seemed too short.

And still again:

> In regard to the Constitution of the United States the rule has been laid down that where a general power is conferred or duty enjoined every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one or the performance of the other is also conferred.

Heeding these remarks, which commend themselves to our common sense, what are we to say when we construe and give effect to the words "Each House shall be the judge of the * * * qualifications of its own members?"

Does it say "qualifications hereinbefore expressed or recited?" No. Is the power limited or restricted in any way, or are we left to carry into full force and effect the power conferred? If the Congress, through both Houses, is fit to make laws to govern the millions, is not each House to be trusted with the exercise of this great constitutional power of determining the qualifications of its own members?

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in maintaining our own dignity and self-respect as a lawmaking body, as the representative of a great people, as individual citizens of this grand Republic, as respecters of law and order, it is not only our constitutional right, but our constitutional duty to refuse Brigham H. Roberts a seat in this House. [Applause.]

Let Utah complain if she will, but let our action be such as to admonish her that she must be represented, if at all, by a person who at least respects and obeys the law of that magnificent country for which he would become a lawmaker. If the one constituency may be represented by a lawbreaker—one in open rebellion against the laws of the land—so may all, and so mob law will prevail and the Republic perish.

The alarm has been sounded that if we refuse Roberts a seat we shall violate the Constitution of the United States, and the member-elect from Utah, Mr. Roberts himself, permitted to speak here by the sufferance of the House, has sounded the alarm and warned us not to violate the Constitution lest the Republic perish. This warning comes with good grace from him, an open, notorious violator of the law, not only of the United States everywhere where we have jurisdiction, but a violator of the law of the State of Utah and of the constitution of that State. I can see no danger that we shall violate the Constitution, because there is the common political law that underlies the Constitution of the United States, upon which it is founded, not abrogated by it, and which we must all recognize and which I have already read, that declares our right and power and duty in this respect.

It follows, Mr. Speaker, that women, aliens, and idiots are prohibited, notwithstanding the Constitution is silent on the subject, from having a seat in this House, and I assert that if the common political law that underlies the Constitution prohibits every intelligent woman in this broad land from being a member of this House of Representatives, I can add to the list and can vote without violating the Constitution to deny a seat to that lawbreaker, that polygamist, that offender against law, decency, and morality, Brigham H. Roberts. [Applause.]

Mr. FREER. Mr. Speaker, the House having under consideration the case of Brigham H. Roberts, a member-elect from the State of Utah, is now called upon to consider the report of the committee appointed in pursuance of the following resolution:

> Whereas it is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and
>
> Whereas such charge is made through a member of this House, on his responsibility as such member and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers evidencing such ineligibility:
>
> Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of Brigham H. Roberts to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Utah in the Fifty-sixth Congress, as well as of his final right to a seat therein as such Representative, be referred to a special committee of nine members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker; and until such committee shall report upon and the House decide such question and right the said Brigham H. Roberts shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in this House; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject-matter of this resolution.

After six weeks of patient inquiry the majority of the committee have reported to the House the following resolution:

> Resolved, That under the facts and circumstances of this case, Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from the State of Utah, ought not to have or hold a seat in the House of Representatives, and that the seat to which he was elected is hereby declared vacant.

As a member of that committee I had hoped to be one of those who might be permitted to discuss at length the law and the other questions arising in this case, but the demand for time on the part of the members of this House has been so persistent upon the chairman of the committee that I have very cheerfully, at his request, yielded nearly all of my time to older and more experienced members of this body, and for that reason have but a few words to say in reference to this most important case.

I approach this discussion, brief as it may be on my part, with hesitation and embarrassment; I fully recognize its gravity, its importance, and the tremendous responsibility resting upon each and every member of this House. I thought when I came to this Congress a few weeks ago that I knew a little something about law, including constitutional law; but I have heard so much constitutional law advanced here upon all sorts of questions discussed that I have concluded that out of 357 members there are but three who are not constitutional lawyers, and they include the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], the claimant from Utah [Mr.

Roberts], and your humble speaker upon this occasion. [Laughter.] I am no great constitutional lawyer, but a simple rural member of the legal profession, and, as such, look at legal questions in a common-sense way and take a common-sense view of them as they arise.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution to me is a living, breathing, almost human thing; I look into its eyes and see its great soul illuminated by the light of the spirits that framed it, and I see its strong arms outstretched to protect the people who live within its influence and power, and I always approach it with bared head, reverently and with awe, and touch it tenderly; but it seems to me the Constitution often in this body—like the cry of "Liberty!"—is made to cover a multitude of abuses and used to prevent absolute adjustment of right and the protection of the institutions guarded by it. Does anybody tell me on the floor of this House that the framers of that immortal instrument—God rest their souls to-day—did not know and fully believe that it had within itself the power of protecting itself, and not only the power to protect itself, but every creature that it created, including this Congress and each branch thereof?

This is the spirit, I believe, which actuated the framers of that immortal instrument, and it is the spirit in which I look at it, and while I have not time but briefly to state my position with reference to the law of this case, yet I want to here, now, declare my hearty, loyal concurrence in the report of the majority of this committee. I believe that report declares the law as it is to-day in this American Republic. I believe it declares the law as it relates to this House, its rights, privileges, and qualifications of its members, and I further believe that it declares the law that refers to the right of this body to defend itself against imposition, wrong, and outrage. There is no question, as stated in the finding of facts, but that the claimant from Utah is a polygamist and has been since at least 1885. He comes to this House the husband of three wives and the father of thirteen children, as is shown by the following finding of facts by the committee:

We find that Brigham H. Roberts was elected as a Representative to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, and was at the date of his election above the age of 25 years; that he had been for more than seven years a naturalized citizen of the United States, and was an inhabitant of the State of Utah.

We further find that about 1878 he married Louisa Smith, his first and lawful wife, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since their marriage has borne him six children.

That about 1885 he married as his plural wife Celia Dibble, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since such marriage has borne him six children, of whom the last were twins, born August 11, 1897.

That some years after his said marriage to Celia Dibble he contracted another plural marriage with Margaret C. Shipp, with whom he has ever since lived in the habit and repute of marriage. Your committee is unable to fix the exact date of this marriage. It does not appear that he held her out as his wife before January, 1897, or that she before that date held him out as her husband, or that before that date they were reputed to be husband and wife.

That these facts were generally known in Utah, publicly charged against him during his campaign for election, and were not denied by him.

That the testimony bearing on these facts was taken in the presence of Mr. Roberts and that he fully cross-examined the witnesses, but declined to place himself upon the witness stand.

Believing the law to be as stated by the majority of this committee and as ably expounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON], I shall vote for the exclusion of the claimant from Utah, and also for two other reasons:

First, because he has been and is an open, defiant, persistent, and continuous violator of the law for at least the last fifteen years and stands convicted in a court of public justice, as well as at the bar of public opinion, and is a criminal, unworthy and unfit to assist in making the laws for a great nation.

In 1878, under the findings, he was a law-abiding citizen of the Territory of Utah. In 1882 the Edmunds Act was passed, making polygamy an offense against the laws of the United States. Notwithstanding this fact, in 1885 he married his first plural wife, and thus violated that solemn enactment of the National Legislature. Not yet satisfied, when the Edmunds-Tucker Act was enacted, in 1887, he still continued in open and notorious violation of that law; children were born to him by his plural wife. In 1890, when President Wilford Woodruff, the official head of the Mormon Church, his issued manifesto, he failed to observe and obey the revelation of the church to which he declares he is so ardently attached. President Woodruff says:

Now, I publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the laws of the land.

Still he continued in open hostility and in defiant violation of that declaration of his church organization. In 1891 the president and apostles of the church declared in a petition to the President of the United States that "according to our creed the head of the church receives from time to time revelation for the guidance of his people." In September, 1890, the present head of the church in anguish and prayer cried to God for help for his flock and received permission to advise the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints that the law commanding polygamy "was henceforth suspended." Still he continued to act in polygamous relationship, notwithstanding the great body of his church, as I fully believe, sincerely concurred in that revelation and endeavored to obey its commands.

In 1893 President Harrison issued his proclamation granting pardons to all those who had faithfully observed the law against unlawful cohabitation as provided in the Edmunds-Tucker Act of 1887, and also pardon to those who, since November, 1890, had abstained from such unlawful cohabitation, upon the express condition that they should not further disobey the laws of the United States. The claimant from Utah failed to take advantage of this most generous declaration of a great President. On September 25, 1894, President Cleveland, that man with the iron backbone, declared in a proclamation that he would grant amnesty and pardon to all persons who had offended the laws against polygamy, provided that they had complied with the conditions contained in President Harrison's proclamation; still the claimant from Utah defied this proclamation; and refused the offers of peace and mercy extended to him by President Cleveland. Not satisfied with defying the laws of the United States, he defied the laws of his own State after it was admitted into the Union, for in that constitution it is provided that polygamy is forever prohibited.

Now he comes into this House and plants himself upon the bed rock of his religious faith and says, "By that I stand or fall," and hypocritically drawing around himself the cloak of that faith, he violates the manifesto of the apostles of his church and the petition of the heads of that hideous deformity of the West and the revelation that he claims was sent by God Himself to the people of Utah with whom he associates. My idea is this, that no man is a fit man to make laws for this great nation who violates not only the law of his land persistently and defiantly, but denies the right and the authority and the power of the church to which he belongs.

This is briefly my position on the question presented by the majority report in its second objection to the claimant becoming a member of this House.

In clean assaults, the defender of our Christian faith in Utah advocates abolition of the law vigorously. In an article in the Era, of which he is editor, written in 1898, he says:

It appears to the writer that modern Christians must either learn to tolerate polygamy or give up forever the glorious hope of resting in Abraham's bosom.

In other words, there is a warfare between modern Christianity and the horrid system of polygamy. For one, I believe I speak for the great body of the Christian faith in this country when I say the hope of resting in Abraham's bosom is not so important as it is that we may be permitted to cling with mighty hands to the foot of the Cross. This is an insult to the faith of the great body of the American people and shows clearly that there has been no acceptance by him of that new revelation of his church that polygamy shall be no longer tolerated and its practice no longer indulged in.

Now, one other idea: The gentleman on my left here, from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], objected to that part of the majority report referring to the violation of the compact between this Government and the State of Utah, or, more particularly speaking, this Congress and the State of Utah, under the enabling act permitting it to become a State in the Union. That act provided perfect toleration of religious sentiment should be secured and that no inhabitant of Utah should ever be molested on account of his or her mode of religious worship, provided that polygamous or plural marriages were forever prohibited.

I understand that it has been the practice to put States upon terms when they ask for admission into statehood. I live in the grandest State in this Union, a State of greater possibilities and grander hopes than any other; the only State in the Union where you can stand on your front doorsteps and see the State grow every day of your life. But that State, born out of the throes and convulsions of war, appealed to this American Congress for statehood in the years long past. The people came here and demanded admission into the Union, and Congress said to them, "You can not become a State unless you declare an absolute prohibition of slavery within your territory." Our people sent along that constitution and they said, "No, that will not do. The old mother State, the mother of Presidents and of States—Virginia—has a debt, and it may be possible in the future that you ought to assume some equitable portion of that debt. You must go back to your people and put in your constitution a clause saying that you will pay and adjust any equitable assignment of the debt of the mother State, if any be found." After we had done that and came back here, then we became a part of this great American Union, and I believe we are a glorious part of it to-day.

Be that as it may, that is what this Congress said to us. It has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] that there is no law for a compact between the State and the National Government. That may be, if you consider the compact to mean a contract. But what does a compact mean? Story, the man whom the minority love, "the Boswell of the Constitution," as has been suggested to us, does not say so. He says a compact means an "aggregation or consent of minds" between people. What did Utah say? Utah said, "Give us statehood and we will abolish polygamy;" but she deceptively now says that only polygamous marriages should be forbidden, meaning on her part evidently, under the testimony in this case, merely a cessation of marriage ceremonies, but not of the marriage rights and privileges. She did not intend that polygamy as a practice should be killed and destroyed, and her people went back and some of them, including the claimant from Utah, practiced that crime against morality, decency, and American citizenship.

Marriage is a status, a condition, as the following reference will clearly show:

Marriage.—A contract made in due form of law by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives and to discharge toward each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry, the mere act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on themselves.

"Marriage" is the legal status or condition of husbands and wives, just as infancy is the legal relation or condition of persons under age.—1 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, volume 14, page 470.

The act of marriage having been once accomplished, the word becomes afterwards to denote the relation itself.—Schouler on Domestic Relations, 22.

Marriage is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life under the obligation to discharge to each other and to the community those duties which the community, by its laws, holds incumbent on persons whose association is founded on the distinction of sex.—1 Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, 3.

Marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract to which the consent of parties capable of making it is necessary.—Hart's California Civil Code, 55.

Marriage means all that the relationship implies, not simply the performing of a ceremony, and the American people understood that when they gave that State permission to enter the Union. It makes no difference what Utah understood, it is what the American people understood through their Representatives in the Congress of the United States. And you say, supposing they violated that compact, what punishment can be inflicted? I refer you to the declaration of Hon. Jere Wilson, who, when this enabling act was before Congress, or the one preceding the one upon which the State was admitted, said if Utah violates it, deny it representation; cut off its mail facilities; do other things to show that the power of this Government is displeased with the conduct exhibited in that State. Now, just a word more. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] the other day referred to public opinion, and he warned us to beware of that "evanescent" or "effervescent"—I do not remember which—opinion which might influence judgment upon this floor in the decision of this case.

I do not know what others may think, but to me public opinion is the highest law of any republic and liberty-loving government. Why, I remember in 1898, when the determination came to have a war with Spain—public opinion all over this land said, "War!"—that brave man up yonder in the White House said, "No war until it becomes an absolute necessity;" but it came at the behest of a mighty public opinion, and when it came party politics were forgotten, partisanship was buried out of sight, and at the behest of public opinion you rose as one man in this House and declared in favor of the Government and the flag, and I remember in 1898, after the election of that year, what public opinion was. It was no evanescent thing in this case especially; it crept into the homes of the members of this House and the people of this land; it followed them to this capital; it crept into the doors of this House and to the seats of the members and into the galleries, representing every State in the Union. It was the combined voice of the men, the women, and the children of this mighty land denouncing this outrage upon private morality, public decency, and the sanctity of the American home. Beginning at the Atlantic, it rolled across this country, over our mountains, across rivers and prairies, over to the golden shores of the Pacific; yes, further than that. It will go on until it reaches the foot of that mimic throne in Sulu and destroys forever polygamy in those sun-kissed islands of the sea. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRICK] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I emphatically concur in the opinion of the committee that Brigham H. Roberts, of Utah, should not hold a seat in the National House of Representatives. I had hoped that there would be no serious controversy as to the method of removing him, and had a resolution been presented to that effect, preserving the constitutional rights of the people as I see them, I would probably have been content with a mere vote. This is no partisan question. Neither is it merely technical. I have no reverence for convention or form, except so far as they may guard order and protect great right. But, viewing the question as I do, every sense of duty compels me to give my reasons upon which I found my vote.

I fear we are about to resort to arbitrary force, because we possess it, to the disregard of constitutional right, which shall hereafter come up to haunt us. I do not refer to the personal right of Brigham H. Roberts; in the light of all the facts that concerns me but little; but I do refer to the rights of all the constituents of every Representative who may be here now or in the future. It has been said, "A lion is at the door; shall we let him in?" Whatever that may mean, I would warn you that there are people on the outside, as well as on the inside, of this Chamber who have no desire to sleep on the inside of that lion. The courageous thing to do is for us to kill it, and not wound it. Not with the brute force of a Samson that shall pull down the temple of our Constitution in ruins upon our head, but with the serene power of the law that shall forever silence the roar of that monster, and sanctify our decree.

It has been said that this is a tempest in a teapot; that it is of too small importance to bother us now or in the future, a mere technicality that should be brushed aside like a fly from a pot of sweet ointment. And yet the question here involved could be used to coerce the States into almost any sort of action upon the penalty of refusing to seat any man they might send upon a mere partisan majority. It may appear to the common eye no larger than a small bullet. Yet I say to you that it strikes a vital principle that might mean decay and death.

To most persons they have seemed to deem it at worst an insignificant cloud; and yet that cloud might grow to darken a nation's horizon and envelop a nation's sky. It is not a mere question of form and technicality. It is a question that received the serious and labored consideration of the framers of our Constitution. It was settled by them and the States in the most solemn and beneficent compact of modern history. The people in order to have a stable National Government adopted a Constitution which was to contain the fundamental powers of sovereignty. The rest belonged to the people. It is the glory of our nation that we are free, and the most valued right of all was the one given to the people of local self-government, reserving to them all the powers not provided for the National Government in the Constitution.

Among the powers reserved was the right to be represented and to choose their own Representative, and have him recognized in the halls of Congress. The only restrictions that the Constitution imposed were the ones agreed upon as fundamental—the age, citizenship, and residence in the State. These three qualifications were acknowledged to be such as should be uniform in all the States, and a qualification of fitness necessary to be complied with by the people. If they are present then the people's representative should be recognized, and could not be excluded. And no one could be excluded for any other reason, nor any further qualification added, unless and until the Constitution be amended so as to provide for further restrictions and qualifications. This has been done in one instance, so that the qualifications now number four.

Mr. Roberts admittedly does not fail in any of these; therefore he should be expelled, but could not be excluded.

The qualifications being all of them provided by the letter of the Constitution, any disregard of the letter of the law would be so flagrantly apparent that no danger would be imminent to allow a mere majority to say whether they were present or not. But other things might happen which might destroy the dignity or endanger the safety of the State. This also occurred to the framers of the Constitution. They undoubtedly recognized that the power of expulsion was a necessary and incidental power to enable the House to perform its high functions, and necessary to the safety of the State—a power of protection, and an unlimited power, resting entirely in the sound discretion of the members, from whose judgment there is no appeal except to the supreme court of public opinion.

The necessity and danger of this plenary power they fully recognized. It would have existed in its full vigor and force had they not mentioned it in the Constitution. But the people were jealous of their rights, and the framers of the Constitution were willing to guard them. They said this is a powerful weapon for good or evil. If a mere partisan majority may strike down the will and representative of the people, then in times of great public or partisan excitement this power may shake the very foundation of free government and subvert the Constitution. So they reenacted an existing power in order to guard it. And the Constitution says we may expel on a two-thirds majority.

Some say this must be construed in connection with its immediate and connecting clauses and can apply to no other subjects or actions. To me that proposition is not tenable, because it would be unlimited without mention. They do not in any terms restrict it, except to require the solemn conscience of a two-thirds majority to invoke it. And this is the right I plead for. I am not advocating the cause of this particular instance, but I speak for a safeguard to protect the will of the people against partisan politics and criminal aggression. You say it may never happen. I say it has happened, and that we are here to see that it never can happen again. This is the principle and the reason I say that this is no trivial matter; that it is a principle of great proportions and not a mere technicality that we contend for.

I overlook Roberts in this discussion. Whatever rights he may claim are all swallowed up in his acts, which are undenied, and which must and should encompass his expulsion by a two-thirds majority—by unanimous consent, for that matter. But when we put him out let us do it right, let us do it so that when the excitement is over we can say that we have not needlessly torn down more than we have uplifted. That we may need no opiate of oblivion or forgetfulness to calm our sleepless fears. You may think your constituents demand hysterical action. You may think they are willing to burn their own temple of worship to destroy Roberts, and that you will endear yourself to them by the paroxysm of your destroying rage.

But I say this is no compliment to the American people. They say Roberts ought to go, but they want us to put him out under the law and with sagacity, wisdom, and common decency. They will meet you with no brass bands when they find and fully realize that you have bartered away their birthright for a mess of pottage, even though you have done it in their name and for their glory. The people are not so emotional as some seem to credit them. The great solemn conscience of all the people has thus far been right, and it would be well for us to recognize their deliberative abilities, and emulate their sober second thought. The principle that I contend for is that when we set aside a representative of the people, let it be only in the concurrence of two-thirds of the members.

It is too grave an act to be done on slight reasons, or be subject to the fluctuating will of political strife or passion's caprice. Any way of getting rid of him would be just in this case; but it is the precedent and the future that concerns me. Then something has been said about the Edmunds law and a statehood compact. The Edmunds law was a Territorial interdiction. The statehood compact was a mere matter of talking to the ear and denying the hope. It was egregious credulity on our part, and the less said about it the better. No lawyer will give it any binding force, and the very nature of statehood prevents its enforcement. Besides that, what Roberts has done is not the action of the State.

When the act of Congress admitting the State took effect, all the Territorial laws against polygamy ceased to have any force. The constitution of Utah provided, as the act of Congress required, that "polygamy and plural marriages are forever prohibited." This provision literally and in legal effect was a mere prohibition of future marriages of that sort. But if the provisions were disregarded, Congress could do nothing about it unless it should by force of arms overset the government of the State and reduce it to a conquered territory and then begin again. The question, then, as to the right of Mr. Roberts to be a member of the House of Representatives is precisely the same as that of a member elected from any other State.

Mr. Roberts is living in a state of polygamy. The question merely is whether the House has the constitutional right to refuse to allow him to take the oath of office on account of his living in violation of the promise of the State, if it amounted to that, as it does not; or on account of his violating the laws of Utah, if there be any prohibiting those relations. The Constitution of the United States declares that each House of Congress shall be the judge of the election and qualifications of its members, nothing more. The election is to be determined by the law of Congress concerning it and by nothing else. The character or behavior of the person elected has nothing to do with that question.

Then comes the question of the qualification of the member. The Constitution defines specifically what the qualifications must be. First, the person must be a citizen of the United States. Second, he must be of a certain age. Third, he must reside in the State which elects him. The House has no power to add other qualifications, either affirmatively or negatively. It will be extremely dangerous to the safety and welfare of the States for Congress to establish a precedent of requiring other qualifications for reasons that you will readily appreciate. I think, therefore, that the House has no power and would do a wrong thing to exclude because his conduct was in violation of the law of his State or of the engagement of the State I have referred to. But the House, on determining that Mr. Roberts is unworthy to be one of its members, may constitutionally expel him.

I will not discuss the right to expel him further; the power of self-preservation grants it; the Constitution warrants it; practice, precedent, and the judiciary have confirmed it. But it shall be done only in the exercise of great necessity, and that is guarded by the requirement of a two-thirds majority. I congratulate the country upon the ability of the investigations and the searching industry of the committee who have had this in charge. I speak of both the majority and the minority. No case of similar nature has been so thoroughly and ably handled in the history of this country. This case will be a precedent that will undoubtedly be followed for time immemorial. It will be used as an authority on the subject of exclusion and expulsion in this and other countries. Therefore we should make it right.

I can give no other reason for speaking upon this subject. Let us make our decision clear and unambiguous. Let us make it fair and consistent with the principles of eternal right. Let no taint of brute force destroy its virtue. Every debauch of passion or power has its reaction. If you vote for the resolution of the majority of the committee, even though the vote be unanimous, the precedent will be construed as for exclusion on a mere majority. Do not be beguiled into the delusion that you are preserving the rights of the people because a possible two-thirds will vote for a resolution whose words mean exclusion and not expulsion. They revile this kind of talk as the hairsplitting refinements of the lawyer—they belittle the usefulness of a trained, legal mind—yet we are making laws, and some one will have to construe them.

No one can do this without performing the functions of a lawyer no matter what his other occupation is nor how much he may try to conceal it. They say the people want this man out, and that they are tired of technicalities; that they want fact and not form, horse sense and less hair-splitting. Yes; they want Roberts out. You are right about that—and they want him put out with expediency. But I say to you my people want him put out, but they have intrusted me to do it right. They do not expect me to trade off their liberties in doing it, nor to sacrifice a sacred right in accomplishing it. They do not want to be hampered by useless forms and conventions, and no doubt they would demand that I use horse sense while I am about it.

But I have no idea that when they say horse sense that they mean for us to throw down all the reins of government, to discard all curb in unbridled license, to cast aside all the restricting harness of law, and then ride to the devil like Tam O'Shanter and his tailless mare. It has been to the eternal credit of the House that so far in this debate Mr. Roberts has been amply treated with that civilized and generous courtesy that belongs to broad citizenship and the principle we contend for in advocating his expulsion. Shall we eventually destroy it all, in the final exercise of illegitimate force and in the contemplation of a fractured Constitution? Lawless force and power may make a martyr of any person in any cause.

In the final and last judgment it is the constitutional habit of many people to take sides with the under dog in a one-sided conflict. It might not be a foolish suggestion that it would be martyrdom to the gentleman from Utah if he were not martyred by us. As for me, I do not care to add any sympathy for the cause of polygamy in the minds of anyone, however misguided they might be in that feeling, by making him a martyr in any sense. I do not care to drag him into fame or notoriety by any indefensible action. I do not want him to seek refuge on a pedestal, to be crowned by any laurel wreath of pity. I do not want to forge a thunderbolt that shall rend this forum in a fearful chasm at your feet. I plead with you to pause before doing that, if not for your own sake, then for the sake of the people who have committed their dear rights to your protecting charge.

The immense importance of this exhausting investigation will make our action a mighty precedent which, if wrong, will engulf too many priceless privileges for a needless sacrifice. And I warn you now that some day you will throw into that yawning gulf a nobler citizenship than Marcus Curtius before it closes. It is an unnecessary sacrifice. We need not swear him in; we may expel him now. To swear him in is a formality that may be dispensed with when it is the well-known intention to expel him afterwards. I do not believe in the necessity of doing a vain and unnecessary thing. To expel him now or exclude him—there is nothing sacred in a name—would effectually dispose of him; and should the motion say it was done in the theory and intention that it required a two-thirds vote to accomplish it, as in the case of an expulsion, then the precedent would be right, and the case could not be hereafter used for arbitrary force and partisan perversion. With such a resolution there would not only be a two-thirds majority, it would be practically unanimous. I ask you: What stronger blow could you give infamous polygamy—a Democratic polygamist expelled by unanimous execration of both Republicans and Democrats?

To those who affect a doubt that a person can be expelled only for acts done as a member, I would refer them to the facts as found. Roberts has not only been a polygamist, but he is now a polygamist, and does not deny it. Surely there can be no reasonable controversy upon that point; and now, in closing, I want to say again that I plead for no unnecessary and needless act. I stand on no technicality. There is no hairsplitting in my contention. I simply ask that we apply the rule in this case that a two-thirds majority is necessary. I do not apply it here for any purpose affecting this case, but for the precedent it will make in the future and the harm that will flow from any other precedent. I want to put Roberts out because he is a polygamist.

I do not want to make a narrow and hairsplitting precedent confined to Utah, as it would be if you depended upon the laws and supposed compact relating to that State alone in support of your action. I want the precedent big enough and broad enough to cover a polygamist coming here from any State in the Union. And I would do it under the broad principle that any legislative body may purge itself when it becomes so necessary and right that two-thirds of its body agree to the act. When you vote to put him out or exclude him because you say that Utah has violated her compact of statehood, you not only can not defend that proposition as a matter of law, but you restrict the action to a limited section of our country, to polygamous acts in the State of Utah.

There are Mormons and Mormon polygamists in other States. This is not a State question; it is not a sectional question; it is not a partisan question. No; it is more than all that; it is a question of the honor of our body, of the civilization of our country, of the purity of our home. I will not vote to put him out because he is a Mormon as a religious belief to govern his actions here or his hopes hereafter; but I do it because he is a polygamist and a propagandist of polygamy; because he has added to that faith of his a religion of lust and a creed of crime; because he is a blot and a stain upon the national escutcheon and a desecrator and blasphemer of the American home. It is the home he has despoiled, the cradle of all American hope, the bulwark of all American grandeur.

I have been told by persons who agreed with my views that they would not vote that way because they were afraid we could not get a two-thirds majority. I do not believe that. This question lies too near the hearts and clusters too close around the hallowed hearth of home and country for anyone in this Chamber to raise the voice of party in the call of aye and no. To them this home and country of ours is as sacred and holy as it is to us. There is no section—no North or South, no East or West—in this question. We are on common ground here, and I tell you now that upon a resolution saving a two-thirds principle the vote will be practically unanimous.

Roberts is already out—the vote is a mere matter of form.

You say that precedent is a small irregularity, a slight violation, and ought not to be considered of importance. England said that, and to-day every English-speaking man, woman, and child knows the name of Cromwell. Still, she did not learn the lesson, and to-day I am pleading for the same right that Junius immortalized—in this National House of Representatives of a nation peerless among the nations of the earth—lost to England over a hundred years ago.

The French Directory said that, and then waded through the carnage of fraternal conflict in the most horrible debauch of blood that ever caused the world to shudder, at last to flee for refuge into the ensanguined arms of Napoleon. Of the power of precedent, I would quote Junius, a name dear to every American and to the lovers of freedom everywhere.

Junius says:

> One precedent creates another. They soon accumulate and constitute law. What yesterday was fact to-day is doctrine. Examples are supposed to justify the most dangerous measures; and where they do not suit exactly, the defect is supplied by analogy.

And Sterne says:

> Precedents are the bane and disgrace of legislation. They are not needed to justify right measures and are absolutely insufficient to excuse wrong ones.

"Sir, a single brick may be stolen from a building without much apparent injury to the edifice, but let the example of the first robber be followed by others, and presently the whole fabric will tumble into ruins. It is from such small and apparently insignificant attacks that governments and constitutions fall. A leak no larger than a spearhead will sink the most gallant ship that ever swam the ocean. A crevasse may be made, even by a reptile, which will let in the waters of the Mississippi till whole counties are inundated. When men's liberties are directly attacked by open force, there is but little to fear. They see their danger and meet it boldly. But when, under pretense of a popular measure, under the disguise of friendship for the people, a blow is struck at the Constitution of the country, then is the time for alarm. From open enemies the people can always defend themselves; to treacherous friends they fall an easy prey." [Loud applause.]

For these reasons I am going to vote to expel Roberts, and to expel him immediately, without form or fiction; but I put myself on record that whatever terms are used in doing it, my vote here and hereafter shall be counted as upholding the constitutional safeguard of a two-thirds majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when I arrived at the House this morning I had no purpose of taking any part in this debate.

The personality of the member-elect from Utah has ceased to have any significance in our deliberations. We are considering great constitutional rights of the people and great prerogatives of this body. When the question was referred to a committee so able as that which has considered and reported upon it I rested in the hope and belief that they would provide a safe and sure pathway for our action. But when I found the conclusions of the majority challenged by an able minority report and by the powerful speech of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], a credit alike to him, his constituency, his State, and this House, I felt it my duty as an individual member to consider the question for myself as best I could in the limited time within my disposal. I did so, and I came to conclusions which I can state in a single sentence.

I believe we have the right either to exclude or to expel, and I believe it to be expedient that we exercise the right of exclusion.

Both these powers are dangerous powers. Both of them are powers which are subject to abuse; but so are many powers dangerous, so are many powers subject to abuse; and because a power is subject to abuse is no reason why it has not an existence. We must exercise this power under our responsibility to the country. This is its only and sufficient safeguard.

In considering whether we ought to exclude or expel—because it seems to be agreed that we should do one or the other—the contending factions have appealed to the decisions of courts, to the observations of commentators, and to the proceedings of parliamentary bodies. I desire to say as briefly as I can how I rank the respective authorities.

I get no light from the decisions of the courts. They are dealing with no such question as is before us to-day. They are dealing with the rights of subordinate officers—officers often of the creation of the legislature itself. We are dealing with the rights of a great parliamentary body which is invested by the Constitution with the right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

I get little aid from the commentators. Very few of them have discussed the exact case which is before us to-day. Their language is general; their opinions are in conflict. I go to the only source of true and governing authority in this proceeding, and that is the decisions of the Senate and the House, and am content to abide by what I find there. I find that there have been numerous precedents, in which each House has declared that it had a right to exclude a member-elect for the lack of some qualification other than those prescribed in the Constitution. The Senate, in the case of Miles, in 1844, asserted its jurisdiction to exclude one of its members if he were insane.

The Senate again, in the case of Thomas, in 1867, asserted its jurisdiction to exclude one of its members because he was disloyal and, in fact, excluded him by a vote of 27 to 20.

I find again, in 1862, in the case of Stark, the report of a committee, which Mr. Trumbull wrote, asserting the right of the Senate to exclude one of its members for lack of a qualification not prescribed in the Constitution. In the Senate debates I find the authority of Sumner on the side of the right of exclusion.

Coming to the House, I find that, in the cases that have been denominated the Kentucky cases, in eight instances the House asserted its right to exclude members-elect for disloyalty and acted upon that assertion in six instances.

I find again in the Whittemore case, in 1870, the House asserted its right to exclude a member for dishonorable conduct, and actually excluded him.

I find again, although I rest little upon that, that the House asserted its right to exclude a Delegate from Utah. On the other hand, I look in vain through all the precedents for a single one against this right. If we now declare that we have not the right to exclude for a lack of qualification not prescribed in the Constitution, we do so for the first time. Disregarding all former precedents we create a new one. I will have no part in this. I am unwilling, Mr. Speaker, to give up a great prerogative of this House which has been exercised for a century, and accordingly I stand by the majority report. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] is recognized.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree that the question that now confronts this House is one of a very grave nature, and I am sure that the attention that has been bestowed upon it has been commensurate with its importance.

At one time I had some doubts, or rather some misgivings, as to our power to stop a member-elect at the door of the House; but after a careful consideration of the matter, studying the Constitution itself and not allowing myself to be bewildered or entangled by diverse authorities, I have come to the conclusion—a conclusion entirely satisfactory to myself—that this House has the constitutional authority not only to expel a member after he has been admitted to his seat, but also the power to prohibit his entrance and close the door against him. It would be a monstrous state of affairs if the House of Representatives could not clean before its own doors and bar out those who would defile its halls. Upon an examination of the questions in issue I find that the Constitution of the United States establishes no qualifications for a Representative. It simply established disqualifications.

THE HOUSE HAS THE POWER TO EXCLUDE.

Mr. Speaker, let us examine the Constitution on this question. Its language is:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

This House, then, is the judge of the qualifications of its own members, and is the sole judge. There is no other court for the decision of this question; and from its decision there is no appeal. Our decision is a finality.

But in making our decision we must be governed by the Constitution, in so far as the Constitution lays down rules for our government or our guidance. What, then, does the Constitution say upon the subject? I read:

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

That is, a Representative must be at least 25 years of age, seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State choosing him.

The Constitution does not say that a person 25 years of age, seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State choosing him, has all of the qualifications necessary for a Representative. It merely says that a person who is not 25, not a citizen for seven years, and not an inhabitant of the State choosing him shall not be a Representative.

You will thus see, Mr. Speaker, that the Constitution does not specify any qualifications for a Representative; it merely specifies the disqualifications. It does not say who are eligible; it only says who are ineligible. [Applause.]

I think, Mr. Speaker, this analysis of the Constitution shows very clearly that those gentlemen are mistaken who contend that any person 25 years of age, seven years a citizen, and an inhabitant of the State choosing him has the right to be sworn in under the Constitution, and that this House can not dictate any other conditions, or annex any other qualifications, or impose any other requirements.

THE CONSTITUTION CONSTRUED.

Mr. Speaker, let us do as the gentlemen on the other side of this question insist we shall do, and convert these three disqualifications into qualifications.

First. The Representative must be a "person."

A woman is a "person." Would a woman be qualified?

A demented man is a "person." Would he be qualified?

A leper or man afflicted with any other infectious or obnoxious disease is a "person." Would such a man be qualified?

Second. The Representative must be a "citizen of the United States."

A citizen convicted of treason, but out on bail because of an appeal pending, is yet a "citizen." Would he be qualified when he appears in the uniform of the public enemy and avowing his hostility to our country?

Third. The Representative must be an "inhabitant of the State in which he shall be chosen."

Suppose he should inhabit the State in which he shall be chosen, and yet do business, vote, and exercise other acts of citizenship in an adjoining State—just as many men are inhabitants of New Jersey and yet do business, vote, and exercise other acts of citizenship in New York—would such an "inhabitant" be qualified?

It will thus be seen, Mr. Speaker, that if these real disqualifications are reversed into supposed qualifications they would themselves have to be qualified, and so the arguments of the gentlemen on the other side would fall to the ground, and we would return to our starting point and find that, after all, the House would have to be the judge of the qualifications of its members. [Applause.]

The Constitution requires that Representatives be "bound by an oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

So it may be said that this oath or affirmation is at least a condition precedent; and if the argument of the gentlemen on the other side be correct, then this House has no authority to add to this oath. But it has been added to, and we are required to swear not only to support the Constitution, but to bear true allegiance to the United States and to faithfully discharge our duties as Representatives.

THE HOUSE THE JUDGE.

No, Mr. Speaker, the Constitution prescribes no qualifications for members of this House; it prescribes three disqualifications, and it stops there. Herein the wise, patriotic, and far-seeing statesmen who framed that great charter of republican government showed their capacity for so great an undertaking. They were willing to trust the wisdom, patriotism, and impartiality of the House to meet all questions as they came forth from the womb of the future. They said to the House of Representatives, "You shall be the judge of the qualifications of your own members; but you shall not admit any person under 25 and not seven years a citizen of the United States and not an inhabitant of the State choosing him." These are all the restrictions or limitations put upon our powers and jurisdiction in determining the qualifications of members. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this being the true construction of the Constitution and Brigham H. Roberts having no constitutional disqualification, let us see if he has any other disqualification.

On December 4, 1899, when he appeared here to take the oath of office, this House, on objection being made, then and there denied him the right to be sworn in on the ground that it was charged he was ineligible, and a special committee of nine members was selected to investigate the charges made, with power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath.

THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

This committee have made their examinations and investigations and have unanimously agreed upon the following finding of facts:

We find that Brigham H. Roberts was elected as a Representative to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah and was at the date of his election above the age of 25 years; that he had been for more than seven years a naturalized citizen of the United States and was an inhabitant of the State of Utah.

We further find that about 1878 he married Louisa Smith, his first and lawful wife, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since their marriage has borne him six children.

That about 1885 he married as his plural wife Celia Dibble, with whom he has ever since lived as such, and who since such marriage has borne him six children, of whom the last were twins, born August 11, 1897.

That some years after his said marriage to Celia Dibble he contracted another plural marriage with Margaret C. Shipp, with whom he has ever since lived in the habit and repute of marriage. Your committee is unable to fix the exact date of this marriage. It does not appear that he held her out as his wife before January, 1897, or that she before that date held him out as her husband, or that before that date they were reputed to be husband and wife.

That these facts were generally known in Utah, publicly charged against him during his campaign for election, and were not denied by him.

That the testimony bearing on these facts was taken in the presence of Mr. Roberts, and that he fully cross-examined the witnesses, but declined to place himself upon the witness stand.

Seven members of the committee, Republicans and Democrats, favor the exclusion of Mr. Roberts. Two members of the committee, one a Republican and the other a Democrat, favor his admission and then his immediate expulsion.

THE GROUNDS OF EXCLUSION.

The majority of the committee find three distinct grounds of disqualification. In their report they say:

Three main grounds are asserted for the exclusion of Roberts from membership in the House.

I. He is disqualified by reason of his violation of the Edmunds Act and the declared policy of disqualification in section 8.

II. He is disqualified because for years he has been living in open, flagrant, and notorious defiance of the statutes of Utah and in open, flagrant, and notorious defiance of the statutes of Congress—of the very body which he now seeks to enter; in defiance of the law as declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, and in defiance of the proclamations of Presidents Harrison and Cleveland. He has persistently held himself above the law. This is disloyalty in its very essence. In the language of Chief Justice Waite in the Reynolds case, this would in effect "permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances."

III. His election as Representative is an explicit and most offensive violation of the understanding by which Utah was admitted as a State. It is an act of unmatched audacity, the possibility of which could no more have been considered when the State of Utah was admitted than that a specific permission would have been given to renew the practice of polygamous marriages.

THE WAR AGAINST POLYGAMY.

The Congress of the United States has been fighting polygamy in Utah ever since 1862, but all its efforts failed to overcome the subterfuges and devices of the Mormon Church and of Mormon judges and Mormon juries until in 1882 the Edmunds Act was passed by Congress, making a polygamist ineligible to hold any office under the United States.

And in utter, reckless, defiant violation and disregard of this law, this man Roberts comes here and demands the high office of a seat in this House. He is a polygamist of the rankest sort and of the most wicked and reprehensible type. He has been convicted of polygamy and confined in a penitentiary as a punishment for his crime, and has been pardoned out on condition that he would abandon his polygamous practices and observe the laws against unlawful cohabitation. But instead of doing this he has returned like a dog to his vomit and like a sow to her mire, and is now living with his three wives, in open, flagrant, defiant violation of the law and in willful, wanton, wicked disregard of the conditions of the President's pardon.

MONOGAMY OUR LAW AND OUR RELIGION.

Marriage in our law, and in the law of every Christian nation in the world, is the union of one man and one woman so long as they both shall live, to the exclusion of all others, by an obligation which neither can dissolve during the lifetime of the other without the consent of the state. This sort of marriage is termed monogamy.

If monogamy be overthrown and polygamy substituted, our social system would soon come to an end, Christianity itself would be discredited and fearfully crippled, our civilization would degenerate into a sort of barbarism, and the fabric of free government would tumble into ruins.

And yet the Mormon Church, in its unholy scheme of lust, treason, and ambition, would knock out the master bolt of monogamy that binds our social system, our religion, our civilization, and our liberty all into one harmonious and happy whole, and thereby wreck at one fell stroke the work of thousands of years of the best efforts of the best men and best women of the best nations of the earth.

Hence it is that I brand polygamy as a sort of high treason against mankind, a high treason against religion and law, a high treason against civilization and liberty, a high treason against the best hopes of men and women, and a bold and impious defiance of the God of high heaven.

Mr. Speaker, we can not admit here a man who is the practicer, the advocate, the champion, and the representative of this sort of high treason, and if admitted, it shall never be done with the aid and sanction of my vote.

One of the best ways to extirpate polygamy is to put upon it the brand of public odium, and to make that brand so large and so deep and so black that it may not only be seen all the way to Utah, but all over the United States and all over the world. The ax must be laid to the root of this upas tree of polygamy, and my vote this day shall give it one deep stroke, even if nobody else strikes with me.

POLYGAMY A CURSE AS WELL AS A CRIME.

Some of these Mormon women whose husbands or fathers have several wives may, for reasons best known to themselves, pretend that they are satisfied; but, Mr. Speaker, they are not satisfied. God has not made them that way. No religion has ever been found that can make them satisfied. Woman's heart can never enshrine a man who claims another woman for a wife; or if it could, grief and tears would be her constant portion. In secret and in silence the deep grief of the first Mormon wife feeds upon her loving heart, blasts the roses in her cheeks, and deadens the fires of joy in her once beauteous eyes. In words she may deny her grief, but God has written that grief too plainly upon her face for words to gainsay it. Polygamy is a cankerworm that feeds by night and feeds by day upon everything that is pure and sweet in the heart of every woman whose body and soul are chained to the carcass of a polygamous husband.

There is no nuptial happiness except in the loving union of two persons, and only two—one man and one woman. Truly has Tom Moore sung:

> There's a bliss beyond all that the minstrel has told,
> When two that are linked in one heavenly tie,
> With heart never changing, and brow never cold,
> Love on through all ills, and love on till they die.
>
> One hour of a passion so sacred is worth
> Whole ages of heartless and wandering bliss;
> And, O! if there be an Elysium on earth,
> It is this, it is this.

And I may add if there be a hell on earth it is to be found in the harems of polygamy.

Polygamy is not only a crime against society, religion, law, and civilization, but it is the crime of crimes against womanhood; the crime of crimes against wifehood; the crime of crimes against childhood. It robs the woman of a husband and robs the child of a father.

If there be a bolt in the armory of heaven specially forged to fall upon and blast some monstrous violator of woman's dearest rights and man's holiest duties, great God of the skies, let that bolt fall in all its red-hot, seething fury upon the impious head of the preacher of polygamy.

Let this House say this day to Mormon polygamy: "Thus far shalt thou come and no farther, and here shall thy vile waves be stayed. Thou shalt not pollute these floors with the slime of thy treasonable villainy."

THE MORMON RELIGION.

I have yet other grounds of objection to the admission of Mr. Roberts; and here in my place I charge that he appears here not so much a Representative of the State of Utah as a representative of the Mormon Church, a hierarchy whose aim is to supplant the Christian religion and overthrow the Constitution and Government of the United States, and to the elucidation and establishment of this charge I invite your attention and the attention of all the members of this House.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as we all know, Mormonism was begotten by fraud upon the body of credulity, and nursed into strength by hope of gain. The so-called Book of Mormon, written as a biblical romance by an eccentric preacher named Spaulding, fell into the hands of one Joseph Smith, a sort of fanatical crank, who wore a high white hat, kept a cake and beer shop, and pretended to have seen many supernatural beings, and even to have had wrestling matches with the devil.

Joseph Smith pretended that he had dug up near Palmyra, N. Y., some so-called golden plates covered with Egyptian hieroglyphics, and these plates he pretended to translate, but, in reality, his translation was nothing but Parson Spaulding's biblical romance somewhat changed. And in this way, about the year 1820, came into existence the Book of Mormon, the so-called Bible of the Mormon Church, denominated by them the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints." After settling first at Kirtland, Ohio, then in Nauvoo, Ill., in 1847 they emigrated to Utah and founded Salt Lake City.

THE SPREAD OF MORMONISM.

From this wretched and farcical beginning has grown that monstrous hierarchy called Mormonism, which has not only spread its influence all over the great State of Utah, but is intrenching itself in Nevada, in Idaho, in Colorado, in Wyoming, and in Arizona; and I think it safe to say that the number of Mormons in the United States to-day is over 300,000.

For fifty years the Mormon Church has been sending its missionaries all over the United States and Canada and over parts of Europe, especially Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and England, and these missionaries having gathered up thousands and tens of thousands of converts, mostly poor people, by telling them Utah was the new promised land and that everyone who went there and became a good Mormon would receive from the Lord, through the Mormon Church, a large tract of land and all the assistance necessary to build them a house and clear up and fence a good farm. They were also told that Joseph Smith was the special prophet of the Almighty, and that it had been revealed to Smith and later on to his successor, Brigham Young, that the Mormons were the true saints of the Lord and were destined to possess the whole earth, and that the saints were even now gathering together in Utah, as both the Christian Bible and the Mormon bible had foretold.

And, Mr. Speaker, these Mormon missionaries are more numerous and more busy than ever. In the States of the South they are especially active, and are to be found in every section. Last year they had large gatherings in some of the Southern cities, and hundreds of Mormon missionaries and converts attended, and great demonstrations of rejoicing and thanksgiving were made at these convocations.

The Mormon priesthood carefully conceals its secret purposes from even its own converts. Their missionaries preach to satisfy the yearnings of the poor and the sympathies of the unsophisticated and to delight those who love the wonderful, the mysterious, and the supernatural. Nine-tenths of the doctrines they teach are, in substance, Christian truths, and in this way they gain access to the confidence of many, and thus ultimately lead them astray.

MORMON PLANS EXPOSED.

In order to know what Mormonism really is we must go to Utah and must learn what it was when Brigham Young was in power, before the Mormon priesthood had entered upon their campaign to deceive the people of the United States into admitting Utah into the Union as a State.

I will here lay down propositions in reference to the Mormon Church, and I will prove them to the satisfaction of every fair-minded man:

First. Not religion but political power is the chief object of the Mormon Church.

Second. That to obtain political power the priesthood have organized an ecclesiastical hierarchy, whose purpose is to exercise absolute and arbitrary power over all the members of their church, and through these members over as many others as possible.

Third. That the ambition of this hierarchy is first to control the Rocky Mountain States, then through these States to control the United States, and through the United States to control the whole world.

Fourth. That in the furtherance of these plans polygamy was ordained in order to more rapidly multiply the population and to bind the members together as common participators in a common crime.

Fifth. That in the execution of their plans the Mormon hierarchy will unhesitatingly commit any crime, and have committed hundreds of times the crimes of treason, murder, arson, and robbery, and have practiced frauds, manufactured falsehoods, and participated in all manner of villainies.

The first witness I will call is Bishop Lunt, one of the chief priests of Mormonism, who, in 1880, made this statement to a correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle to show the growth and plans and mission of Mormonism:

WHAT BISHOP LUNT SAID.

Like a grain of mustard seed was the truth planted in Zion, and it is destined to spread all over the world. Our church has been organized only fifty years, and yet behold its wealth and power. We look forward with perfect confidence to the day when we will hold the reins of the United States Government. * * * After that we expect to control the continent. To-day we hold the balance of power in Idaho, we rule Utah absolutely, and in a very short time will hold the balance of power in Arizona and Wyoming. And we design to plant colonies in Washington Territory. * * *

Our vote is solid and will always remain so. It will be thrown where the most good will be accomplished for the church. Then in some great political crisis the two present political parties will bid for our support. We will then hold the balance of power, and will dictate to the country. Utah will be admitted as a polygamous State, and the other Territories we have subjugated will be admitted also. We possess the ability to turn the political scale in any particular community we desire. * * * Our people are obedient. When they are called by the church they promptly obey. They sell their houses, lands, and stock, and remove to any part of the country the church may direct them to. You can imagine the results which wisdom may bring about with the assistance of a church organization such as ours. It is the completest one the world has ever seen.

CONGRESSMAN CRADLEBAUGH'S TESTIMONY.

My second witness is the Hon. John Cradlebaugh, a Delegate from the then Territory, now State, of Nevada, and who had been a United States judge in Utah. Nevada adjoins Utah for 400 miles. While a member of this House, in 1863, Judge Cradlebaugh said, among other things:

Having resided for some time among the Mormons, become acquainted with their ecclesiastical polity, their habits and their crimes, I feel I would not be discharging my duty if I failed to impart such information as I have acquired in regard to this people in our midst who are building up, consolidating, and daringly carrying out a system subversive of the Constitution and laws and fatal to morals and true religion.

Mormonism is one of the monstrosities of the age in which we live. It seems to have been reserved for the model Republic of the world, for the nineteenth century, * * * to produce an idle, worthless vagabond of an impostor, who heralds forth a creed repulsive to every refined mind, opposed to every generous impulse of the human heart, and a faith which commands a violation of the rights of hospitality, sanctifies falsehood, enforces the systematic degradation of woman, not only permits but orders the commission of the vilest lusts in the name of the Almighty God himself, and teaches that it is a sacred duty to commit the crimes of theft and murder. It is surprising that such a faith, taught, too, in the coarsest and most vulgar way, should meet with any success. Yet, in less than a third of a century it girdles the globe. Its missionaries are planted in every place. You find them all over Europe, thick through England and Wales, traversing Asia and Africa, and braving the billows of the southern oceans, to seek proselytes. And, as if to crown its achievements, it establishes itself in the heart of one of the greatest and most powerful Governments of the world, establishes therein a theocratic government overriding all other government, putting the laws at defiance. * * *

Mormonism repudiates the celibacy imposed by the Catholic religion upon its priesthood, and takes in its stead the voluptuous impositions of the Mohammedan Church. It preaches openly that the more wives and children its men have in this world the purer, the more influential and conspicuous they will be in the next; that wives, children, and property will not only be restored but doubled in the resurrection. It adopts the use of prayers for the dead and baptism as a part of its creed. Mormons claim to be favored with marvelous gifts, the power of speaking in tongues, of casting out devils, of curing the sick, and of healing the lame and the halt. They claim that they have a living prophet, seer, and revelator who holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and through whose intercession alone access can be had. They recognize the Bible, but they interpret it to suit themselves, and hold that it is subject to be changed by new revelation.

One of their doctrines is that of continued progression to ultimate perfection. They say God was but a man, who went on developing and increasing until he reached his present high capacity; and they teach that Mormons will be equal to him; in a word, that good Mormons will become gods. They teach the shedding of blood for the remission of sins, or, in other words, that if a Mormon apostatizes his throat shall be cut and his blood poured out upon the ground for the remission of his sin. * * * They hold that the prophet's revelations are binding upon their consciences and that they are bound to obey him in all things. They say that the earth and the fullness thereof is the Lords; that they are God's chosen people on earth; that their mission on earth is to take charge of God's property; * * * in other words, they teach that it is a duty to rob and steal from the gentiles. * * *

They claim that Mormonism is to go on spreading until it overthrows all the nations of the earth, and, if necessary for its accomplishment, its success shall be consummated by the sword; that Jackson County, Mo., is to be the seat of empire of the Mormon Church; that hence the Mormons are to be finally gathered, and from that Zion shall proceed a power that will dethrone kings, subvert dynasties, and subjugate all the nations of the earth.

THE CRIMES OF MORMONISM.

Judge Cradlebaugh then proceeds to enumerate the specific crimes and atrocities committed by the Mormon priesthood, showing that the head of the Mormon Church is supreme autocrat, from whose command there is no appeal and whose power to enforce his will is swiftly put forth and effectively executed, by fraud if profitable, by force if expedient, by murder if necessary.

Judge Cradlebaugh shows how the Mormon Church controlled juries and judges, how it intimidated its opponents, how it degraded and bestialized the women, how it browbeat the officers of the United States and forced them to resign, how the Danites, or "destroying angels," stood ever ready to execute the orders of the Mormon Church, how Gentiles were murdered for suing Mormons in the courts, how many other Gentiles were murdered on various pretexts, and how, at the Mountain Meadows, a whole emigrant train of Arkansas people on their way to California were treacherously massacred and their unburied bodies left on the naked earth to be the food of vultures, crows, and wolves—123 men, women, and children being butchered as though they were noxious beasts.

Judge Cradlebaugh quotes a large number of extracts from the sermons and discourses of the Mormon leaders, and then, by way of summary, adds:

It will be seen that the scheme of these religionists is quite broad enough to embrace polygamy, adultery, incest, perjury, blasphemy, robbery, and murder as a part of their devilish plan.

Brigham Young was then the head of the Mormon hierarchy, and Judge Cradlebaugh thus characterizes him:

Brigham's house is at once tabernacle, capitol, and harem, and Brigham himself is king, priest, lawgiver, and chief polygamist. Is treason hatched in Utah? Brigham is the head traitor. Are rebel troops mustered against the United States? Brigham is their commander in chief. Is a law to be enacted? Brigham's advice determines it. Is an offending "Gentile" or an apostate Mormon to be assassinated? The order emanates from Brigham. In addition to all this he heals the afflicted by the laying on of hands and comforts the widow by becoming her husband.

THE DISLOYALTY OF THE MORMON CHURCH.

Judge Cradlebaugh thus concludes his terrible indictment of Mormonism:

The people of Utah have nothing but ill will toward our Government. The great masses know nothing of our institutions—they come to Zion, not to America. * * * Upon arriving in Utah they hear nothing but abuse of our people. The whole fountain of patriotism is polluted, and they are taught that they owe neither allegiance nor love to our Government. Treason and insubordination are openly taught.

And this is the monstrous consolidation of church and state, of polygamy and villainy, of fraud and treason that has sworn, in its ambitious and lecherous heart, to "cram polygamy down the throat of the American Congress," and some men on this floor say we must swallow the dose, even if we have to vomit it up the next minute. Mr. Speaker, I for one refuse to take the medicine; my stomach gags at the dose. [Laughter and applause.]

CONGRESSMAN CASSIDY'S DECLARATIONS.

My third witness is Hon. George W. Cassidy, another Congressman from the State of Nevada, who, in March, 1882, said in a speech on this floor:

The Mormon religion, so called, as advocated and promulgated by the lecherous element in Utah, is not a religion of any kind within the true meaning of that word. I denounce it as licentiousness, as lust, as prostitution, as a parody on religion, and as a corrupt and corrupting system, utterly and absolutely unworthy of a moment's consideration on the ground of religious toleration.

It is a menace to and at war with every principle of free government as established irrevocably, let us hope, in the fundamental law of the land. It knows no allegience to the Constitution of the United States; it seeks to place church high above state; it mocks at our institutions; it defies our laws; it condones perjury; it justifies murder and assassination, and, finally, it exalts the vilest of social evils above the decencies and proprieties of life as taught by every other civilized community on God's green earth. Such is the Mormon Church, and such is Mormonism as we find it to-day, strongly intrenched, almost beyond the legislative power of the Government to dislodge, in the mountains of Utah. It has grown from a mere handful at Nauvoo to a membership of nearly 200,000 in the West—

That was in 1882, remember, Mr. Speaker—

absolutely controlling and dominating the civil administration of Utah and holding the balance of powe between the two great political parties in all the adjacent States and Territories. I submit that it is time that the mailed hand was applied; time that this vile monster was checked and placed in course of ultimate extinction.

Such are the words of Congressman Cassidy, who lived among these Mormons and represented the State of Nevada, which adjoins Utah on the west, and he knew whereof he spoke.

In the same speech, referring to the mass of the people of Utah, Mr. Cassidy said:

The great mass of Mormons are foreign born. They are proselyted and transplanted from grinding poverty in the Old World to comfortable homes in Utah by the Mormon Church. The change is so marked and marvelous that they regard it as an inspiration and praise the Mormon faith accordingly. They are incapable of explaining the betterment of their condition on any other hypothesis. Hence the deep hold which their plotting leaders have on them. All they are, and all they have, and all they hope to be, they ascribe to the Mormon Church. They attest their fidelity and gratitude fully and unanswerably year after year by the voluntary surrender of a one-tenth part of their earnings in the shape of tithings for the maintenance of the church and the dissemination of its doctrines among the heathens here in the East and in European countries.

CONGRESSMAN BELTZHOOVER'S SUMMARY STATEMENT.

I will call one more witness and then close the evidence. This witness is Congressman Frank E. Beltzhoover, of Pennsylvania, who, after a careful examination of the reports of the committee of Congress that investigated Utah affairs, reached the following conclusions, which he announced on the floor of this House:

1. Polygamy is the basis of a fanatical hierarchy which is antagonistic to our institutions and laws, and no one who is subject to it can be well disposed toward the Government of the United States.

2. It is a disgrace to our civilization and offensive to the moral sense of mankind.

3. It breeds open defiance to our laws and renders a republican form of government impossible.

4. It is hostile to civil society and fatal to the welfare of the state.

Having shown what the Mormon Church is and what its nefarious plans are, I will now show what sort of a man Brigham H. Roberts is; and I know no better way to do this than to read these extracts from the report of the committee in his case:

THE STATUS OF THE CLAIMANT.

Let us see in what attitude and status the claimant appears and claims the right to be sworn in. No appreciative opinion as to his status can be formed without some knowledge of the judicial and statutory characterization of his offense.

Section 5352, passed by Congress in 1862, declared:

"Every person having a husband or wife living who marries another, whether married or single, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years."

It did not, however, make unlawful the practice of polygamous living.

There was no pretense of obedience to this law in Utah, the claim being made that it was unconstitutional because an interference with the religion of the Mormons. There is no doubt but that a large body of the Mormons, not only those who practiced polygamy but those that did not, believed that the act of 1862 was an unconstitutional infraction of their rights.

In 1878, however, in the case of Reynolds vs. The United States (98 U. S., 145), the Supreme Court held that section 5352 was "in all respects valid and constitutional." So that after 1878 no man in Utan could claim that the practice of polygamy was right as related to the laws of the land without doing violence not only to the statute but to the unanimous opinion of the highest court of the land.

The opinion in this case was by Chief Justice Waite, and in the course of it polygamy receives judicial characterization as follows:

"Polygamy has always been odious among the northern and western nations of Europe, and, until the establishment of the Mormon Church, was almost exclusively a feature of the life of Asiatic and of African people."

* * * * * * *

POLYGAMY DESTRUCTIVE OF FREE GOVERNMENT.

"Marriage, while from its very nature a sacred obligation, is nevertheless, in most civilized nations, a civil contract, and usually regulated by law. Upon it society may be said to be built, and out of its fruits spring social relations and social obligations and duties, with which government is necessarily required to deal. In fact, according as monogamous or polygamous marriages are allowed, do we find the principles on which the government of the people to a greater or less extent rests. Professor Lieber says polygamy leads to the patriarchal principle, and which, when applied to large communities, fetters the people in stationary despotism, while that principle can not long exist in connection with monogamy. Chancellor Kent observes that this remark is equally striking and profound.

"Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land and, in effect, to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances."

There was no machinery for enforcing the act of 1862 until 1882, when Congress passed what is known as the Edmunds law. This act defined and punished bigamy and polygamy in the same terms as the act of 1862, but also punished unlawful cohabitation, and declared ineligible for office any person who maintained the status of a polygamist or who cohabited with more than one woman.

Section 8 of that act is as follows:

"That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for such Territory or place, or under the United States."

This law had not only the force of a public law, but it was the outcome of years of agitation and reflection. It crystallized the sober sense of the American people; it represented the settled views of our wisest and most conservative statesmen and later received the stamp of approval from the Supreme Court of the United States in many well-considered cases.

ROBERTS LIVING IN POLYGAMY.

Prior to 1882 Brigham H. Roberts had married one Louisa Smith. She has borne him six children, and is still living.

About 1885, when Utah was fairly ringing with the blows of the Edmunds Act of 1882; while numerous prosecutions were going on, and after the Supreme Court had passed upon the validity of the act; when the American people supposed that polygamy had received its deathblow; when no man of the many whose cases went to the United States Supreme Court pretended that the provisions against polygamous marriages were invalid, with all these facts insistently before him, Brigham H. Roberts took another wife—his first polygamous wife—Celia Dibble by name, who in the following twelve years bore him six children.

This second wife he married in defiance of the Edmunds law. He spat upon that law; he declared by his act that he recognized no binding rule upon him of a law of Congress; he declared by it that he recognized a higher law. The Congress of the United States was to him an object of contempt. The Supreme Court of the United States might declare the law for others, but not for him. He laughed at its futile decrees and spurned its admonitions. The Executive which had declared in solemn messages its gratification that polygamy seemed gone forever he defied and despised. Of what consequence to him were laws of Congress and declarations of the highest court and proclamations of Presidents as against his sensual interpretation of a sensual doctrine?

And all the time the Edmunds law declared not only polygamy but cohabitation with more than one woman unlawful. Roberts not only bigamously married a second wife, but he persisted in violating and defiantly trampling under foot every other provision of the act.

But he had not yet sufficiently proclaimed his utter contempt for the Supreme Court, for Congress and its most solemn enactments. A few years later he took a third wife.

From the time of his second marriage to the third he cohabited with two women. From the date of his third marriage down to his election, and, we doubt not to the present time, he has been cohabiting with three women. * * *

ROBERTS'S CONDUCT DISLOYAL.

The amnesty proclamation of 1868 and 1894 never embraced him. There was never a moment when its provisions were complied with by him. There has never been a moment since he married Celia Dibble down to the present moment when he has not been a persistent, notorious, defiant, demoralizing, audacious violator of every provision of the State and Federal law relating to polygamy and its attendant crimes. And this is the man who seeks admission to this body.

It was declared in the Kentucky cases, and in the Thomas case in the Senate, and in the test-oath act of 1862 that disloyalty created ineligibility; that fidelity to the Constitution was a necessary qualification to membership in this body. What is loyalty? It is faithfulness to the sovereign or the lawful government. A mere violator of the law may not necessarily be disloyal. One may violate the law and still recognize the sovereign and the lawfulness of the government. His only concern may be that he shall not be found out and punished. But that man is surely disloyal, and in the fullest sense disloyal, when by his words, his acts, and his persistent practices he declares unequivocally in this wise:

"You have solemnly enacted certain laws; you have crystallized into statute the will of the sovereign people. I bid defiance to your law. I will not recognize it. I here and now before your very eyes do the things you say I shall not do. I recognize a higher law than your man-made law—no law of yours can relieve me from the obligations which I thus take in defiance of your enactments. The only thing I promise not to do is to take a fourth wife."

The case of a bribe taker, or of a burglar, or of a murderer is trivial, is a mere ripple on the surface of things, compared with this far-reaching, deep-rooted, audacious lawlessness.

What was the case of Whittemore, who was excluded, as hereafter set out? He had not been convicted of any crime, but a committee had found that he had sold a cadetship. He did not pretend that he was wiser or greater than the people, or that he had the right to sell cadetships and was above the law. The acts of Roberts are essentially disloyal. They deny the sovereign, they repudiate the lawful, government. Look at them from whatever point you will, they are subversive of government. They do not merely breed anarchy, they are anarchy.

We observe that this is not a moral question. It goes to the root of our own constitutional government. What we have just quoted from Justice Waite and Justice Matthews are as much a part of our Constitution as the written instrument itself.

We have thus presented to our view the status of Roberts. What are we going to do about it?

We assert that it is our duty, as it is our right, to exclude him; to prevent his taking the oath and participating in the councils of the nation.

ROBERTS'S DECLARATION ON POLYGAMY.

In an article published in his newspaper, the Improvement Era, in May, 1898, and signed by him, this man, Brigham H. Roberts, says:

Therefore I conclude that since God did approve of the plural-marriage custom of the ancient patriarchs, prophets, and kings of Israel, it is not at all to be wondered at that, in the dispensation of the fullness of time, in which He has promised restitution of all things, that God should again establish that system of marriage. And the fact of God's approval of plural marriage in ancient times is a complete defense of the righteousness of the marriage system introduced by revelation through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Joseph Smith received a commandment from the Lord to introduce that order of marriage into the church, and on the strength of that revelation, and not by reason of anything that is written in the Jewish scriptures, the Latter-Day Saints practice plural marriage.

Polygamy is not adultery, for, were it so considered, then Abraham, Jacob, and the prophets who practiced it would not be allowed an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven, and if polygamy is not adultery, then it can not be classed as a sin at all.

It appears to the writer that modern Christians must either learn to tolerate polygamy or give up forever the glorious hope of resting in Abraham's bosom.

That which He (God) approves, and so strikingly approves, must be not only not bad, but positively good, pure, and holy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have demonstrated the truth of my charge that the Mormon Church is a treasonable and fanatical conspiracy that aims to supplant the Christian religion and overthrow the Constitution of the United States; and Brigham H. Roberts, by preferring the laws of Mormonism to those of the United States, by preferring the practices of Mormonism to those of Christianity, shows that he appears here to represent the monstrosities of Mormonism rather than the State of Utah, and on this ground alone I would deem myself abundantly justified in voting against his admission to a seat in this House. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

THE CONSTITUTION MUST PROHIBIT POLYGAMY.

Mr. Speaker, the welfare of Utah and the welfare of the United States require that polygamy should be wiped out of existence, and that a brand of shame should be burned into the forehead of every man who is guilty of this crime, so demoralizing to the parties and so destructive to society, and in order most effectually to do this, on the 8th of this month I introduced into this House the following joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to disqualify persons found guilty of polygamy or polygamous cohabitation from holding office.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment be proposed to the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three fourths of said legislatures, shall become and be a part of the Constitution of the United States, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"SECTION 1. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector for President or Vice-President, or hold any other office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States or under any State who shall be found guilty of polygamy or polygamous cohabitation; but Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation."

This amendment, if adopted and duly enforced by appropriate legislation, will forever end polygamy, and when polygamy is ended the Mormon Church will disintegrate and tumble into ruins, and we will be plagued with its debaucheries, conspiracies, impieties, and other villainies no more forever.

UTAH'S BREACH OF FAITH.

When Congress voted that Utah might be a State of the Union, there was a solemn compact made that polygamy and polygamous cohabitation should be forever things of the past. Congress, in the enabling act, stipulated that the convention of Utah "should provide by ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State—

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Pursuant to the said act, a constitutional convention was held at Salt Lake City, and the following provisions were framed by the convention and adopted by the people as a part of the constitution:

ARTICLE III.—ORDINANCE.

The following ordinance shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of this State:

First. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment is guaranteed. No inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship; but polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Utah had long been denied statehood because of the fear that if made a State she would legalize polygamy and drive out of her midst all who were not Mormons. But Utah came forward with all manner of solemn promises. The Mormon Church pretended to have a revelation prohibiting polygamy in the future, and the constitutional convention pretended to solemnly adopt the provision I have just read, forever prohibiting polygamy. Some of us had doubts, but the great majority of us said, "Admit her; she has pledged herself to do away with polygamy forever."

UTAH HAS FORFEITED HER RIGHT TO REPRESENTATION.

And so Utah was admitted into the Union. And what was her first act, Mr. Speaker? It was to spit upon her promises and tread them under her feet; it was to practically ignore her own constitution and to violate the enabling act of Congress; it was to perpetrate the most flagrant, willful, and wicked act of bad faith ever committed in the history of any people, civilized or barbarous. How? By sending as her Representative to the Congress of the United States a man who is not only an open, avowed, defiant polygamist, living with three wives and raising families by each of them, but who is a teacher, an advocate, a champion of polygamy, and maintains that it is a divine institution and to practice it is to conform to the highest and best phase of religion!

And so I charge here, in my place on this floor, as a member of the American Congress, that the State of Utah, by this wicked, causeless, unprovoked, and wanton breach of good faith, has forfeited her right to representation in this Congress, and on this ground alone I would feel abundantly justified in denying Mr. Roberts a seat on this floor and denying Utah any Representative until she make amends by electing and sending here as her Representative a man who, by precept and practice, shows to the world that he believes polygamy to be a crime and those who are guilty of it to be criminals who should be punished by confinement in the penitentiary of the State rather than honored by a seat in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

CHRISTIANITY OUR HIGHER LAW.

I maintain that this is a Christian country and that we are a Christian people. Our forefathers brought our Christianity with them when they came across the Atlantic, just as they brought the English language with them, just as they brought the common law and the jurisprudence of equity with them; and when we set up here a Government of ourselves, by ourselves, and for ourselves, it was no more necessary to write in the body of our Constitution that this shall be a Christian country than to write that our language shall be English and that the common law and equity shall be the foundations of our jurisprudence.

No, Mr. Speaker, when our ancestors crossed the desert of sea to reach this new Canaan, as the Israelites crossed the desert of sand to reach the old Canaan, they no more left the Christian religion behind them than did the children of Israel leave behind them in Egypt the religion of Abraham. Christianity was written in the hearts of our ancestors a thousand years before they came to America, and our Constitution and laws presuppose Christianity and are founded upon it as this Capitol is founded on the solid earth.

And when the Constitution of the United States had been framed after many trials and tribulations, when it had been duly written out in solemn form on parchment sheets to be signed by the immortal sages who framed it, there were added these significant words:

> Done in convention by the unanimous consent of the States present, the seventeenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven.

And thus it will be seen that the signers of the Constitution recognized the Christian religion in calling its founder their "Lord." Men who fought seven years and made many sacrifices to expel royalty and extirpate lordship from the earth uncovered their heads and bowed down in homage of their Lord, Jesus, the founder of their religion; and herein, I maintain, is a recognition by the Constitution itself that the religion founded by "our Lord" Jesus Christ is the religion of the United States, and that all other religions are foreign and their existence only tolerated.

Thus, believing that Christianity is the religion of our nation and a part of the higher law of our land, I boldly maintain and declare that Mormonism is a vicious excrescence on the body of our religion, and is only Mohammedanism set up in our country disguised in new garments and passing under the alias of a new name. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

THE VILLAINIES OF THE MORMON HIERARCHY.

The Mormon Church, as I have shown, has been guilty of every great crime found in the catalogue of infamy. It preached and practiced treason and raised a rebellion against the Government of the United States, so that it took a large army to suppress it. In September, 1857, at the Mountain Meadows, the Mormon priesthood massacred an Arkansas emigrant train, containing 132 men, women, and children, under circumstances of appalling and unparalleled treachery and barbarity, and their bones lay unburied on the plains for years.

The Mormon Danites, sometimes called the "Destroying Angels," were an organized band of murderers, acting as the sword of the priesthood to slay every man against whose name the mark of death was placed, and the terrorism they caused by their secret and deadly work silenced all opposition to the despotic mandates of Mormonism and made the rule of the priesthood more supreme and absolute than any tyranny of church or state that has ever existed in a civilized land since civilization began. I am informed that in their Endowment House at Salt Lake City those Mormons who take the highest degree in their hierarchy swear "eternal hostility to the Government of the United States." and are taught that the Government of the United States is the Antichrist, and that the Mormon Church will eventually overthrow it on the field of Armageddon.

During the war of the rebellion the Mormon leaders rejoiced over the strife and the bloodshed and the prospect of the destruction of the Union, and when Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston was killed at Shiloh the Mormon Church offered up thanksgiving, because he had commanded the United States Army that put down the Mormon rebellion in 1858.

ROBERTS A PUBLIC ENEMY.

And this man Roberts, I brand him as the enemy of public and private morality, as an impudent and high-handed violator of one of our most sacred laws, as a glaring example of an attempt to enthrone a monstrous crime in one of the highest places in our land, and charge that any favor shown him is an outrage upon our Christian citizenship, a palliation of an offense utterly without excuse or extenuation, and a condonation of a transgression of the laws both of God and man so monstrous as to make the condonation itself closely akin to a crime.

But while thus characterizing Roberts I do not forget, nor must any of us forget, that he is also the representative of a criminal organization in the State of Utah, and was sent here by that organization to gain honor for itself by dishonoring us, to glorify its high priests and bishops by bringing Christianity to shame, and to fulfill the pretended prophecies of its apostles by setting up their abomination of desolation in our holy places.

The people of the United States have called upon us to bar the doors of Congress against this man. More than forty bishops of various churches, the presidents of nearly all of our leading colleges, thousands of our most eminent public men, and hundreds of thousands of men and women in every walk of life have petitioned us not to admit him. The legislatures of many of our States have joined in these appeals.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Epworth League, the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, the American Missionary Association, the Congregational Home Missionary Society, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and scores of other organizations of the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and other religious, charitable, moral, and social organizations, representing millions of the best men and the best women in our country, have joined in the universal chorus for the exclusion of Roberts from this Hall.

We can not admit these polygamous Mormons to places of honor and trust.

> It is as if the fiends prevailed
> Against the Seraphs they assailed,
> And throned on heavenly seats should dwell
> The freed inheritors of hell.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to supplement the very concise and able speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] by stating the road that I have traveled in reaching the result that will be demonstrated in my vote upon this question. I entered upon the study of the question with serious doubt about the power or propriety of the House of Representatives excluding a member at the door of the House; but I was very greatly encouraged in the fact that it can be done by the vote of those distinguished gentlemen, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who both voted, with their eyes wide open, after full discussion of both sides of the question, that he may be stopped at the threshold of the House.

Now, I have listened to all that has been said; I have heard practically every word. I have read all that has been printed and published. I listened with the greatest interest to the wonderfully able speech of the gentleman from Maine; and I make this remark simply because of the foolish publication made last evening in one of the daily papers, a publication that was absolutely and totally unwarranted as a matter of fact in every respect. I have never heard an abler argument upon false ground than the argument of the gentleman from Maine. I never heard a greater struggle in behalf of any man than has been made by the gentleman from Maine in behalf of this member as to his claim to be sworn in. I have heard, I suppose, more than 300 criminal cases. I heard the case of Dr. Jamieson before the Lord Chief Justice's court in England. I read and heard the Guiteau case in Washington, and have read the Mollineux case in New York, and have never known so able a defense of any man's position as has been made by the gentleman from Maine. So much for that.

Now, having listened to the gentleman's speech and carefully weighed it, I will summarize my speech, and then the time will be at the disposal of the gentlemen controlling it.

I find, and I defy contradiction, and it has not been contradicted yet by any man who has spoken on either side of this question—

First. That the House has never denied that it had the right to refuse to permit a member-elect to be sworn in, although he had all of the three constitutional qualifications.

Second. That it has in many instances affirmatively declared that it had the right to thus refuse.

Third. That the right to so refuse is supported on principle, and by the overwhelming weight of authority of constitutional writers and judicial opinions on analogous constitutional questions; and Fourth. Upon the converse proposition of admission and then expulsion—

And I assert in the language of the committee:

First. That the House has never declared that it had the right to expel a member for acts unrelated to him as such, or for acts committed prior to his election.

There you have got to meet an unqualified and unbroken line of precedents. We have had Congress for a hundred-odd years now. We have had some exceedingly bad members, and there has been one unbroken ruling that, except for some act done after the election and in his relation as a member, there was no power to expel. And—

Second. That both the House and the Senate have in many instances refused to expel members where the proof of guilt was conclusive, but where the acts complained of were unrelated to the members as such.

No man has assailed successfully any of these propositions. They stand here as axioms of the law of the land, and, so believing, I shall vote for the majority report, the result of long labor, patient investigation, and patriotic devotion to duty. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time that has been placed at my disposal I can not hope to cover all the questions that arise in this case. I do not complain of that limit of time, because it was with my own consent that a part of the time which might have fallen to me was yielded to others. I thought it entirely proper that the chairman of the committee and the one of the minority whom they might select should have all the time necessary to present completely and exhaustively their respective positions, and that as many members as possible who had not been upon the committee should also be heard in this, as I consider, great case. If I consulted my own wishes only, I would not say anything, but inasmuch as I was a member of the committee I feel that it is a duty I owe to the House to lay before it the reasons which have governed me in reaching the conclusion at which we have arrived.

I approached this case, Mr. Speaker, absolutely without bias and without previous investigation. I was satisfied on the second day of our meeting here, on the statement and arguments made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], that this House had the right to send this matter to a committee for investigation, and I voted that that should be done. When, greatly to my surprise, I had been made a member of that committee, I again approached this matter with the same complete absence of bias and previous investigation, and I determined to ascertain, along with the other members of that committee, the actual facts as they should be established by the evidence, without reference to popular prejudice or clamor, and then upon these facts, without reference to that prejudice and clamor, to determine what right and duty of action devolved upon us.

The investigation of that committee was full and complete. Its discussions were long and searching, but I am obliged to say here that the methods of its discussion were somewhat different from those indulged in on this floor. We heard nothing there about constitutional sewing circles, clearly implying that the members of the majority belong to such an august body. We heard nothing there of sarcastic and ad captandum references to distinguished men from Ohio. We heard nothing there of these brilliant and taking, but, I must confess, somewhat irrelevant, allusions to trusts and octopuses. I heard all that was said; there was not an hour of the investigation of that committee at which I was not present.

Now, sir, I think that the best method I can pursue here is to follow before this House the same line which I followed in the committee. And first I desire as briefly as I can, and as clearly as I can, to state the facts which were established. I do not believe there was any difference as to these.

We found upon the statute book of the United States a law, passed in 1862, making the act of polygamous marriage, but not the practice of polygamous living, unlawful. We found that it had been contended that that law was unconstitutional as abridging the right of religious belief and practice, but that the Supreme Court of the United States had fully sustained it.

We found another law of the United States, known as the Edmunds law, passed in 1882, making polygamy and the practice of polygamous living unlawful. It disqualified any polygamist—that is, any person in that status—in any Territory under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States from holding any office of public trust, honor, or emolument under the United States. We found this law—this provision, at least—still in force. We found that notwithstanding this law polygamy and polygamous practices had still continued in the Territory of Utah, and in consequence thereof Congress had for a long time refused to admit the people of that Territory into the Union, although in every other respect fulfilling the requirements of statehood.

We found that in order to put an end to the violations of the law and to remove the obstacles to statehood the head of the Mormon Church had in 1890 issued a manifesto, in effect, forbidding polygamous marriages, which, according to his own construction, included the practice of polygamous living. We found that some years after that manifesto the people of Utah again sought statehood, and represented to Congress, through those who spoke for them, that polygamy, polygamous marriage ceremonies, and polygamous living, had ceased in Utah, that polygamy in all that the term implies was dead in that Territory, and pledged themselves that if the Territory was admitted to the Union as a State it should be kept dead.

We found that these representations and pledges having been made, Congress passed an act enabling the people of that Territory to frame a constitution with a view to their admission into the Union. We found that so abhorrent was polygamy, so utterly subversive of organized society and good government in the eyes of the Representatives of the people of the United States, that they placed in that enabling act a requirement the like of which has never been placed in any other enabling act, except as to slavery, or where the Representatives of the people thought that certain requirements were necessary against those whom they thought had been guilty of treason. That requirement was that the people of Utah should ingraft upon their constitution an ordinance, irrevocable except by the consent of the United States, containing a proviso that polygamous marriages, in all that the term implies, should be forever prohibited. We found that that ordinance was adopted, and with a constitution containing it the State had been admitted. We found that the State of Utah had passed laws against polygamy, making it a crime.

We found that this man—and now I ask the close attention of the House—we found that this man who is now seeking admission to this body had lived in Utah from boyhood; that about 1885, three years, mark you, after the passage of the Edmunds law, in violation and defiance of that law, he married his first plural wife; that he was prosecuted and convicted under the law and served a term in the penitentiary for unlawful cohabitation with this woman; that notwithstanding that conviction and punishment he afterwards, and ever since has, continued openly and notoriously to live in the relation of husband and wife with her and his first lawful wife; that later, we could not tell when, but not until the year 1897, after the admission of the State, holding her out as such, he took a second plural wife; and that he has ever since lived in the relation of husband and wife with all three of these women.

The head of the Mormon Church enjoined the keeping of the law. The chief officials of that church represented to the President that that injunction was being complied with, and pledged themselves and their people to obey and keep the laws. Proclamations of amnesty and pardon were issued by two Presidents. Although a Mormon, he refused to heed this injunction or to keep these pledges, and while others brought themselves within the amnesty proclamations, he never did. The status of polygamy which he assumed in violation of the law, which disqualified him for any office or place under the United States, he has never relinquished or abandoned.

He was a polygamist in all that the term implies in the Territory before the manifesto and afterwards, before the proclamation of amnesty and afterwards, before the people of the Territory made application for statehood, while that application was being made, after it was granted by the passage of the enabling act, while the constitution of the State was being framed, after it was completed. He was a polygamist when the State was admitted. He is a polygamist now. When he shall come to the bar of this House and hold up his hand in front of the Speaker, he will then be a polygamist, living in the status of polygamy. And all these facts were well known to the people of Utah when they elected him.

These are the facts of the case. Having found that these were the facts, the next question was what did these facts justify us in recommending to the House. The question was what did these facts justify the House in doing. There was one thing upon which all were agreed, if I may use the expression of one of the minority in the deliberations in that committee, and that was that we should part company with Mr. Roberts. Those were the exact words. The division arose on the question as to how we should do this, keep him out or turn him in and then put him out; exclude him, or swear him in and then expel him. You have now heard the views of most of the members of the committee. I shall as briefly as possible give mine.

I do not hold that if this man were in, he could not on just and constitutional grounds be turned out or expelled. I agree with the majority that the power of expulsion should only be exercised for some offense relating to the duty and trust of the member as such. And I wish to say that in the speech of five minutes which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has delivered he summarized completely my exact view of this case. I agree that the power of expulsion should only be exercised for some offense relating to the duty and trust of the member as such, and I have not seen or heard of a precedent to the contrary.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] insists that the right of expulsion can be exercised for any cause, according to the arbitrary discretion of the House. He read the words of Judge Shaw in the case of Hiss vs. Bartlett—wherein the judge says, in effect, that, the right of expulsion existing and the legislative body having exercised the right, the court can not inquire into the cause of it—to sustain his position that we could expel for any cause, however arbitrary. By the same course of reasoning I might show that the right of exclusion can be exercised for any cause; for the right of exclusion does exist, and the legislative body having exercised the right, no court can inquire into the cause of it. Ergo, to use the method of reasoning of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], the right to exclude for any cause exists.

Now, the right to exclude and the right to expel both exist, but in my view can not be constitutionally exercised, either of them, for any cause—that is, not under our oaths. We can do anything, possibly, in regard to excluding or expelling members, and our action will be final and unreviewable, but I am speaking of action under the sanction of our oaths. In my opinion, and I think it is sustained by precedent and authority, prior to admission the right to exclude can be exercised for anything which, in the judgment of the House, is a reasonable and necessary disqualification. That is the proposition—for anything which, in the judgment of the House, is a reasonable and necessary disqualification existing at that time. The right to expel can be exercised, after admission, for some offense committed by the member while a member in full fellowship, touching his duty and trust as a member, which, in the judgment of the House, renders him unfit to remain in this body.

If Mr. Roberts had been admitted, I would vote to expel him, because, in my judgment, his present status—that of a polygamist—touches his duty and trust as a member and makes him unfit to be a member. If he is admitted to-day, I shall then vote to expel him, if a resolution to that effect is offered, for the same reason. But it is my view of this case, and my contention, that standing, as he does here, disqualified at the bar of this House, and we having full knowledge of it, we have the right to exclude; and the right existing, it ought, under the duty of the members of the House, to be exercised.

